Abandonment of claim. See CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, O. II, R. 2 325

——— of land—Proprietor giving up holding and leaving village, effect of—Shamilat, share in, abandonment of.

The fact of a person giving up the whole of his holding and quitting the village for good shows that he has abandoned all the rights he had in the village, including rights in the shamilat, and on such abandonment his share in the shamilat passes into the possession of the co-sharers, and he and his descendants lose their right to it. P MIRZA v. KAHAN SINGH, 96 P. In a suit for ejectment, the plaintiff's case was that the defendant had been put in possession for certain purposes by leave and license. The defendant denied the license and set up an adverse title; but in appeal to the High Court it was urged on his behalf that it was not proved that the license was ever granted or revoked:

Held, that the plaintiff having based his case upon the license, from the moment the defendant repudiated the license and set up adverse possession, it was no longer possible for him to rely upon the license or to deny its revocation, and that his position was that of a trespasser without any defence unless he established his title by adverse possession.

On the defendant's plea of adverse possession the lower Appellate Court, holding that the onus lay on the plaintiff to prove not only his title but also his possession within twelve years of the suit, dismissed the suit. In appeal to the High Court:

Held, that the decision of the lower Appellate Court was erroneous in law, which was that the onus of establishing a title to property by reason of possession for a certain stipulated period lay on the person asserting such possession. A JAI CHAND v. GIRWAR SINGH, 7 A. L. J. 814 366

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 4 (2), 19, 58—Grove held on yearly rent—Tenancy, whether established—Ejectment—Jurisdiction of Revenue Courts.

B., the grantee of some land, planted a grove thereon; after his death D. was admitted as a tenant on payment of a yearly rent. He continued to pay this rent from 1899 till 1910 when the present defendant sued in the Revenue Court and obtained a decree for his ejectment, the Board of Revenue holding that, though the grove in question was not "land" within the meaning of the Tenancy Act, a decree for ejectment could be given on the ground that D came in after the death of the original grantee, not as his heir and not under the same contract as would bind him and the original grantee, but simply as a tenant paying rent from year to year. D. thereupon brought the present suit to obtain a declaration that the decree of the Board of Revenue was illegal being one which the Revenue Courts had no jurisdiction to pass:

Held, that a grove-holder such as D. was a non-occupancy tenant and the Revenue Courts had the power to eject him, and that the decision of the Board of Revenue was in no way illegal. A RAMESHAR SINGH v. MADHO LAL, 17 A. L. J. 971 191

The defendants obtained a lease of certain land in 1876 from the Government, and in the same year the land was submerged in the river and re-appeared in 1905. During the period of submersion the defendants did not pay any rent, but when that land re-appeared, they took possession of it as reformation in situ of land which they held under the lease and which had been submerged in the river. (2) that, in the circumstances of the case, it was difficult to hold that the rights of the defendants were subsisting at the time when the land re-appeared:

(3) that the Government, as owner of the khas mahal, was entitled to the land, and the defendants, professing to hold it as tenants under the Government and in assertion of the same right in which they held under the lease before the submergence of the land, were entitled to set up the rights of the Government. C AMINADDI v. It was contended that the appeal had abated in its entirety, while for the appellants it was urged that the appeal had abated only with respect to the share of deceased decree-holder:

——— Party denying contract, remedy of—Procedure —Injunction, interlocutory, when can be granted.

Where a dispute is referred to arbitration under a clause contained in a commercial contract, and one or other of the parties to that contract seeks to impeach it upon equitable grounds, such as fraud, mistake or surprise, and seeks either to have it set aside or to have it rectified, in such a case the Court will, and should, restrain the arbitration proceedings until the question of the contract out of which they arise has been determined by the Court.

Where, however, a party denies the contract altogether, his course is to let the arbitrators do what they like, to wait till there is a question of the award being enforced, and the moment he gets notice that the award is going to be filed or has been filed to object to it. It may be prudent in such a case to inform the arbitrators of the objection to their jurisdiction and that, if the award is filed without due notice to the objecting party, such as the law requires, and if, as the result of that, execution is levied, then the arbitrators may make themselves liable in damages, if the party is successful when he moves the Court to take the award off the file.

Where the proceedings will be a nullity and futile, although vexatious, the Court will not grant an interlocutory injunction. C SARDARMULL JESSRAJ v. AGAR CHAND MAHATA & Co, 23 C. W. N. 811 588

D. and Co, on 11th May, refused to meet the demand, claimed arbitration, appointed an arbitrator and called on K. to appoint his arbitrator within 7 days. K. made no reply and L. D. and Co. appointed a second arbitrator on behalf of K, and on 21st May informed K. On 23rd May K. repudiated the arbitration and filed a suit in the Court of the Sub-Judge at Multan. L. D. and Co. proceeded to arbitration in Karachi and on 7th June an award was made and L. D. and Co. made an application for the award to be filed under the Arbitration Act On 4th August the Sub-Judge stayed the suit. It was contended that the case was not one to which the provisions of the Arbitration Act applied, that the award was invalid by reason of a concurrent suit in the Court of the Sub-Judge of Multan, the arbitrators having no jurisdiction to proceed after the suit was filed; that the stay order made by the Sub-Judge of Multan was incompetent as no such order could be made after a reference to arbitration and the order did not validate the arbitration proceedings, and that such order could only be made by a District Court:

Held, (1) that the Arbitration Act applied to the case and the fact that K. resided in an area where that Act was not applicable did not affect the matter, as his suit could have been instituted at Karachi where the firm on whom he made the demand carried on business and where that Act was applicable;

(2) that the mere fact of a suit being filed did not invalidate arbitration proceedings, and as the Court made a stay order, the effect of which was to decline jurisdiction in favour of the arbitrators, the award was a valid award and the Court had jurisdiction to allow it to be filed.

Per Pratt, J. C., (1) that the stay order made by the Sub-Judge was an order which he was competent to make either before or after reference and award;

(2) that upon a proper construction of section 4 (a), read with section 19, of the Arbitration Act, the Court which could make the stay order was the Court in which the suit was pending and that, therefore, the Sub-Judge was competent to make the order. S KHILLOORAM LOKURAM v. LOUIS DREYFUS & Co., 13 S. was entitled to a much larger sum than he had claimed and the District Judge, on appeal, awarded him Rs. 11,115-8-0 as damages. In appeal to the High Court the defendant objected that as the amount awarded exceeded the pecuniary limit of the appellate jurisdiction of the District Judge, which was limited to suits of the value of less than Rs 5,000, he had no jurisdiction to award a sum in excess of that amount:

Held, that as the valuation of the suit did not exceed Rs 5,000 the District Judge had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal and once having assumed jurisdiction, he legally had jurisdiction to make a decree for damages for a sum exceeding Rs. 5,000, his original jurisdiction being unlimited. Pat SATYA KINKAR SAHANA v. Accused was convicted under section 273 of the Bengal Municipal Act for having infringed clauses 1 and 2 of rule 13 of the Building Regulations of the Giridih Municipality made under section 241 of the Act. The evidence for the prosecution showed that the accused had only laid the foundation a few feet below the ground level, the brickwork of which had not even reached the plinth level, and there was no evidence to show what kind of building the accused was going to construct, and whether the main building when completed would contravene the clauses of the rule for infringing which he had been convicted, nor had the Municipality taken steps to enforce the submission of a plan:

Section 9 of Bengal Regulation VII of 1822 does not authorize the settlement authorities to enhance the rent payable by raiyats Consequently a landlord cannot claim rent at the rate recorded by the Settlement Officer as the fair rent payable by cultivators.

It is well settled that a Settlement Officer under Regulation VII of 1822 does not settle rent but records rates of rent existing in the village.

Where a suit for recovery of enhanced rent, instituted on the theory that the rent payable by the defendants had been lawfully enhanced as a result of proceedings under Regulation VII of 1822, is found to be unfounded and is successfully contested by the tenant defendants, the suit cannot be treated as one for enhancement of rent, inasmuch as to do so would be to entirely alter the scope of the suit. C JAGADINDRA NATH ROY v. MOHENDRA NATH, 23 C. Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 4, 105—Scope of Act—'Landlord', 'tenant', meanings of—S. 105, applicability of, to non-agricultural lands in Mufassil municipality.

In its general scope, the Bengal Tenancy Act is a aw for agricultural landlords and tenants.

'Tenant' and 'landlord' in section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act mean, respectively, a tenant and a landlord as defined in section 4 of the Act.

Section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to non-agricultural lands situated in a Mufassil municipality and occupied by tenants engaged in trade or other non-agricultural employment. C BIPRADAS PAL v. AZAM OSTAGAR, 46 C. 441 412

The plaintiff landlord applied under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for settlement of fair and equitable rent of a tenure created by a howla pattah in 1233 B. S, which expressly made the tenure hereditary but which contained no clause about fixity of rent:

Held, (1) that although the plaintiff had been realizing the same rent for a great many years, that did not by itself show that the rent was fixed, and that, therefore, he was entitled to have a fair and equitable rent assessed;

From the mere forbearance on the part of the landlord to claim enhancement of rent for a long period it does not follow as a matter of course that the original contract of tenancy was for payment of rent by the tenant at a fixed rate for ever.

Section 35 of the Bengal Tenancy Act relates to the amount of assessment and does not refer to the grounds upon which a Court has to determine whether enhancement should be allowed or not C GURU CHARAN NANDI v SARAB ALI, 30 C L J 9: 23 C. W. N. 1041 79

It was contended on behalf of the defendant that Rs 156-9-0 formed the rent, and that all the other items were illegal impositions not forming part of the rent:

Held, that, on a proper construction of the document, it was clear that the consideration for the use and occupation of the land was a certain amount of rent in cash and the price of certain other articles, and that the total of these items was to constitute one whole rent or jama which was payable by the defendant, and that there being no indication whatever that the price of the articles mentioned was in any case intended to be an imposition independent of the rent of the land which the defendant was leasing from the landlord, the amount claimed must be held to be part of the total rent payable for the land . at KUDRESHWARI PRASAD SINGH v DHANA MAHTO 119

The question of onus of proof only arises when there is a question of fact to be determined and there is no evidence one way or the other which will enable the Judge to come to a conclusion. In such a case, the Court has to decide whether the burden of proving that fact lies upon the plaintiff or the defendant. If the burden of proof lies upon the plaintiff, and the proof of that fact is essential to his case, then the plaintiff must fail because he has not discharged the burden which lay upon him. On the other hand, if the onus of proving that fact was upon the defendant, and its proof is essential to the defendant's success in the case, then the defendant must fail because he failed to discharge the burden which was upon him.

Any and every order passed in execution proceedings is not a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code; the decision whether an order is such a decree depends on its nature and contents.

A. applied for execution of his money decree by attachment and sale of certain land belonging to the judgment-debtor Notice was issued to the Collector asking whether he desired to intervene under section 72 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Collector refused to intervene and the Court held that, under the circumstances, it was useless to send the record to the Collector and that the decree-holder should seek some other remedy for the realization of the decretal money. The District Judge dismissed an appeal from this order holding that it was not open to a Civil Court to take any further action. The decree-holder appealed to the High Court:

Held, (1) that the question whether the appellant was entitled to have the provisions of section 72 of the Civil Procedure Code carried out for his benefit was one relating to the execution of the decree and within section 47 of the Code, and the order was a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code:

(2) that the refusal of the Collector to take action was wrong and the executing Court erred in accepting the position taken up by the Collector:

(3) that as the land could not be sold in execution, it was open to the Court to grant something less than a sale and to act under section 72, Civil Procedure Code.

Although section 51, Civil Procedure Code, provides that the Court shall act on the application of the decree-holder, yet an application may be inferred from an action of the Court. L RAM RATTAN v. DATAR KAUR 356

——— s. 11, O. XLI, r. 27—Appeal, second, whether trial—Res judicata, doctrine of, applicability of, to second appeals—Admission of fresh evidence—Copy of judgment of High Court, admissibility of.

There is no objection on grounds of principle or convenience to the admission in second appeal of a document, such as the judgment of a High Court, which could not be produced earlier because it was not in existence, and which requires no further evidence to explain it. No general rule, however, can be laid down and each case must be dealt with with reference to its own merits, and the existence of the sufficient cause referred to in Order XLI, rule 27, of the Civil Procedure Code.

Section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code is not confined in its application to suits and first appeals. Its provisions apply equally to a second appeal, the hearing of which is a trial within the meaning of that section. M GADDAM PARAMASIVUDU v. MULAKALA SUBBANNA, (1919) M W N. 45 625

Where the defendant to a suit for the recovery of a sum of money sets up a defence of non-liability until certain goods deposited by him with the plaintiff as security are returned to him, and his defence is accepted, he is not precluded from instituting a suit to recover the goods, or the price thereof. ——— s. 11—Res judicata—Dismissal of suit—Finding in favour of plaintiff, whether res judicata —'Matter substantially in issue,' 'final decision,' meanings of—Res judicata between co-defendants.

A decision on a question in an appealable suit, when the decree is in favour of the party against whom that decision is given, is not a final decision within the meaning of section 11, Civil Procedure Code.

To constitute a finding on an issue res judicata in a later suit between the parties it is necessary, under section 11, Civil Procedure Code, that the matter should have been directly and substantially in issue between them and should also have been heard and finally decided. Where a finding has been arrived at on a matter which is not necessary for the disposal of the suit and it is not made the basis of the decree which is given in spite of it, that matter cannot be said to have been substantially in issue between the parties, it can only be said to have been incidentally in issue. Such findings are more in the nature of obiter dicta than of res judicata. Nor can the question be said to have been finally decided by such a finding

Where a decree is given to a party in spite of a finding against him, that finding is not res judicata in subsequent litigation.

For a matter to be in issue under section 11, Civil Procedure Code, it is not necessary that an express issue should be framed about it. It is enough if a decision about it is necessary for the decree.

As between co-defendants there must be an active controversy inter se before a finding can be treated as res judicata M KELU NAMBIAR, v CHATHU NAMBIAR, 25 M. L T 6; (1919) M. W N. 34; 9 L W. 84 258

It cannot be laid down as a uniform rule of law that where a plaintiff's suit is dismissed in spite of findings against the defendant, such findings are not res judicata They will be res judicata where they are clear and where the intention of the Court was to give a definite decision on matters in issue not inconsistent with the decree or with any other finding.

Under section 11, Civil Procedure Code, it is not necessary that in order to operate as res judicata a finding or decision should be engrafted in the decree.

Where costs are disallowed to a successful defendant owing to adverse findings against him and notwithstanding the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit, such findings are res judicata.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The decision of the Privy Council reported as Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer, 11 C. 301; 12 I. A 23; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 602; 9 Ind. Jur. 202; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. finding can never be res judicata in subsequent proceedings. But it will be going far beyond their Lordships' intentions to say that no finding against a defendant can ever be res judicata under any circumstances if the plaintiff's suit is ultimately dismissed notwithstanding that finding.

In cases where a plaintiff is non-suited on the ground of limitation, res judicata, misjoinder, insufficient Court-fee on the plaint, jurisdiction or a like technical and preliminary ground and yet the Court proceeds to give a finding on the merits against the defendant to save a remand by the Appellate Court, such finding will not be res judicata if, on appeal, the Appellate Court does not itself think it necessary to give its decision on the merits or if, in case there is no appeal, it is evident that the first Court did not intend its findings to be final.

The doctrine of res judicata should not be unduly conditioned and qualified by all sorts of ingenious attempts at evasion, where there has been in fact a fair contest on a question in dispute between the parties and the Court intended to give and has given a final decision on that question M RAMA KRISHNA NAIDU v. KRISHNASAMI NAIDU, (1919) M. A plaintiff is not entitled to set up a false case to the relief which he claims and when he has failed, to plead a fresh case. If he be in doubt as to which case is true, he should set out the two cases in the alternative, each case being one which ought to be made a ground of attack, so as to afford ground for a final decision upon the subject in dispute.

Where the plaintiff filed a suit for redemption as karnavan of a tarwad, and on its dismissal for want of proof of the title set up, brought the present suit for the same relief as successor of the tarwad which had become extinct:

The dismissal of a suit for possession of property wherein the plaintiff claims to be the defendant's landlord, does not bar a subsequent suit by the plaintiff against the same party for possession as the reversionary heir of the last male owner, either under section 11 or under Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, as the title put forward in the first suit based on the contractual relationship of landlord and tenant and the title put forward in the second suit as one of the heirs of the last male owner constitute different causes of action.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—One of the considerations to be kept in mind when considering the question what ground of attack ought to have been advanced in the first suit is whether under Order II, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, it was 'practicable' to have framed the first suit by alleging the facts put forward in the second suit without the evidence respectively adduceable on the two sets of facts becoming mutually destructive. M MANGALATHAMMAL v. VEERAPPA GOUNDAN, (1919) M. The power to transfer cases under section 24, Civil Procedure Code can be delegated by the District Judge to a Subordinate Judge, but when so delegated it must be exercised in accordance with law. A Senior Subordinate Judge cannot transfer a case from his own Court to that of the Junior Subordinate Judge as the Court of the latter is not subordinate to him.

Plaintiff and defendant A held a holding jointly. Defendant B, the landlord of the holding, obtained a rent-decree against plaintiff and defendant A and in execution of that decree against the latter alone brought the entire holding to sale. Defendant C purchased the holding at the sale. Plaintiff thereupon brought a suit to have the sale set aside. His plaint was treated as an application under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and the sale was set aside. Defendant C appealed, contending that plaintiff had no right to make an application under section 47 of the Code, as he was not a party to the execution proceedings, and that his remedy was to apply either under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act or under Order XXI, rule 90 of the Civil Procedure Code, to set aside the sale.

Held, that section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code does not require that a person making an application thereunder should be a party to the execution proceedings, but requires that he must be a party to the suit in which the decree is passed, and as plaintiff was a party to the suit he was competent to make the application.

Section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and Order XXI, rule 90 of the Civil Procedure Code, are of limited scope and application, and an application which raises questions as to the execution of a decree, clearly beyond their scope ought to be dealt with under section 47 of the Code Pat ABDUL RAHIM v. GUJESHAR MAHTO 514

Held, that *J. A person, who is discharged from a mortgage suit because he pleads a paramount title, is not a party to the mortgage suit within the meaning of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and a separate suit by such a person or his transferee is not barred under that section.

Every interest created by a mortgagee sought to be redeemed puisne to his own is an interest which in a redemption suit should be represented before the Court in order to enable it effectively to give relief between the parties to the mortgage-deed. Thus a tenant introduced by the mortgagee upon the mortgaged land subsequent to his mortgage is a necessary party to a suit for redemption of the mortgage. Even if he is not a necessary party, the joinder of such tenant as a party to the suit would not be a sufficient cause for dismissal of the suit on the ground of misjoinder of parties: his joinder in the suit would amount merely to an irregularity not prejudicing the trial of the merits of the case, within the ambit of section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Where a Court dismisses an appeal, of the hearing of which the appellant has no notice whatever, the Court, though in ignorance of the true facts, must be held to have acted with material irregularity and in such a way as to induce a miscarriage of justice, and the High Court would be justified in using

——— s. 115, O. XLI, rr. 18, 19—Appeal—Non-payment of process-fees—Appellate Court, duty of—Order dismissing appeal for non-payment of process-fees, whether appealable—Revision.

No appeal lies against an order passed under Order XLI, rule 18, of the Civil Procedure Code.

In order to be able to avail itself of the provisions of Order XLI, rule 18, of the Civil Procedure Code, it is the duty of the Appellate Court to fix a date by which the process-fees are to be paid.

The appellant filed an appeal in the Court of the District Judge and was ordered, at the time the date of the hearing was fixed, to pay the amount of the process-fee, which not having been paid even on the date of the hearing, the appeal was dismissed. He appealed to the High Court:

Held, (1) that no appeal lay;

(2) that inasmuch as the appellant had not pleaded that the non-payment was due to the fact that he had not been directed to pay by any fixed date, this was not a fit case for the exercise of the discretionary powers of revision. L ATTAR SINGH v. KARM CHAND 179

Where, upon the dismissal of an application to withdraw an application for leave to sue as a pauper, the applicant declines to proceed, and his application is, in consequence, dismissed, such dismissal operates to bar a subsequent application for leave to sue as a pauper, though it is open to the applicant to file a suit in the usual way on payment of fees.

An application for leave to sue as a pauper is not a plaint, and it only reaches the stage of a plaint when it is granted. Where, therefore, a Court, regarding such application as a plaint, directs it to be returned for presentation to the proper Court, it acts without jurisdiction, and, although such an order is not appealable, the High Court will, in the exercise of its powers of revision, interfere and set the order aside. A NUR MUHAMMAD v. ——— ss. 115, Sch. A consent given by the parties to a suit to abide by the decision of a Court is not such a reference to arbitration as is contemplated by the provisions of Schedule II to the Civil Procedure Code.

Where a Court itself acts as arbitrator on a question of fact and gives an award, there is no appeal against its decision, not because the provisions of Schedule II to the Civil Procedure Code apply to the award made by the Court, but because a party cannot go back on his consent to abide by the decision of an arbitrator after the award is given

A judgment on an award, if it is pronounced in contravention of the provisions of Schedule II, paragraph 16, clause (1), does not fall under paragraph 16 (2) and, consequently, there is no prohibition of an appeal from such a judgment.

Where, therefore, a Court, which is asked to arbitrate, pronounces an award on a mere local inspection and on no legal evidence and without pronouncing on the evidence already adduced and without giving time to the parties to prefer their objections to it, the award is illegal and an appeal lies against it. Even if no appeal were competent in such a case, the High Court would have power to interfere in revision on the ground of material irregularity.

An award by a Court, which is appointed as arbitrator by some only of the parties, will bind those who join in the reference, but in respect of those who do not, the Court should give its decision on the materials placed before it as a Court. It is illegal for a Court to accept the position of arbitrator when all the parties interested do not join in consenting to such appointment.

Where an Appellate Court remands a case for re-trial on the appeal of those defendants who did not join in a reference to arbitration on the ground that the award was not binding on them, the whole case is re-opened even in respect of those parties who did not appeal. M CHENGALRAYA CHETTY v. An order dismissing such an application does not give rise to any question of jurisdiction and is not open to interference by the High Court on revision.

The fact that a judgment-debtor has parted with his interest to a third party in property attached and sold in execution of a decree is no bar to his making an application under Order XXI, rule 89 of the Civil Procedure Code, to have the sale set aside.

A purchaser by means of a private deed of the property of a judgment-debtor attached and sold in execution of decree has no locus standi to make an application under Order XXI, rule 89 of the Civil Procedure Code.

When a deposit is made under rule 89 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, it is the duty of the Court to proceed to set aside the sale.

Where a Court declines to accept the deposit from the judgment-debtor, its action amounts to a refusal to exercise jurisdiction and the High Court can interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. Pat LACHMI NARAIN v. KALI PROSONNO 344

Where a Court fails to apply its mind to the question of limitation and arbitrarily grants an application for the restoration of a suit long after the period of limitation has expired, it acts without jurisdiction and its order is liable to be set aside by the High Court acting under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

In a suit before a Munsif, the plaintiff and the Pleader for the defendant appeared on the date fixed for the hearing, the plaintiff asked for an adjournment on the ground that his witnesses were not present: the defendant's Pleader stated that his witnesses, too, had not come. The Munsif refused the adjournment and dismissed the suit for want of prosecution. Later in the day the plaintiff with his Pleader appeared before the Munsif and called his attention to the fact that the burden of proof had been laid on the defendant. The Munsif, thereupon, treating the application as one for setting aside an ex parte decree, in the presence of the Pleader for the defendant set aside his previous order and granted the adjournment which he had previously refused. On the adjourned date, the defendant did not appear, and an ex parte decree was passed against him. On an application for revision to the High Court:

Held, that the Munsif had not only acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction with material irregularity but had acted without jurisdiction in his attempt to correct his first erroneous order, and that neither of his orders nor the ex parte decree could be upheld. A ABDUL AZIZ v. SHEKHAR CHAND, 17 A. ——— s. 115—Revision—'Illegality' or 'irregularity', what is—Trial of wrong issue or misplacement of onus, whether justifies interference—Failure of justice for want of sufficient evidence.

In interfering with a decision of a lower Court under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, the High Court is not concerned with any error in the decision on matters of law or fact. It must be shown that there is a question of jurisdiction within the meaning of clauses (a) and (b) of section 115 or that there has been an act of actual illegality or irregularity in procedure affecting the merits.

The words "illegality" or "irregularity" in section 115, clause (c), of the Civil Procedure Code refer to matters of procedure only.

The plaintiff instituted a suit in the Court of Small Causes at Calcutta and obtained a decree. Against that decree an application under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, was made to the Original Side of the High Court. The grounds for making the application were (1) that a wrong issue was tried, (2) that the onus was wrongly placed upon the defendants, and (3) that there was no evidence to support the judgment of the Small Cause Court:

Held, (1) that the trial of a wrong issue amounted only to an error in law and did not amount to any illegality or irregularity in procedure

(2) that the fact that the onus was wrongly placed did not entitle the High Court to interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code;

(3) (Per Woodroffe, J.) that to justify interference for want of evidence it must be shown that there was absolutely no evidence at all. C HARAN CHANDRA CHATTERJEE v. CORPORATION OF THE ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE, 23 C. W. N. 759 767

——— s. 145, O. XXI, r. 43—Attachment of moveables—Delivery to surety for safe custody—Execution proceedings against surety, maintainability of.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J. (Spencer, J., contra).—Section 145 (b), Civil Procedure Code, refers to restitution of property "taken in execution," that is, taken possession of by a party in execution in accordance with the terms of the decree or order in his favour, and not to properties taken possession of by the Court through attachment in execution of a decree. A decree-holder cannot execute his decree against a person who has become surety under Order XXI, rule 43, in respect of properties taken possession of by the Court Amin. It is only a surety who comes under section 145 of the Code that can be proceeded against in execution as if he were a party to the decree.

Per Spencer, J.—The Court has inherent power to assign a bond executed in its favour for the purpose of a suit being brought to enforce its terms.

The word 'restitution' in section 145 (b) of the Civil Procedure Code must be read in the wide and general sense of restoration or making good that which is deficient, and a Court can, under that section, proceed in execution against a surety who has failed to perform his conditional undertaking to produce the judgment-debtor's property when called upon to do so. M KONIMAREDDI SUBBAREDDI v. KOLLIPARA VEERAYYA TATE, 25 M. Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code as to stay of proceedings do not apply to cases under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, but, as that Act gives a right of appeal to the High Court, the Court has inherent jurisdiction as a Court of Appeal, where an appeal lies to it, to stay proceedings as ancillary to its powers as the appellate authority to reverse an order of an inferior Court. The jurisdiction, however, should be exercised sparingly and only in cases where it is manifest that justice demands such an exercise. Pat LAL NILMANI NATH SAHI v. BALDEO DAS BISTA, 4 P. L. Where the averments in a plaint are not sufficiently precise, it is open to the defendant to apply for particulars under Order VI, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code, and, if such application is not made, he cannot, in second appeal, be permitted to refer to the matter.

In all cases relating to money-lending transactions, the Court will relieve the debtor by reducing the rate of interest only when it is satisfied that the lender was in a position to dominate the Will of the borrower, and that the "bargain" was unconscionable within the meaning of section 16 of the Contract Act; but where neither of these elements is pleaded, it is not open to the Court to give relief to the defendnt on the ground of undue influence.

A member of a joint Mitakshara family is entitled to use the family funds in repelling a criminal charge made against him.

The karta of a joint family has undoubted power to alienate joint family property for a justifying family necessity, if the other members of the coparcenary assent to the transaction. An assent given by a son to a mortgage by his father subsequently to its completion is not, in any sense, a ratification of what was done by his father, but is presumptive proof of a justifying family necessity.

Where a Hindu father raised a loan agreeing to pay interest at 3 per cent. per month with quarterly rests, and the transaction was assented to by his son, and there was no evidence that his consent was not a free consent, or that he did not give his consent with knowledge of actual facts of a family necessity justifying the raising of a loan on such onerous terms:

Held, that the rate of interest was not a penal rate, and that the lender was entitled to recover interest at the rate agreed upon.

Rule 3 of Order XVII of the Civil Procedure Code is an enabling rule and not a mandatory one.

A mere order of dismissal based on default is not a proper or legal order under this rule. The Court should proceed with the disposal of the suit on the materials before it and, if the circumstances are such that it cannot decide the suit forthwith on the materials before it, it should not avail itself of the provisions of that rule.

Where, therefore, it appeared at the first hearing of a suit that certain defendants had not been served and the Court passed orders adjourning the case and directing issue of summons to all absent defendants on receipt of process-fees, or a proclamation by beat of drum at the expense of the plaintiff, but the plaintiff took no action whatever in respect of the order and on the date of hearing gave no reasons for his default and pleaded no extenuating circumstances but asked for forgiveness and indulgence and the Court dismissed the suit under Order XVII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code:

Certain attempts at sale proving abortive, the bailiff reported on 1st May 1916 that the sapurdar had left and the goods were in possession of the judgment-debtor who, however, presented a written statement denying that he was in possession. Owing to the non-attendance of parties, the execution proceedings were consigned to the record room on the 7th June 1916. A year later, the decree-holder made a fresh application for execution on the 27th July 1917 and a specific order was recorded that the goods were released and the application was again consigned to the record room In November 1917 the decree-holder applied for execution by the arrest of the judgment-debtor:

Held, (1) that the Court was not justified in

"striking off" the application for execution on the 7th June 1916, which should either have been dismissed or adjourned, as the Court was not legally competent to do anything else;

(2) that it must be held that the application was not dismissed and that the attachment continued to subsist;

(3) that the order of release must be regarded as one involving and implying the dismissal of the second application and that that application should be held as having been dismissed;

(4) that, consequently, the attachment ceased on the 27th July 1917 and the goods were thereafter at the disposal of the judgment debtor;

(5) that, in any event, the judgment-debtor was a party to the disappearance of the property and the decree-holder was entitled to execute the decree by the arrest of the judgment-debtor. L DIWAN CHAND v. BEDHA RAM-DEVI DIAL 294

Where an application for execution of a decree or order is re-presented after the required amendments have been made the amended application should, for purposes of limitation, be deemed to have been presented on the date on which it was first presented, and not on the date of re-presentation.

An application for time to amend an execution application and to put it in the form prescribed is not a 'step-in-aid' of execution within the meaning of Article 182 (5) of the Limitation Act, nor is an adjournment granted to convert an irregular application not placed on the file into a regular one a step-in-aid' of execution.

In order that a particular act may amount to a 'step-in-aid' of execution, execution must be pending before the Court which it can aid. M VALASUBRAMANIA PILLAI v CHIT COMPANY YELA NIDHI, LTD., 10 L. W. 222 765

Where a landlord holds a decree against his tenant for rent, and the latter holds a decree against his landlord for mesne profits, but there is a direction in the decree for rent that execution is not to issue until the amount due under the decree for mesne profits is ascertained, the intention is that the decrees should be set off against each other. It is not necessary, in such a case, that the decrees on both sides should be before the Court for execution as required by Order XXI, rule 18 of the Civil Procedure Code, in order that a set-off might be claimed. Pat HIRA LAL SINGH v. An attachment cannot be regarded as an alienation of the property attached. It may infringe the right of the judgment-debtor but does not give a cause of action to his reversioners.

Under customary law, a suit for a declaration at the instance of the reversioners does not lie when ancestral property has been merely attached in execution of a decree with a view to sale but has not been sold.

In a suit for a declaration that a certain house was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree against the plaintiffs' father, it appeared that the plaintiffs had filed objections under Order XXI, rule 58, Civil Procedure Code, claiming that they were in possession as owners. The claim having been disallowed, they filed the present declaratory suit, alleging that the land was ancestral; that they had built certain of the houses, that the debts contracted by their father were without consideration and necessity, and that the houses were exempt from attachment and sale by virtue of section 60 (1) c), Civil Procedure Code

Held, (1) that the plaintiffs' suit was undoubtedly in part one under Order XXI, rule 63 of the Civil Procedure Code, but that they were not, because of an order under Order XXI, rule 61 of the Code, incompetent to institute a suit for a declaration under the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act;

(2) that the house in suit not having been sold, the plaintiffs' suit was premature. L WARYAM SINGH v. NARAIN DAS 157

The property of a judgment-debtor was sold by auction on 20th March. On 20th April he applied to the sale officer to set aside the sale and offered to deposit the decretal amount and the penalty mentioned in rule 89 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code. The sale officer, not being competent to entertain the application, forwarded it on 22nd April to the Court which had ordered the sale. On 23rd April the judgment-debtor applied to the Court asking that the money might be received. The Court did not receive the money and ordered the matter to come before it on 30th April. The money was deposited on 1st May, but the Court refused to set aside the sale on the ground that the deposit had not been made within thirty days of the sale. This order was reversed by the Appellate Court and the High Court was moved in revision, it being contended that the Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to make the order it did as no deposit had been made within thirty days:

Held, that the actual delay in the deposit of the money was not due to any act on the part of the judgment-debtor, and that, although the deposit was actually made on 1st May, he had brought the money into Court on 20th April, and that the Appellate Court was, therefore, justified in setting aside the sale. A GAJADHAR DAS v. RAM SUMIRAN DUBE, 17 A. Petitioner, who held a permanent under-tenure in a taluq which was sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent under the provisions of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Tenancy Act, applied under Order XXI, rule 89, of the Civil Procedure Code to have the sale set aside:

Held, (1) that section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not exclude from the operation of section 310A of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, corresponding to Order XXI, rule 89, of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, a tenure or holding attached in execution of a rent-decree and that, therefore, Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code, was applicable to a sale held for arrears of rent in Eastern Bengal and Assam;

(2) that the petitioner, holding an under tenure in the taluq sold, had such interest therein as would entitle him to apply under Order XXI, rule 89, of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside the sale of the taluq in execution of a rent-decree.

The scope of Order XXI, rule 89, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, is not narrower than that of section 310A of Act XIV of 1882. C SARAT CHANDRA DAS v. MATI LAL CHUCKERBUTTY, 23 C. W. N. 597 237

Where on enquiry made by the lower Court it was ascertained that the value of the property sought to be sold in execution of a decree was Rs. 11,200 but in the sale proclamation the value was stated to be Rs. 6,000 and the property was sold for Rs 6,300:

Held, that the sale should be set aside, inasmuch as the decree-holder knowingly made a misstatement of the value in the sale proclamation which amounted to material irregularity, and thereby caused substantial injury to the judgment-debtor. C CARESH NATH GHOSE v. HARI CHARAN SHAHA 23

At a Court-auction there is no warranty, express or implied, that the judgment-debtor has a saleable interest.

Where it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold in execution of a decree against him, the auction-purchaser has, in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation, no right of action against the decree-holder, either under the Civil Procedure Code or apart from it, to recover the purchase-money paid by him L B SOOLAYMAN CASSIM SINGI v. S. ——— O. XXI, r. 93—Execution of decree—Sale—Warrant of title Purchase-money, whether can be recovered on eviction by third person—Consideration, which afterwards fails, maintainability of.

There is no implied warranty of title in an auction-sale under the Civil Procedure Code, either by the decree-holder or by the Court and, therefore, no action lies against the decree-holder for a return of purchase-money paid at a Court auction in execution of a money decree, when the purchaser is evicted by a third party who successfully establishes his title to the property in a regular suit.

Where the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor is sold and the conveyance effectually passes it, there can be no failure of consideration, for the consideration was the right, title and interest, which ex hypothesi passed, though it was valueless. The same argument applies when property is sold as property believed to belong to the judgment-debtor, where the sale, as in a Court auction, is by implication one with all risks and all defects. N DEWAJI v. AMRITA, 15 N. The plaintiff filed an application for bringing his representatives on to the record, for the appointment of a Commissioner to divide the properties into six shares, and for delivery of one such share to herself. The District Judge brought defendants Nos. 8 to 10 on to the record as 1st defendant's legal representatives, but treated the other prayers as prayers in execution and transferred the execution to the District Court at North Arcot:

Held, (1) that as the Cuddapah District Court had jurisdiction under the law to continue the further trial of the suit, which must be considered as pending in that Court till a final decree was passed, the order of transfer to the District Court of North Arcot was illegal;

(2) that the plaintiff's application was in substance not an application for execution, but an application in the suit to pass a final decree. M ALUR LAXSHMI NARASIMHA SASTRULU v. VENKATA NARASAMMA 614

The mother of a last male owner brought a suit to obtain a declaration that an adoption made to the latter was invalid. The defendant, who was a defendant in the previous suit, contended that the suit was barred under Order XXII, rule 9 of the Civil Procedure Code, by reason of the decree dismissing the previous suit and that it was also barred by time:

Held, (1) that it was not open to the defendant to contend that the previous decision was erroneous, and that the plaintiff's proper remedy was to continue the suit first filed;

(2) that the plaintiffs were entitled, under section 14 of the Limitation Act, to claim a deduction of the interval between the date of their applying to continue the previous suit and the date of the Court's order dismissing that suit. M ARUNACHALAM PILLAI v. VELLAYA PILLAI, 9 L. Order XXVI, rule 9, of the Civil Procedure Code gives no power to a Court to itself hold a local inspection. A Judge can only hold such inspection for the purpose of understanding the evidence and for no other purpose. He must decide the case on the evidence adduced before him, and, if he finds that complete justice cannot be done without a local investigation, he has power, under the rule above quoted, to appoint a commission for this purpose; the fact that the plaintiff has not applied for this to be done, does not relieve the Judge of the duty imposed upon him of having before him all the material available which is necessary for the determination of the point at issue between the parties.

During the pendency of the suit C died and the present plaintiff's name was substituted as a co-plaintiff with B, his uncle, as the next friend. Subsequently the parties agreed to refer the dispute to arbitration and applied to the Court for an order of reference, which was granted. The arbitrator gave his award, but the plaintiff being dissatisfied with it filed objections. Eventually a decree was passed in accordance with the award. Plaintiff then brought the present suit for a declaration that the decree was null and void and ineffectual against him. It appeared that the plaintiff had been well represented in the earlier suit and had by his conduct accepted the situation and did not impugn the reference to arbitration, but was contented to contest the award on the ground of the misconduct of the arbitrator:

Held, that as the plaintiff's next friend did not obtain an express sanction of the Court before referring the case to arbitration, the plaintiff's claim was maintainable, but that as he had expressly ratified and affirmed the reference, he was debarred from contesting it. L MUHAMMAD IBRAHIM v. ALLAH BAKHSH 327

But the Court cannot examine other witnesses for deciding the question of limitation or any question other than the pauperism of the applicant.

Where, therefore, a Court decided the question of limitation, not upon the allegations made in the plaint, nor upon the statements made by the applicant in his examination, but upon conclusions based upon an examination of the witnesses who were summoned for the purpose of proving the pauperism of the applicant, the High Court set aside the order as being made without jurisdiction C JOGENDRA NARAYAN RAY v. DURGA CHARAN GUHA, 46 C. 651 610

Certain articles of jewellery were pledged by the plaintiff with the defendant. In a suit to redeem the articles the defendant pleaded that, in consequence of a settlement between the parties, the plaintiff had abandoned his right to redeem and the articles in question belonged to the defendant, and that the latter had been dealing with them as his property having sold some, broken up others and raised money on some of them. On the application of the plaintiff the trial Court made an order requiring the defendant to produce in Court the articles in suit within one month. The defendant moved the High Court in revision, urging that the trial Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order in question, inasmuch as the articles were not in the custody or possession of the defendant at the time the application was made:

Held, that, although the articles were not in the custody or possession of the defendant, he nevertheless was in a position to redeem them and produce them in Court, and that consequently the trial Court had jurisdiction to make the order for their production under Order XXXIX, rule 7 (i) (a), of the Civil Procedure Code. C JITENDRA NATH CHATTERJEE v. ASOKE NATH MITTER, 30 C. The landlord of a holding sued the recorded tenants thereof for rent and obtained an ex parte decree in execution of which he brought the holding to sale, the purchaser being defendant No. 1 in whose favour the sale was confirmed. The plaintiffs instituted the present suit to set aside the sale, claiming to be private purchasers of a portion of the holding and alleging that defendant No. 2 was a private purchaser of the remainder. The trial Court decided all the material issues in favour of the plaintiff but dismissed the suit on the ground that it was not maintainable because the plaintiff had not applied under Order XXI, rule 90, of the Code of Civil Procedure to set aside the sale. The plaintiff appealed and the lower Appellate Court, disagreeing on the point of maintainability, set aside the whole decree and remanded the suit for trial, adding two new issues. The trial Court found that defendant No. 1 was benamidar for defendant No. 2 and decreed the suit, which decree was upheld on appeal. The defendant No. 1 appealed to the High Court and contended that the suit was not maintainable under Order XXI, rule 92 of the Code, and that the order of remand was not an order under Order XLI, rule 23, because the suit was not disposed of on a preliminary point, the trial Court having determined and recorded findings upon all the issues in the suit:

Held, that as the sole reason for dismissing the suit was that it was not maintainable, the suit was disposed of on a preliminary point and the fact that the Court decided the other issues in the suit made no difference, and that the defendant not having appealed from the order remanding the case, that order was now final.

It was also contended that the suit was barred by limitation under Article 2 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act, there being an admission in the plaint that the plaintiff came to know of the sale more than a year before instituting the suit:

Held, that as this plea was not taken in either of the Courts below and as the determination of the point required a finding of fact after taking additional evidence, it could not be entertained in second appeal.

It was urged on behalf of the respondent that the sale was a nullity, inasmuch as after the decree one of the two judgment-debtors had died, and the sale was held without the issue of any process to his heirs:

Held, that as the point was not taken at any stage of the suit and no opportunity had been given of showing that the surviving judgment-debtor was entitled to represent the heirs of the deceased, it was impossible, upon the facts as found, to say that the sale was a nullity. Pat BHADAI SAHU v. MANOWAR ALI 125

The parties to a suit agreed to refer the dispute to arbitration. After the arbitration, but before the award, the Junior Subordinate Judge, in whose Court the case was pending, took leave for 2 months on the 25th April 1916. No one was appointed in his place and on the 2nd May 1916, the Senior Subordinate Judge ordered that the case should be kept in his Court The award not having been filed within the time originally fixed, several extensions were granted. On the 10th October the case was re-transferred by the Senior Subordinate Judge to the Junior Subordinate Judge on his return from leave, and on the same date at the request of the parties further time was allowed. Time was again extended several times and eventually the award was filed on 9th January 1917, and a decree was passed in accordance with the award. The defendants applied for revision:

Held, (1) that the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge re-transferring the case to the Junior Subordinate Judge was ultra vires;

(2) but that the parties, having acquiesced in the jurisdiction of the Junior Subordinate Judge, after the case was re-transferred to him, could not subsequently object to it;

(3) that when once the Court became seised of the case, it had full power to extend the time for filing the award, even though the time originally fixed had previously expired;

(4) that, consequently, the award was a valid one and the Court was right in passing a decree in accordance therewith. L KISHEN LAL v. JAI LAL 352

A mortgage-bond provided that interest should be paid at 3 per cent. per month, and that the mortgage-money should be repaid on a specified date, and that in case of default in such payment interest would run at the rate of 6 per cent. per month. The mortgagee sued to recover the money by sale of the mortgaged property. The trial Court held that the stipulations as to interest were in the nature of a penalty and decreed the suit, allowing interest at 12 per cent. per annum On appeal the lower Appellate Court held that the stipulation to pay higher interest in default alone was in the nature of a penalty, but it found that there had been undue influence and, in consideration of this, dismissed the appeal. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, contending that the decision as to undue influence was wrong as no issue was framed as to this, and maintaining that the stipulation to pay interest at 6 per cent. per month was not in the nature of a penalty:

Held, (1) that, in order to establish undue influence, it must appear that there was something unconscionable either in the original dealing or in the subsequent stages of the transaction, and as nothing unconscionable had been made to appear in this case and there was no plea as to undue influence, the stipulated rate of interest could not be disallowed on the ground of undue influence;

No partner has a right, at least in the absence of a special agreement, to take any portion of the partnership property and to say that it is his exclusively either during the existence of the partnership or after it has become dissolved The share of a partner to which he is entitled is his proportion of the partnership assets that have been realised and converted into money after all the partnership debts and liabilities have been paid and discharged.

A partner cannot be allowed to take one item of the firm's accounts, divide it into equal shares according to the number of partnership shares, and ask to be given one share, without first having an account taken of the partnership liabilities and deducting the sum total of them from the aggregate assets of the firm.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, deposite made with Nattukottai Chetties on thavanai are deposits payable on demand and come within the definition of deposits under Article 60 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act If there is evidence, however, that the money is payable without demand, Article 57 or Article 115 would be applicable, according as it is payable at any time after it was lent or after a fixed period.

A partner is competent to give a valid discharge of a debt due to the partnership even after its dissolution.

The High Court is not a Court of Appeal for cases under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and it is only in very rare cases that it will interfere

Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, coupled with section 117 of the Code, gives very extensive powers to Magistrates and should be administered with scrupulous care, and materials ought not to be brought on to the record which are not legally admissible in evidence and which are liable, if on the record, to prejudice the accused.

Specific instances of crime in which the accused is suspected, are not good evidence and do not fall within the meaning of "general repute" under section 117, because suspicion cannot take the place of proof that a man has committed an offence Similarly, history sheets are not evidence, especially where the official who produces them is not himself responsible for all the entries thereon.

Where a Court disbelieves the evidence adduced by an accused person, it ought to record specific reasons for such disbelief: the mere fact that, assuming the accused is guilty, it was easy for the accused to get witnesses of fairly good status to give evidence on his behalf, is no ground for disbelieving the witnesses. A JABRUDDIN v. EMPEROR, 20 CR. A plaintiff in a civil case sought to enforce a right by means of a forged deed. The Court sanctioned his prosecution for an offence under section 209 of the Penal Code. He was tried and acquitted. An appeal was then made to the Sessions Judge who, purporting to act under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, sanctioned the prosecution of the petitioner in this case for an offence under section 466 of the Penal Code. An application to revise this order was made to the High Court, and it was contended that, inasmuch as the petitioner was not a party to the civil suit out of which the original prosecution arose, the order was bad in law as made without jurisdiction:

Held, that the Sessions Judge was entitled, under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to direct the prosecution of the petitioner for forgery, irrespective of the fact that he was not a party to the original proceedings.

It was further contended that the Sessions Judge had no power to order the prosecution for an offence under section 466 of the Penal Code, because that section is not specifically mentioned in section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code:

Held, that, inasmuch as section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code confers jurisdiction to grant sanction to prosecute under section 463 of the Penal Code, and as the latter section, in its comprehensive and general terms, covers an act of a particular kind of forgery which may constitute a separate offence under the specific enumeration of crimes provided for by the Penal Code, the Sessions Judge had power to make the order.

Lastly, it was contended that the Sessions Judge had no right to exercise the powers vested in him by section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, inasmuch as the matter out of which the prosecution arose did not come before him in the course of a judicial proceeding:

Held, that as there was an appeal to the Sessions Judge from the order discharging the original accused under section 209 of the Penal Code lawfully presented to a proper Court and that Court was of opinion that the petitioner should be prosecuted, the Sessions Judge did have before him a judicial proceeding in the course of which he became acquainted with the facts as to the petitioner's participation in the act of forgery, and that he did not exceed his powers in making the order in question Pat BACHU BEHARI LAL v. EMPEROR, 20 CR. An additional Sessions Judge is competent to grant sanction to prosecute in a matter arising out of a trial before a Magistrate having first class powers, inasmuch as an appeal would ordinarily lie from the Court of the latter to the Court of the former.

In dealing with an application for sanction to prosecute, the Court to which the application is made ought to proceed with caution and discernment, and be guided by two principles, namely, (1) whether there is a prima facie case against the person for whose prosecution sanction is asked, and (2) whether the real object of the applicant is not to satisfy his private ends or personal spite.

The mere acquittal of an accused person is not sufficient for sanctioning a prosecution under section 211 of the Penal Code, there must be something more; there must be a reasonable belief in the mind of the sanctioning Court that there was no foundation whatever for the criminal charge; in other words, there must be a belief that in instituting criminal proceedings the petitioner acted knowingly without belief in the truth of the allegations made by him or recklessly without caring whether the allegations were true or false, and the judgment of the trial Court ought to show that there was no foundation whatever for the criminal case against the persons who were acquitted. Pat KUSUM SAO v. JANAK LAL, (1919) PAT. 250; 4 P. Although the issue of a notice to the accused is not legally essential to validate a sanction granted under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, nevertheless in common moral propriety it is desirable, as a matter of practice and prudence and in common fairness, that a person who is sought to be prosecuted should have notice of the fact that an application has been made for his prosecution under the provisions of that section, and it is in accordance with the traditions of the administration of justice that such person should be permitted to show cause against the grant of sanction for his contemplated prosecution, but an omission to give such notice is not an illegality which would wholly vitiate an order granting sanction. Pat SUKHDEO MISSIR v. MONOOLAL SAHU, 20 CR L J. 616 280

Jwala Prasad, J.—Neither sub-section 7 of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code nor any of it clauses, (a), (b) or (c), applies to Courts of Small Causes. Under sub-section 6 of that section an application can be made both to the District Court and to the High Court for the purpose of revoking or granting a sanction given or refused by a Court of Small Causes. The Police enquiry contemplated by section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot take the place of such evidence as the complainant may desire to produce before an adjudication is made of his or her complaint. Such an enquiry can be ordered before evidence is recorded to enable the Magistrate to determine how far the complaint was prima facie well founded. When the Magistrate decides to record the evidence himself, he should complete the enquiry and determine upon the evidence adduced how far the complaint is borne out.

Accused instituted two suits against two different persons in two different Courts, one in the Court of the City Munsif and the other in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. Both suits were tried on the Small Cause side and dismissed. The Sub-Judge directed under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, the prosecution of the accused under section 209 of the Penal Code and of three other persons under section 193 of the same Code. The Magistrate taking cognizance of the case framed charges against the accused in respect of both the suits, and the accused entered upon his defence. Evidence was recorded for both prosecution and defence without any objection to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to take cognizance of the offences, or as to the validity of the procedure adopted in trying both charges at one and the same trial. After he was convicted, the accused appealed to the Sessions Judge protesting against the joinder of the two charges, and also against the action of the Magistrate in taking cognizance of the offence alleged to have been committed in respect of the suit filed in the Court of the City Munsif, urging that he had been taken by surprise at the course adopted by the Magistrate, as he believed he was on his trial for the offence in respect of the suit in the Court of the Sub-Judge, and was greatly prejudiced in his defence by this belief. The Sessions Judge declined to interfere and the accused moved the High Court in revision:

Held, that the case was covered by section 537 (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code, as the accused, who had every opportunity of doing so and who had full warning from the date on which the charge was framed of the fact that he was being put upon his trial in respect of both offences, had acquiesced in the view taken by the Magistrate and had never at any stage of the trial in that Court raised the question of the Court's jurisdiction in respect of the offence alleged to have been committed in the City Munsif's Court; that at most the Magistrate had committed an error, but the error had not in any way prejudiced the accused by the procedure adopted. A BABU RAM v. EMPEROR, 17 A. Accused, who were the Agents, Secretaries and Treasurers of a Company, were convicted upon charges of (1) cheating and criminal misappropriation in relation to the balance-sheet of the Company for 1912, inasmuch as in that sheet a profit was shown, which they had taken, whereas the Company had not earned a profit, and (2) wilfully making a false balance-sheet of the Company for 1913. The accused were tried jointly on five charges, four of which related to the balance-sheet of 1912 and one to the balance-sheet of 1913. In the trial Court it was objected on behalf of the accused that there could not be a joint trial of the charges relating to the two balance-sheets, but the objection was disallowed on the ground that the offences relating to these balance-sheets formed part of the same transaction. On appeal to the High Court:

Held, that the trial was illegal and the convictions could not be maintained. The different acts attributed to the accused in respect of the two balance-sheets did not form part of the same transaction within the meaning of sections 235 and 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the joinder of the charges was contrary to the provisions of the Code. B RAMNARAYAN AMARCHAND v. EMPEROR, 21 BOM L. Accused were charged with an offence under section 396 of the Penal Code and were tried by a Jury. The Jury acquitted them of the offence under section 396 of the Code but returned a verdict of guilty under section 395 of the Code:

Held, (1) that the offence with which the accused were charged being an offence which was not triable by Jury, the trial should not have been by Jury at all.

General rules as to the form a charge should take indicated.

Held, that the mode in which the case was placed before the Jury was defective and that the convictions of the accused in accordance with the verdict of the Jury and the sentences passed upon them should be set aside and the case re-tried by another Judge.

It is not desirable that a Judge should resort to the services of the Public Prosecutor for the purpose of delivering his charge to the Jury.

The accused were charged with certain offences under various sections of the Penal Code and the Cattle Trespass Act. The case was assigned to Mr. T., the Joint Magistrate, who, however, was transferred from the district before he was able to complete the case. The Sub-Divisional Officer transferred the case to his own file and heard the case de novo, disregarding all the evidence recorded by Mr. T. Before the Sub-Divisional Officer had concluded the case, Mr. T. was re-transferred to the district, whereupon the Sub-Divisional Officer transferred the case to Mr. T.'s file with a direction that Mr. T should take it up from where he had left it before being transferred. This was done, and resulted in the accused being convicted;

Held, that the trial was illegal and must be set aside, and the accused tried de novo: that the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer was ultra vires and without jurisdiction, because all that had taken place before Mr T, had been superseded, and formed no part of the record in the proceeding then actually pending and being prosecuted against the accused, and that, as a consequence, Mr. T had no authority or jurisdiction to act on the record of the proceedings which had been antecedently taken before him, the result being that the accused were gravely prejudiced in their trial. Pat DAROGA CHOWDHURY v EMPEROR, 20 CR. had been acquitted by the Sessions Judge and that until such acquittal was set aside, the Magistrate could not commit him again, on the record of the proceedings as they then stood, to take his trial for an offence under section 477A of the Penal Code. The Magistrate, however, expressed his intention of committing both accused to the Sessions. NK. then moved the Sessions Judge to set aside the Magistrate's order in so far as it affected his commitment. The Sessions udge referred the case to the High Court for directions as to the propriety of the Magistrate's order:

Held, that NK. could not, so long as his acquittal under section 420 of the Penal Code stood, be properly tried again, upon the record as it then stood, for an offence under section 477 and that if the Crown wished to proceed against him, they must do so in a proper manner and by a separate proceeding, and not upon the original record. Pat EMPEROR v. NAND KISHORE PRASAD, 20 CR. Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 151—Indecent or scandalous questions, when can be asked.

A long series of cases has established the guiding principles upon which Courts should invariably act in dealing with applications for transfer, These are—

(1) that it is expedient for the ends of justice to transfer a case from the file of one Magistrate to that of an another competent to try it, if, by reason of the words or conduct of the Magistrate before whom the case is pending, any party reasonably apprehends that there is bias against him in the mind of the Magistrate, though there may not be in fact actual bias;

(2) the transfer of a case should be ordered when there are circumstances which may reasonably lead the petitioner to believe that the Magistrate has to some extent prejudged the case against him.

An accused is entitled to ask the Court to consider his defence, whether true or false, and the Court acts illegally in shutting out questions which tend to establish this defence.

Indecent and scandalous questions may be put either to shake the credit of a witness or as relating to facts in issue, or to determine whether or not a fact in issue existed. If they are put merely to shake the credit of a witness, the Court has complete dominion over them and may forbid such questions, even though they may have some bearing on the question before the Court. But if they relate to facts in issue or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts in issue existed, the Court has no discretion to forbid such questions, though they may be indecent or scandalous

Where questions are put in cross-examination to some of the witnesses for the prosecution which have not been put to earlier witnesses, it is the weight to be attached to the case that is affected and not the admissibility of the questions, and it is no ground for disallowing them even though they are scandalous or indecent

Advocates have ample discretion in the conduct of the case of which they are in charge, and the Court cannot fetter their discretion by insisting that their case should be put to this witness or that

It is highly improper for persons in charge of a prosecution to threaten or intimidate either the accused persons or the Pleaders appearing for them The position of accused persons is at all times of grave anxiety and persons in charge of a prosecution should remember that nothing should be done by them which may have the effect of intimidating the defence or adding to its anxiety. Pat MAHAMMAD MIAN v. EMPEROR, 20 CR L J. 566 54

A conditional decree is one in which it is provided that the decree-holder will be entitled to the relief granted only on condition of his doing something.

In a suit for possession of certain property and for recovery of its rent, it appeared that a previous suit had been compromised on the condition that the defendant was to remain in possession for three years and pay rent and perform service, and that, on the defendant's failure to do so, the plaintiff would be entitled to take possession before the expiry of three years, otherwise he could obtain possession by execution of the decree On 15th March 1910, a decree was passed in accordance with the compromise and the defendant not having paid rent and having refused to vacate, the present suit was brought, it being alleged that the cause of action arose on the 16th March 1913, the date of the expiry of the three years:

Held, (1) that the decree of 1910 was not a conditional decree, but became absolute from the date on which it was passed;

(2) that the remedy of the plaintiff was by execution of the decree obtained by him and not by a suit based on that decree. L KANSHI RAM v. TAGRA 165

Accused, when defendant in a civil suit brought against him to recover a certain debt, produced a receipt purporting to have been signed by the plaintiff, showing that the debt had been discharged The plaintiff was examined as a witness in the suit and he deposed that the receipt was a forgery The prosecution of the accused was thereupon ordered, but before the trial came off the plaintiff died and his statement in the civil suit was admitted in evidence in the criminal case against the accused. The accused was convicted and the question in appeal before the High Court was, whether the statement of the deceased plaintiff was admissible in evidence and whether the Court was justified in believing that statement:

Held, that the statement had been rightly admitted; as the accused had an opportunity of cross-examining the deponent at the time the statement was made, and the proceedings were between the same parties within the meaning of the explanation to section 33 of the Evidence Act, and that if the Court was satisfied on a review of the entire evidence that the deponent had spoken the truth, his statement in the civil suit was sufficient to prove that the receipt was a forgery. A DEBI SINGH v. EMPEROR, 20 CR. ——— ss. 34, 160, scope of—Books of account, entries in, value of—'Sure' in s. 160, meaning of Section 34 of the Evidence Act only lays down that a plaintiff cannot obtain a decree by merely proving the existence of certain entries in his books of account, even though those books are shown to be kept in the regular course of business. He will have to show further by some independent evidence that the entries represent real and honest transactions and that the moneys were paid in accordance with those entries. No particular form or kind of evidence in addition to the entries is required. Any relevant facts which can be treated as evidence within the meaning of the Evidence Act would be sufficient corroboration of the evidence furnished in books of account, if true.

The expression 'sure' in section 160 of the Evidence Act, in the sentence "if he is sure that the facts were correctly recorded in the statement", does not mean that the degree of conviction postulated by it can be treated as equivalent to any on which the witness may choose to say that he is sure, whether or not it is too fantastic or illogical to commend itself to reasonable men. The meaning of the expression is that the witness must satisfy the Court, with reference to ordinary probabilities, of his right to be sure that the record relied on by him is correct. M YESUVADIYAN v. SUBBA NAICKER 704

Where a decree is sought to be set aside on the ground of fraud, it must be shown that the plaintiff was prevented from putting his case before the Court or that some trickery or deceit was practised in connection with the proceedings.

Where the plaintiff fails to establish the fraud alleged in his plaint, he cannot be allowed to adduce evidence to show that the claim decreed against him was otherwise wrongly decreed.

A Court's decision cannot be called in question by a mere allegation of fraud in the pleadings or evidence, when the Judge after giving full opportunity to the parties to produce their evidence has decided rightly or wrongly in favour of one set of facts.

When the parties have had the opportunity of putting their respective cases before the Court and the Court after weighing the evidence has come to a decision the rule of res judicata comes into operation, and subject to the law as to appeal and review the decision is final between the parties. Hindu Law—Adoption—Son given in adoption, whether acquires any rights in property of natural father—Execution of decree—Decree obtained by father—Adopted son, whether can execute decree after death of father.

A son given in adoption cannot, for any purpose, be regarded as having existed so as to acquire a vested interest in the property of his natural father Where, therefore, the natural father obtains a decree and dies before its execution, such son must be treated as non-existent for the purpose of executing the decree. B RAMCHANDRA v MANUBAI RAMDAS, 21 BOM. It is not correct to say that a conveyance by a Hindu father in consideration of antecedent debts can in no case be enforced during the father's lifetime.

Where there is a personal debt enforceable apart from a prior mortgage, there is no reason why it should not have the same effect as any other antecedent debt

Where it is found that the purpose for which a Hindu father agreed to effect an alienation of family property was one which would be binding on the sons and that a complete contract had been entered into by the father from which he could not legally withdraw, the liability of the sons cannot be affected by the fact that the father committed a breach of contract and that the vendee was compelled to resort to the Court to enforce its execution.

Where it is found that the bulk of the consideration for an alienation of family property by a Hindu father was for antecedent debt or valid necessity so that it would have been impossible to raise the required amount except by effecting the sale in dispute, the fact that the vendor was able to obtain from the purchaser something over and above the

Under the Hindu Law in order to constitute an antecedent debt binding on the sons, it is not necessary that the prior and the subsequent creditors should be different persons or that the father should be dead at the time the subsequent creditor claims his debt which the father incurred to satisfy the prior debt, but it is necessary that such debt should not have been secured by a mortgage of the joint family property and that the prior and the subsequent debts should not be contemporaneous in fact. O MUHAMMAD BAQAR ALI KHAN v. HAZARI LAL, 6 O. A Hindu died leaving a widow and a daughter born of a former wife and about Rs 25,000 The widow was a creditor to her husband's estate to the extent of Rs 473 for her stridhanam Shortly before her death, she made a Will deviding this debt to the plaintiff, who sued to recover the amount from the daughter who succeeded to the estate after the widow's death. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the widow having become possessed of assets whereby she could have paid off her debt, the debt became extinguished:

Held, (1) that the widow's possession of the assets did not amount to a payment of her stridhanam debt, there being no analogy between executors who are creditors to the estate paying their debts out of the estate, and a widow who is entitled to enjoy the whole of the income of the estate;

(2) that the widow's stridhanam not being at law a charge or incumbrance within the meaning of section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act, there was no merger because in the case of a limited owner the presumption was against merger. M CHIDAMBARAM PILLAI v. MEENAKSHIAMMAL 842

There is no presumption that in all cases where gifts are made to Hindu females the donors intend to give them only estates for life. No difference should be made between a male and a female, provided the words of gift are sufficiently clear to convey the property. Unless there is an expressed or implied qualification to the contrary, the donor must be deemed to have conveyed all that he was possessed of in the property granted. If the language of the instrument is capable of conferring an estate of inheritance, considerations regarding the sex of the donee should be discarded. Where, however, the language is ambiguous recourse can be had to ordinary notions of Hindus, as a rule of construction in finding out what the intention of the donor was.

The rule laid down by the Privy Council in Moulvie Mohamed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram, 2 I. A. 7; 22 W. R. 409: 14 B. L. R. 226 (P. C); 3 Sar. P. C. J. 405; 3 Suth P. C. Where a guardian of a minor appointed by Court executes a mortgage on behalf of the minor without obtaining any sanction from the Court which appointed him guardian, the mortgage is not binding on the minor, and the latter can be equitably held liable only if it is shown that the debt or any portion of it was actually applied for the benefit of the minor. C UPENDRA NATH BISWAS v. SHIB KUMARI DEBI, 23 C. The father or managing member of a Hindu family is not legally incapacitated from solely representing the family in a suit, by the fact that the transaction out of which the litigation arises is embodied in a deed in which a junior member of the undivided family had joined as obligee or obligor. The addition of the name of a junior member is sometimes made to avoid disputes in future but it does not make the document legally more valid than if it had been executed by the managing member alone. In the case of a mortgage executed by the managing member and a junior member of the family, the former is entitled to redeem in his own name. M SUBRAHMANYA IYER v. SIVA SUBRAHMANYA IYER, 19 L. ——— ——— Widow, position of—Partition, widow whether can enforce.

In a joint Hindu family, a widow has no right to claim a partition of the share which belonged to her husband, because by reason of survivorship that shar lapses or devolves on the remaining male members of the family and the widow is only entitled to maintenance. In a separate family the widow inherits the share of her husband and can, subject to any equities which may arise, claim a partition in the same way as any other co-sharer, though her interest is in certain respects of a limited nature.

A Hindu widow, however, who inherits a share in any property from her husband and succeeds in getting mutation of names effected in her favour, is for the time being a recorded co-sharer of that property, for she represents the estate as against the other co-sharers, though her interest is limited to one for life and she has no power of alienation except in case of necessity. She has the right to obtain a partition of the share recorded in her name, unless by reason of bad faith or other cause there is a bar on equitable grounds. O RAGHUBIR SINGH v. JANKI KUAR, 11 O. Apart from custom and from certain near relationships to the holder, the junior members of the family of a zemindar entitled to an impartible zemindari have no right to maintenance out of it.

There is no invariable custom by which any members of the family beyond the first generation from the last holder can claim maintenance as of right.

The payment of rent is clearly a legal necessity, but a sale of immoveable property for the purpose of discharging an obligation to pay rent is not necessarily justified on such grounds and unless it can be shown that there was no other ostensible means of satisfying a rent decree except by allowing the property to be sold at auction, it cannot be held that the sale of the property, as distinguished from the obligation to pay the rent decree, was justified by legal necessity

A widow executed a zarpeshgi lease of certain property and out of the consideration for the zarpeshgi left a sum in the hands of the zarpeshgidar to pay off a previous rent decree. A gift of family property by a Hindu widow for the benefit of her husband's soul is permissible and is just as valid and binding on the reversioners as if the gift had been made for purposes of legal necessity. But a gift for such a purpose must not amount to an exorbitant or excessive portion of the whole property.

Where in such a case the donor adduces evidence showing a prima facie case which would justify such a gift, it is for the objecting reversioner to prove that the property alienated was excessive and that, therefore, the gift was not justified. Pat GOPALJI SAH v. MANBIRTI KUER, (1919) PAT. 396 996

N., a separated Hindu, made a gift of the bulk of his property to K., his nephew, who had lived with him since boyhood and had been brought up and married by him, and who, subsequently to the gift, had assisted N. in his business and lived jointly with him. Before his death, N executed a Will bequeathing the remainder of his property to K. Upon N.'s death some distant collaterals of his brought the present suit against K. claiming all N.'s property K. in reply asserted the gift and the Will in his favour and also stated that he was the adopted son of N. At the trial the adoption was denied by the plaintiffs, and no evidence was led by K. on the issue relating thereto. The trial Court found that the gift was genuine and had been acted upon and that it was N.'s intention under the Will to pass the remainder of his property to K., and dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court, while upholding the gift, decreed the claim in respect of the property dealt with by the Will, on the ground that K. could only derive benefit thereunder if he were the adopted son of N. but as he had abandoned the plea of adoption, he could derive no benefit under the Will. On appeal to the High Court:

Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree, the simple fact that the Will described the donee as an adopted son, did not mean that, unless in law and in fact he was an adopted son, the testator intended that he was to get no benefit under the Will, A KHUB SINGH v. RAMJI LAL, 17 A. Plaintiff, the proprietor of an estate within which were situated certain lands in the occupation of the defendants, brought a suit to recover possession thereof, alleging that they formed his zerait lands. The defendants resisted the claim on the ground that the disputed lands were not the zerait lands of the proprietor, but were part and parcel of the raiyati holding for which they paid rent to the landlord. The entries in the Settlement khatian, by which the plaintiff was not bound, were against the plaintiff and he failed to prove that the lands were zerait as alleged by him. The lower Appellate Court, without considering the question of the length of the time during which the defendants were in occupation, held that, although the plaintiff had failed to establish the specific case alleged by him, he should get a decree for ejectment on the ground that he was entitled to recover possession as the defendants had failed to discharge the burden that lay upon them to establish a tenancy under the plaintiff in respect of the disputed lands. The defendants appealed to the High Court and contended, first, that the lower Appellate Court had on an erroneous ground considered the Settlement proceedings to be a nullity:

Held, that though the entries in the Settlement khatian afforded prima facie evidence in support of the defendants' case, the plaintiff had, as he was bound to do, rebutted that evidence.

Landlord and tenant—contd.

It was next urged that the burden of proof had been erroneously thrown on the defendants:

Held, that the decision of the lower Appellate Court could not be supported and the case must be remitted to it for re-decision.

Lastly, it was objected that the question of the defendant's possession ought to have been tried:

Held, that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in not considering the length and character of the defendants' possession, for if they had been in possession for over twelve years and had treated the disputed lands as part of their tenancy, the only remedy of the landlord was by a suit for assessment of rent, because the claim for recovery of actual possession had been extinguished by the adverse possession of the defendants.

Where the defendants in an action in ejectment are tenants of the plaintiff and the only dispute is whether the disputed lands are within or without the boundaries of that tenancy, the burden of proof depends upon the relative situation of the land in controversy and the admitted lands of the tenancy held by the defendant. C AZMAT v. BISHUN PRAKAS, 29 C. ——— Lease, construction of—Surrender, option of, on six months' notice—Notice given by lessee—Surrender, deed of, execution of, after expiry of date of notice—Determination of lease, date of—Rent, liability for.

The Raja of Jeriah granted a mining lease to the defendant firm upon certain terms and conditions as to the payment of rent and royalty upon coal excavated. The lease was for a term of 999 years and contained a clause giving the lessees a right to surrender the lease upon giving six months' notice and satisfying the conditions as to rent and royalty. The lessees, not finding the business profitable, gave the Raja notice that upon the expiration of six months from the date thereof their rights and obligations under the lease would cease, and they went out of possession and informed the Raja of the fact. The Raja's agent demanded a deed of surrender, and negotiations for the execution of this deed and for the payment of rent and royalty were carried on till after the period of six months had expired. When, eventually, the deed was executed and delivered, payment of the rent and royalty was tendered, the same being calculated up to the date of the expiry of the notice, but the Raja refused to accept payment, and instituted the present suit for rent and royalty due up to date of the execution of the deed of surrender. The High Court held that the lease had been determined by the notice and dismissed the suit. On appeal by the plaintiff to the Privy Council:

Held, that the suit had been rightly dismissed, that the request by the Raja's agent for the execution of a deed of surrender merely transferred the payment to the date when the surrender was executed and delivered, the fact that that date was subsequent to the date of the expiration of the notice would make no difference for its operation would take effect from the date when the notice expired whenever it was executed, and payment upon this date was all that was required. P C SIVA PRASHAD SINGH v. TATA IRON AND STEEL CO., LTD., 23 C. The plaintiff obtained a lease from F and brought the present suit for possession on establishment of his title:

Held, that the landlord having recognised D. unconditionally as the tenant, the latter was not liable for the arrears of rent, and the old tenancy having come to an end, the landlord was not entitled to bring to sale the holding as the holding of the old tenant, and that, consequently, the suit must fail. C GIRISH CHANDRA MONDAL v. NARENDRA NATH HALDAR, 23 C. A petition under Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code by a judgment-debtor was dismissed in default. He immediately instituted proceedings under Order IX, rule 9, of the Code asking that the case be reinstated and heard on the merits, but his application was rejected because, in the meantime, the High Court had held that Order IX, rule 9, did not apply to proceedings in execution of a decree, though before that decision the practice of the subordinate Courts had been to apply the provisions of the rule to proceedings in execution. The judgment debtor appealed to the High Court, and, under section 5 of the Limitation Act, applied that the time for appealing be extended:

Held, that, in the circumstances, the applicant was entitled to the extension, as he had been misled by the practice which had hitherto prevailed in the subordinate Courts but which had recently been held to be wrong.

An appellant applying under section 5 of the Limitation Act ought ordinarily to be deemed to have acted with ordinary diligence when the whole period between the date of the decree appealed against and the date of presenting the appeal does not, after excluding the time spent in prosecuting with due diligence a proper application for review of judgment, exceed the period prescribed by law for Plaintiff instituted a suit on 24th June 1916 and obtained an ex parte decree on the 4th February 1918. On the 1st July 1918 defendant filed an application to set aside the ex parte decree, but this was refused on the 26th July. On the 5th August plaintiff applied to have this order drawn up. The draft order was served upon the defendant on the 7th August and was returned by his Solicitor after approval on the 6th. On the 30th August, the last day on which the Court sat before the vacation after 4-30 P. M., the defendant appeared before Chaudhuri, J., for leave to file a memorandum of appeal against the decree of the 14th February 1918, the order of the 23rd March 1918 and the order of the 26th July 1918 without office copies of the two orders. The Court permitted the appeal to be filed, subject to objections which might be raised. On 3rd September the order of 26th July was filed at the instance of the plaintiff, and defendant applied for a copy of that order on the 9th September and obtained it on the 12th September.

Subsequently, a question arising before the Registrar as to the appeal against the decree and the order of the 23rd March 1918 being within time, the memorandum of appeal was amended and the appeal remained as an appeal against the order of 26th July 1918:

Held, that under Article 151 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act the appeal was prima facie time-barred, and that neither section 12 (2) nor section 5 of the Limitation Act could be availed of by the defendant who was guilty of unreasonable and unnecessary delay, and who did not apply to have the order drawn up, and for a copy of the order in accordance with the rules of the Court.

Per Chitty, J.—An appellant, who does not, within the period of limitation, apply for a copy of the order appealed from and who takes no steps whatever towards procuring such copy, cannot be allowed after the period of limitation runs out to claim exclusion of time requisite for obtaining such copy.

——— ss. 5, 6, 7, 8, 15 (2), Sch. I, Art. 127—Joint property, exclusion from, what constitutes—Denial of co-parcenary rights, effect of—Applicability of Art. 127 to minors—Guardian, knowledge of, whether binds minor—Extension of time by reason of disability of minority, limits of, doctrine of—Notice, statutory requirement of, effect of, on period of minority.

In order that lapse of time may deprive a co-parcener of his rights in the joint family property by the operation of Article 127 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act it has to be established that he has been excluded from the enjoyment of the property to his own knowledge. If exclusion for twelve years to the knowledge of the excluded co-parcener is established, his rights will be barred but not otherwise. The mere fact that a co-parcener has not enjoyed any portion of the family property for 12 years or more cannot deprive him of his rights. Possession of one co-parcener is deemed in law to be possession on behalf of all co-parceners, although other co-parceners may take no part in the management and may not even enjoy any of the income of the porperty. What amounts to exclusion in a given case must be determined in the light of its peculiar facts

If a person is allowed maintenance and permitted to live in the family house, not as a co-parcener but as a mere dependant, while his claim as co-parcener is distinctly denied, the enjoyment of such residence or maintenance is not sufficient to prevent time running against his claim.

Article 127 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies equally to minors as to adults.

The effect of sections 6, 7 and 8 of the Limitation Act is that time runs against a minor just as against a person sui juris but in the case of a minor, he will have three years more after the cessation of the disability if the period of time allowed for the suit or application expired before he attained majority.

The knowledge of the guardian must be imputed to the minor within the meaning of Article 127. The Article contemplates that in the case of minors, the knowledge of the guardian is quite sufficient.

Section 15, sub-section 2, of the Limitation Act has nothing to do with the extension of time allowed to persons under disability under sections 6 and 8 of the Act. The period of limitation is calculated according to the Article applicable to a particular case, and, therefore, the period of notice required is to be added to the time allowed by the Article applicable to such a case. What sections 6 and 8 allow to a minor or a person under disability is 3 years and no more from the cessation of the disability and the 3 years' extension cannot be made into 3 years and 2 months by reason of section 15, sub-section 2 of the Act.

Per Spencer, J.—The concession which section 6 of the Limitation Act allows to minors is that they may sue within the same period after the disability has ceased as would be allowed by the appropriate Article of the Schedule to the Act. This concession is, however, limited by section 8 to a maximum of three years from attainment of majority. Where the 2nd column of the Schedule provides for a longer period of limitation than three years, the disability of minority cannot have the effect of extending the period which is running during the minority of a plaintiff to more than three years. This is the effect of section 8, read with section 6. M NARASIMHA DEO v. KRISHNACHENDRA DEO, (1919) M. W. N. 440; 10 L. W. 156; 37 M. L. J. 256 725

The suit was dismissed as time-barred on the ground that the sale was one jointly in favour of the vendees and as the suit was barred against the representatives of the deceased vendee, it was equally barred against the surviving vendee Plaintiff appealed, pleading minority and ignorance of the vendee's death:

On 8th July 1913, the sum so due was, with the sanction of the Collector and the consent and authority of the plaintiff withdrawn from the Savings Bank and credited to the estate. The plaintiff demanded the money from the defendant, and this was refused on 14th September 1913 The estate was released in 1917 and the plaintiff on 25th February 1918 brought the present suit to recover the money from the defendant, who contended that the suit was barred by limitation, more than three years having elapsed since payment was refused. The trial Court overruled the objection and gave the plaintiff a decree, holding that section 10 of the Limitation Act was applicable to the case, as the money, or the Post Office Savings Bank Pass Book which the defendant converted into money, was trust property The defendant moved the High Court in revision reiterating his plea of limitation:

Held, that section 10 of the Limitation Act had no application to the case, as no property had vested in the defendant in trust for the plaintiff, as he had no control over it and could not withdraw the money without the consent and authority of the plaintiff, and that as the suit was instituted more than three years after the refusal to pay the money it was barred by limitation. C NANDA LAL BOSE v. ASHUTOSH GHOSH 65

Execution of decree—Stay of execution, effect of—Subsequent application, nature of—Time during which order remains in force, exclusion of—Oral application to proceed with sale, whether step-in-aid of execution.

Where an execution proceeding is stayed by an order of Court, a subsequent application for execution must be treated as virtually an application to continue the previous execution proceeding or to revive or carry through a pending execution suspended by no act or default of the decree-holder, and the limitation applicable to such an application is that contained in Article 181 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act

Where an execution proceeding is stayed by an order of Court, the decree-holder is entitled under section 15 of the Limitation Act to exclude the period from the date on which the order is made up to the date on which it is cancelled.

An application made by a decree-holder, whether orally or in writing, to the Court charged with the execution of his decree for the issue of a proclamation of sale is an application to take a step-in-aid of execution within clause (5) of Article 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and forms a fresh starting point of limitation. From the mere fact of payment of process-fees, however, an application to take a step-in-aid of execution cannot be inferred; there must be an actual application to the Court, oral or in writing, to proceed with the sale. O GULZARI LAL v. RAM BHAJAN, 22 O. Upon A.N's death his father B.R. carried on the business as the plaintiff's agent, till his death in February 1908, when R.N., the brother of A.N., took possession of the shop, all the bahis and account books, documents and a mortgage-deed. He realised certain sums of money due to the business, but refused to pay the amounts to the plaintiff and to give up the bahis and other documents. She, accordingly, on 2nd November 1912, brought the present suit (a) to recover the money realised by the defendant, (b) for an injunction prohibiting him from realising in future any debts due to A.N. and (c) for restoration of the bahis and other documents. The District Judge, being of opinion that the suit in respect of (a) was barred by time under Article 62, and in respect of (c) under Article 49, dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed and did not press her claim for an injunction:

Held, that the reliefs sought were rightly held by the District Judge to be barred under Articles 62 and 49 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

Article 62 applies to every case where a defendant, at the time of receipt, in fact, or by presumption or fiction of law, receives money to the plaintiff's use, and is not confined to cases where the defendant intended to receive the money to such use, and as, in this case, the plaintiff had alleged that she was in law solely entitled to the money, the defendant must undoubtedly have received the monies for her use, and therefore the Article applied to bar her claim. P DURGA DEVI v. RAM NATH, 85 P. A firm instituted a suit against its former agent, (a) to re-open a settled account, and (b) for an account of the profits which the defendant had made in a business similar to that of the plaintiff firm and owned by the defendant. It appeared that the plaintiff firm were engaged in an extensive brick-making business, and had employed the defendant as one of their agents in charge of an agency After very many years' service, they discovered that the defendant was interested in, if not the actual proprietor of, a brick-making business at a place some 5 or 6 miles from where the firm's agency was located, and which, in some respects, was adverse to the interests of the firm His services were accordingly dispensed with but, before he made over charge of the agency, a settlement took place between himself and an accredited representative of the firm, an entry being made in the ledger that the accounts had been checked and the cash balance found correct. Charge was then made over on that date of the stock and cash in hand, the entry being signed by the defendant and the representative of the firm. Subsequently, the firm instituted the present suit. The trial Court dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court, however, decreed the re-opening of the account, and for a rendition of accounts of the defendant's business, holding that in at least five instances fraud had been established against the defendant, and that in one instance an error of very great importance was shown. On appeal to the High Court:

Held, (1) that there was no legal justification for the finding of fraud, inasmuch as no specific instance of fraud had been alleged in the plaint and the finding was based on a superficial investigation and either on no evidence or on a careless view of the evidence;

(2) that, therefore, the claim for re-opening of the accounts was not sustainable:

(3) that as regards the claim for rendition of the accounts of the defendant's business, the suit was governed by either Article 62 or Article 90 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act, and not having been brought within the period prescribed therein, it was barred by limitation

A mortgagee cannot, during the continuance of the mortgage, hold possession of the mortgaged property adversely to the mortgagor.

If, therefore, a mortgagee makes a temporary transfer of the mortgaged property by way of mortgage or lease, purporting to do so as proprietor, but recovers possession of the property before his mortgagee or lessee has acquired any adverse title, his position is just what it was before the mortgage or lease was made, and a suit for redemption of the mortgage by the original mortgagor would be governed by Article 148, Schedule I, to the Limitation Act.

It is only when a puisne mortgagee redeems a prior mortgage that the question of subrogation arises—the doctrine of subrogation has no application where the mortgagor himself, or his successor-in-interest, redeems the mortgage.

A purchaser at an auction-sale is not entitled to the benefit of Article 134 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, even though the sale purports to transfer not merely the mortgagee rights which the judgment-debtor really possessed but the entire proprietary rights. O MOHAMMAD MOHSIN v. MOHAMMAD ABID, 22 O. The erection of a latrine under the orders of a Municipality in a place approved by the latter does not render the owner immune from an action by a neighbouring owner or occupier for nuisance caused to him by the latrine.

Though the Municipal Act has authorized the Council to direct the location of the latrine in a particular place, the work should not be carried out so as to injuriously affect private interests more than is necessary.

The power given to a Municipality to supervise the erection by a private individual of a latrine must be regarded as a permissive obligation which should be exercised without unnecessary detriment to private rights and without creating an unreasonable nuisance.

The person complaining of the nuisance has a right of action to prevent the use of the building as a latrine, but no decree should be passed for the demolition of the building.

The provision in section 278 of the Madras District Municipalities Act for award of compensation by the Municipal Council for damage caused by the exercise of its powers does not interfere with the common law rights of injured parties.

Section 13 (3) of the Madras Estates Land Act does not preclude the Court from finding, from the payment by the tenant of higher rates for a long series of years prior to the passing of the Act, that an implied contract existed to pay at these rates in the future. Minor, suit against—Guardian ad litem, duty of—Minor, whether bound by decree passed against him - Gross negligence of guardian—Burden of proof.

If a minor is properly represented by a next friend or a guardian for the suit and there is no fraud or collusion on the part of the next friend or guardian or of the opposite party, and his next friend or guardian is not guilty of gross negligence, the minor is as much bound by a decree or order made in a suit or proceeding to which he is a party as if he were of full age, and it can be executed against him or his property, as the case may be, in accordance with law.

It is not the duty of a guardian ad litem to raise frivolous or untenable defences The amount of care and attention which the guardian of a minor is expected to bestow upon the case of his ward is the same as a reasonable person would devote to his own case.

Plaintiff's father executed a mortgage-deed by way of conditional sale in favour of the defendant on the 14th December 1896. It was stipulated that the mortgage-money would be paid within 3 years and that, in the event of default, the foreclosure clause would come into operation No payment having been made, the mortgagee, after making a demand and issuing a notice of foreclosure, brought the usual action for possession and obtained a decree against the minor sons of the mortgagor, who had died before the institution of the suit. The minors now brought the present suit to set aside the decree. It appeared that in the previous suit their mother acted as guardian ad litem and resisted it on various grounds:

Held, (1) that the onus lay upon the plaintiffs to establish gross negligence on the part of their guardian in defending the previous suit;

(2) that having failed to do so, they could not impugn the decree passed against them. L BIHARI LAL v. AMIN CHAND 346

A testator by his Will gave away all his properties to his sons, defendants Nos. 1 to 6, and appointed his two elder sons defendants Nos 1 and 2, executors of his Will and guardians of their minor brothers, defendants Nos 3 to 6 The Will, which did not expressly impose any restriction on the executors' power to mortgage, stated that the testator had debts the interest payable whereon exceeded the income of his property and that, therefore, the executors should relieve him from the "sin of his debts" by granting permanent settlement of or by sale of certain properties specified in the Will. After the death of the testator, the executors, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, took a certificate of guardianship in respect of the properties of their minor brothers and about 10 years after the death of the testator executed a mortgage of the properties for selves and as executors to the estate of their father and also as certificated guardians of their minor brothers:

Held, (1) that the minors were not liable merely because the mortgage was executed by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as executors and as certificated guardians of the minors, but that the latter could be held liable only to the extent to which the debt was actually applied for their benefit;

(2) that, having regard to the terms of the Will, there was a restraint on the powers of the executors to mortgage the properties and that, as no permission of the Court under section 90, sub-section (2), of the Probate and Administration Act was obtained for mortgaging the properties, the defendants Nos 1 and 2 had no power to mortgage as executors under the Will:

In order to ascertain whether a mortgagor on redemption is bound to pay post diem interest for the whole term during which the mortgage has been in existence, the instrument must be looked at as a whole and the intention of the parties gathered from the deed.

Plaintiff sued for possession by redemption of a certain shop on payment of the mortgage-money. The mortgage sued upon contained a covenant to redeem at the expiry of 5 years by payment of the zar-i-rahn, a covenant to pay interest at Rs. 5 per annum in the meantime and an agreement that, on failure to redeem, the mortgagee shall be at liberty to realise the principal mortgage money, interest, costs, etc, from the property mortgaged:

Held, (1) that the mortgagor did not contemplate paying interest indefinitely;

(2) that it was evident that interest for 5 years at all events was made a charge on the property;

(3) that the fact that 5 years' interest was made a charge on the property showed that that should be paid at the time of redemption;

C. of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 1 (a).*

In 1893 the plaintiffs mortgaged the zemindari interest in certain lands to defendants Nos. 1 to 5. The mortgage was in form a usufructuary mortgage. In 1913 the mortgagors redeemed the mortgage, but during the currency of the mortgage the mortgagees had let the land to defendants Nos. 6 and 7. The plaintiffs brought the present suit for a declaration that they were entitled to the land as their khudkasht land, and contended that defendants Nos. 1 to 5 had no right or title to settle the land with defendants Nos 6 and 7, who had not acquired occupancy rights in respect of the property and that in fact they were trespassers thereon. In appeal to the High Court the first contention put forward was that the ijara zarpeshgi mortgage did not create as between the mortgagors and mortgagees the relationship of landlord and tenant so as to make the defendants Nos 1 to 5 tenants of the plaintiff in the ordinary legal acceptation of the term:

Held, that the mortgage-deed in suit did not create the relationship of landlord and tenant between the mortgagors and mortgagees: the character of the deed was not a lease but a mortgage.

It was next contended that the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 were mortgagees only and had not the power or right to create an interest affecting the mortgaged premises of longer duration than their own interest in the same:

Held, that the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 were mortgagees in possession under a usufructuary mortgage of the zemindari right pledged as security for the mortgage-debt, and that they had the power in law to induct a tenant into the tenanted land subject to such mortgage when the whole or part of such tenanted land became unlet or vacant and without a tenant, and that such tenant when inducted by the mortgagees acquired non-occupancy rights in the tenanted land subject to such mortgage as aforesaid;

Held, further, that the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation under Article 1, clause a) of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act The obligation in law upon the plaintiffs, if he desired to dispossess defendants Nos. 6 and 7, was to bring a suit in ejectment to eject them within six months after the expiration of the mortgage, or after the mortgage had been redeemed. Pat SHEO BARAT SINGH v. PADARATH MANTON 473

In the case of a bill of exchange payable at sight or on demand there can be dishonour by non-acceptance, though the law does not require that, in the case of such bill, there should be a presentment for acceptance. But if the drawee of such a bill refuses to accept it, it practically amounts to a refusal to pay and becomes dishonour by non-payment. That is to say, there is nothing in law which precludes a bill payable on demand being presented for acceptance although that may not be necessary In order, however, to sustain an action against the drawee, there must be dishonour and notice of dishonour given within reasonable time.

Under section 119 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, a Court is entitled to presume the fact of dishonour, but that is only so where there is a proper protest No such presumption would arise from a mere entry by a Notary Public of the words 'noted for non-payment' without giving the date of dishonour, and in the absence of a certificate of protest

Per Oldfield, J —The refusal to pay referred to in section 92 of the Negotiable Instruments Act includes a refusal to accept, such as is contemplated in section 91, which is a possible, though not an invariable or obligatory, preliminary to payment being demanded at all.

Section 16 of the Orissa Tenancy Act is applicable to cases in which a transfer is complete and valid as against the landlord, but a transfer of a sarbarakari tenure is not complete and valid as against the landlord until he has given his consent to it.

Where consent has not been given, the institution of a suit by the landlord to recover the amount of the fee payable to him for registration of a transfer is not an indication of consent, nor does any cause of action arise, and the plaint cannot be amended by adding a statement that the landlord is willing to acknowledge the transfer as valid against himself.

Succession to the non-talukdari self-acquired property of a Hindu talukdar, entered in List II of the lists prepared under the Oudh Estates Act, is governed by the ordinary rules of Hindu Law, and not by the special rules laid down in the Act; in other words, in the absence of any custom established to the contrary, such property descends to the nearest collateral relative of that talukdar as against a remoter relative representing the senior line.

It does not follow that because there is a custom of impartibility in a family, therefore, there is a custom involving an order of descent different from that recognised by Hindu Law, nor can any such detailed custom be presumed from the mere fact of impartibility. Impartibility is a form of property perfectly well known to Hindu Law.

The words "the ordinary law to which members of the intestate's tribe and religion are subject", in section 23 of the Oudh Estates Act, include a custom where one is made out, but it is for the person who alleges a custom varying the ordinary law to establish it and, unless he does so, the ordinary personal law will prevail. O HAR BAKHSH SINGH v. NAGINDRA BAHADUR SINGH, 6 O. Therefore, a co-sharer in such an under-proprietary mahal falls under the category of the persons referred to in section 9, clause e, of the Oudh Laws Act and can enforce his right of pre-emption, if he is related to the vendor as against a person who is a co-sharer in the same mahal but is not related to the vendor or is a co-sharer in another under-proprietary mahal. O MOHAMMAD SARFARAZ HUSAIN v. MOHAMMAD SHAHIN KHAN, 22 O. Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 34, 111, 394, applicability of—Robbery committed by four persons—Abetment—Death caused by one alone, whether probable consequence—Liability of others.

A robbery was committed by 4 men; two, one of whom was the accused, went from house to house bullying and ill-treating the inmates and making them give up their valuables, while the other two kept guard on the house tops. Of the latter pair one was armed with a gun which he fired off several times, and towards the close of the affair when the villagers began to make it unpleasant for the robbers by stone throwing, he aimed at one of the villagers who took a prominent part in stone throwing, and shot and killed him. The accused, having been convicted of murder, appealed to the Chief Court:

Held, (1) that inasmuch as the fatal shot was fired by one man alone, the accused could not be convicted of murder by reason of section 34, Indian Penal Code;

(2) that in order to apply section 111, Indian Penal Code, it must be found (1) that the appellant was an abettor of the robbery and (2) that the murder was a probable consequence of the abetment and was committed in pursuance of the conspiracy to commit the robbery;

(3) that the appellant was one of the principals in the robbery and not merely an abettor;

(4) that even assuming that he was an abettor, it could not be said that murder was a probable consequence of the abetment to commit robbery;

(5) that the accused was guilty of an offence under section 394, Indian Penal Code. P HARNAM SINGH v. EMPEROR, 21 P. R. 1919 CR.; 20 CR. L. J. 635 395

When an offence is punishable with transportation for life or imprisonment for a term of ten years, if a sentence of transportation for a term less than life is awarded, such term cannot exceed the term of imprisonment, namely, ten years.

Where, therefore, an accused, on conviction for an offence under section 395, Penal Code, was sentenced to transportation for 15 years, the High Court reduced the sentence to transportation for a term of ten years, that being the period of imprisonment provided for the offence.

Though the absence of any corroboration of the statement of an approver is not fatal to the conviction of a person named by him as one of the participators in an offence, it is nevertheless sufficient to cast doubt upon its justice and the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. A ALLA-UL-DIN v. EMPEROR, 20 CR. ——— ss. 147, 148—Rioting with common object of causing obstruction to measurement of khas mahal land—Burden of proof—Possession of disputed land not affirmatively proved, effect of.

In a criminal case the burden of proving the charge substantially as drawn lies on the prosecution.

The common object of the unlawful assembly of which the petitioners were said to have been members and for which they were convicted by the lower Court under sections 147 and 148, Indian Penal Code was to cause obstruction to measurement and demarcation of khas mahal land by a kanungo and a khas mahal tahsildar. The land in question had lain fallow up to the date of the occurrence, and there was considerable doubt whether the prosecution had established that on the date of the occurrence actual possession of the land was with the Government:

Held, that having regard to the condition of the land and the nature of the acts of possession on which the parties relied, it was not established affirmatively that the land on which the alleged riot took place was in the actual possession of the Government, and that, therefore, the charge as alleged was not proved, and the petitioners were not guilty of rioting with the common object stated in the charge. C PANCHANON BOSE v. EMPEROR, 23 C. Held, that the extracts from the wajib-ul-arz did not evidence a custom authorising the removal of fallen trees by tenants without the consent of the landlord that the accused had failed to prove that the removal was not dishonest, and as the removal caused loss to the landlord which was wrongful to him and caused wrongful gain to the accused, the case fell within illustration (a) of section 378 of the Penal Code, and the conviction was justified A DUNYAPAT v. EMPEROR, 20 CR. The payment by an insolvent to his creditors of four annas in the rupee and obtaining a full discharge of their debts is not a 'payment in full" within the meaning of section 2 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, and such payment is not sufficient in law to entitle him to an order annulling the order of adjudication M BRIJI KESSOOR LAUL v OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF MADRAS, 37 M L J. 244; 26 M L. Press Act (I of 1910), ss. 3 (1), 4 (1), 17, 22—Printing Presses and Newspapers Act (XXV of 1867), ss. 4, 5—Liberty of press—Control of printing presses—Declaration by owner of printing press—Deposit of security—Magistrate, power of, to dispense with security or to cancel or vary order relating to security, whether judicial or administrative—Notice to person affected, whether necessary—Order forfeiting deposit—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 435—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Revision—Certiorari, writ of, issue of—High Court, power of—Bringing into hatred or contempt—Attack upon system as distinguished from attack upon class—Press Act and Penal Code, provisions of, comparison between—Appeal to His Majesty in Council—Practice of Privy Council in criminal cases—Limitations on Committee's powers.

The Indian Press Act contemplates that in ordinary cases security shall be deposited by the owner of a printing press used for printing a newspaper and the only duty of the Magistrate is to fix the amount and to receive it. The proviso to section 3, sub-section (1), gives him the power, for special reasons, to dispense with any deposit, but the same proviso also gives him the power to cancel any such order of dispensation, and the necessary consequence of such cancellation will be that security will have to be deposited according to the amount thereupon fixed by him within the limits prescribed by the Act, as would be done in normal course on the first making of the declaration required from every person who keeps in his possession a printing press.

The action of the Magistrate in requiring or dispensing with a deposit or in cancelling an order dispensing with a deposit is administrative and not judicial, nor is he bound, strictly speaking, to hear the person affected by his order, though it may be more discreet to do so.

The power of the High Courts, which have inherited the ordinary or extraordinary jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, to issue writs of certiorari has not been taken away by the provisions of section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code and section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. But semble, that, assuming the order of the Magistrate to be a judicial order, the power to issue a writ of certiorari against any such order would be taken away by section 22 of the Indian Press Act (I of 1910).

The provisions of the Indian Press Act, section 4, as to the forfeiture of deposits are closely analogous to those of sections 124A and 153A of the Indian Penal Code. Both sets of provisions attempt to balance two important public considerations, the undesirability of anything tending to excite sedition or to excite strife between classes and the undesirability of preventing any bona fide argument for reform.

In substance, the question under clause (c) of section 4, sub-section (1), of the Indian Press Act comes to this, are the words used such as in fact to excite, or do they disclose an attempt which implies intention to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection towards the Government or of any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in India, and, in judging the question of intent, the publisher must be deemed to intend that which is the natural result of the words used having regard, among other things, to the character and description of that part of the public who are to be expected to read the words.

An attack upon a school of opinion does not necessarily involve an imputation upon the class who hold or give effect to that opinion. But one is apt to lead to the other, and in judging whether the second exists regard must be had to the fact that the words in clause (c) which refer to the hatred or contempt of a class or section are not limited by Explanation 2. In this respect the Press Act differs from the Penal Code.

The Board, in this case, observed that as they found that the Statute applicable had not been misconstrued by the local tribunal they would not, in any event, having regard to the constitutional limitations on their functions in criminal cases, have considered themselves justified in interfering, but that if they had thought it proper to look into the matter in detail, they would have held that on the merits the Court appealed from was right in supporting the declaration of forfeiture. PC ANNIE BESANT v. ADVOCATE-GENERAL, MADRAS, 37 M. A Tahsildar appointed by a landlord, whether he has or has not the power to institute suits for arrears of rent, is certainly under an obligation to take steps in proper time to give information to the landlord that unless suits are brought in respect of certain arrears of rent, they would become barred by limitation.

The omission of the Tahsildar to do so would make him liable for damages in respect of the arrears of rent thus becoming barred by limitation.

The cause of action for a suit against the Tahsildar for such damages arises when the arrears of rent become barred by limitation. - RAMESH CHANDRA ACHARJEE v EASIN SARKAR 71

Before the right to make an application under section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act accrues, two conditions precedent have to be fulfilled, firstly, the application for insolvency must be made within three months of the transfer sought to be avoided, and, secondly, the debtor must be adjudged an insolvent.

The limitation for such an application is three years from the date when the right to apply accrues.

One L sold certain property of his on the 5th November 1913. An application for insolvency was made on the 30th of January 1914 and L was declared an insolvent on the 29th April 1914. An application to set aside the sale as against the Official Receiver, was made on the 9th December 1916:

It is not competent to a Court to institute an enquiry under section 36 or 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act on a report by the Official Receiver, but where such proceedings are taken without objection they are not invalid in toto, and may be validated by the Official Receiver converting his report into a properly stamped petition.

The Court has jurisdiction under section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act to enquire into a petition by the Official Receiver for the avoidance of a transfer by the debtor's transferee, where the second transfer is only a colourable transaction and the debtor's transferee is only a benamidar for his subsequent transferee. In such an enquiry the second transferee is a necessary party.

An appeal against an order passed under sections 36 and 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act need not necessarily be presented by the Official Receiver but may be presented by a creditor of the insolvent. No Court has the jurisdiction to annul, as such, a transfer amounting to a fraudulent preference or a voluntary transfer made within two years of an adjudication, except a Court exercising insolvency jurisdiction in proceedings which have been instituted to declare the debtor, who made the transfer, insolvent by a petition duly presented under the Act

It is only the Official Receiver who can set the Court in motion to annul a transfer under section 36 or section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act

A tea factory built outside the limits of a village site is not liable to pre-emption either as agricultural land or as village immoveable property.

A stretch of natural forest which does not lie within the village site is also exempt from pre-emption, as it is not agricultural land nor land used for purposes subservient to agriculture

A garden is a plot of land devoted to the production of herbs, fruits, flowers and vegetables, and as tea does not fall under any of these heads, a tea garden is not a garden but is agricultural land and is liable to pre-emption

Where a person, having a right of pre-emption, congratulates a vendee upon his purchase and joins in an entertainment given by the vendee on that occasion, such conduct does not amount to a waiver by that person of his right.

A notification of the Government restricting the right of pre emption in a certain area cannot be regarded as having retrospective effect, so as to deprive a person of the right to pre-empt which he possessed prior to the issue of the notification but which from the date of the notification is taken away.

Where a plaintiff claims to assert a right to pre-empt a building used as a factory, he is not at liberty to omit to sue for the machinery therein as these are fixtures and form an integral part of the factory. A deliberate exclusion of the machinery fixtures would involve a dismissal of the suit.

The right of pre-emption is a very invidious right which constitutes an invasion of the principle of free contract, and the party who comes into Court to enforce that right must be careful to observe all the restrictions within which that right is hedged P KAJU MAL v. SALIG RAM, 91 P. Held, (1) that the entire, tenure including the share of the purchaser of a portion of it whose name was not registered in the landlord's sherista, passed by the execution sale and that it was not open to such a purchaser to sue for a declaration of his right to his share in the tenure;

In 1866 FS made a Will bequeathing his property to his widow with remainder to her daughter. In 1878 CB sued the widow alone to recover the property, basing his claim on an earlier Will He was granted a decree and obtained possession of the property In 1879 the widow and her daughter gifted the property to C who sold his rights to the present plaintiff. On the death of the widow the plaintiff brought the present suit against the representatives of CB. to recover possession of the property, but the suit was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff was bound by the decision in the suit brought by CB against the widow, and that it was barred by limitation. The plaintiff appealed:

Held, (1) that the suit was not barred by the rule of res judicata, inasmuch as the widow did not fully represent the estate, and that, therefore, the decision in the suit brought by CB. was not binding on her daughter nor on the plaintiff who claimed through the latter;

(2) that the suit was not barred by limitation, inasmuch as the only interest which C. obtained in the property by the gift in his favour was the

T. executed three deeds of conditional sale in favour of the Raja of Bansi, and subsequently executed a simple mortgage in the Raja's favour. The Raja instituted a suit on the last mortgage and obtained a simple money-decree, in execution of which he brought to sale the whole of the equity of redemption of some of the properties mentioned in the deeds of conditional sale, and a portion of the equity of redemption of others, and purchased these interests himself, and continued in possession without causing any entries to be made in the revenue records as to the properties of which he was the mortgagee and those of which he was the owner. The Raja then sued for foreclosure in respect of the three deeds of conditional sale, and demanded the full amount due thereon; he made no mention that he had purchased any portion of the equity of redemption, nor did he allow for any reduction in the amount to be paid for redemption in virtue of his purchase of a portion of the equity of redemption and, in the course of the suit, denied that he had made such a purchase. He obtained a decree and the mortgagor paid up the amounts due. The Raja then instituted the present suit for a declaration that he was the full owner of the properties of which he had purchased the equity of redemption The trial Court dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred both by res judicata and by the principle of estoppel On appeal to the High Court

Held, that the suit had been rightly dismissed, and that as the Raja had deliberately agreed to return the property free of all incumbrances on being paid a certain sum and as that sum had been paid the suit was barred by equitable estoppel, and this would be so even if the defendant was in a position

Plaintiff instituted the present suit for partition of certain joint property and for possession of certain other property as exclusively his. In 1909 a partition of some joint property of the parties was made by arbitrators appointed by them, and the plaintiff now alleged that there was other joint property, besides that dealt with by the arbitrators, which the defendant did not disclose, and the present suit related to this property. The defendant denied that the suit property was joint, and pleaded that the arbitrators' award, and the decree thereon, estopped the plaintiff from now alleging that any property, other than that included in the award, was joint, that the plaintiff had admitted at the time of the arbitration that the suit property was the exclusive property of the defendant, and that he had abandoned his rights in respect of the other property claimed by him. The trial Court, without recording a finding whether the property alleged to be joint was joint, dismissed this portion of the suit on the ground that the plaintiff not having included the property now alleged to be joint in the claim of 1909, he was debarred from suing for it now, the matter being res judicata. The plaintiff appealed:

Held, (1) that as the arbitrators neither gave any adjudication nor made any inquiry about the existence of joint property other than that mentioned in the agreement to refer to arbitration, and were told nothing about the property now in suit, their award did not operate as res judicata so as to bar the claim for partition of this property;

(2) that it was for the defendant to prove that the plaintiff had waived his rights, and waiver was not to be inferred from plaintiff's omission to give evidence and explain when and how he came to know that the property was joint;

(3) that in the absence of proof that plaintiff knew at the time of the arbitration that the property was joint, his admission would not amount to waiver; the admission being gratuitous could be withdrawn, and did not create an estoppel as it did not lead to any change in defendant's position. P MANOHAR LAL v. NANAK CHAND, 68 P. BS., a Sikh, mortgaged his ancestral joint family property to SS., another Sikh, on the 26th July 1904, and subsequently executed four deeds of further charge on the same property in favour of JS. who, alleging himself to be the son of SS., brought the present suit for sale of the mortgaged property, on the basis of these deeds, against BS. Subsequently, the sons of BS. were joined as defendants. JS. obtained a decree against BS. alone on the deeds of further charge, and against all the defendants on the mortgage-deed of the 26th July 1904. The sons of BS. challenged this latter decree in appeal to the Judicial Commissioner. The first point taken in appeal was that JS was not the legitimate son of SS. as his mother, a sunar woman, was the mistress of SS. and JS. had been born to her before she was taken over by SS.:

Held, that the parties being Sikhs, and it being open to a Sikh to marry any woman he pleased provided she adopted the Sikh religion, the facts (i) that JS's mother was always treated among the brotherhood as the wife of SS., (ii that JS was always treated as the legitimate son of SS, (iii) that SS. made no disposition of his property by Will or otherwise, and (iv) that JS was referred to in the deeds of further charge as the son of SS, sufficiently proved that he was the legitimate son of SS.

It was next objected that the deed of mortgage of the 26th July 1904 was not properly attested as required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, inasmuch as the executant of the deed had not signed the deed in the presence of one of the three attesting witnesses:

Held, that under section 2 of the Transfer of Property (Validating) Act, 1917, it was sufficient if the witness, before signing his name, received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature to the same, and that unless this was proved, the witness was not an attesting witness, but that as it had been proved that the signatures of the other two witnesses were in their handwriting, and as the presumption under section 69 of the Evidence Act had not been rebutted, the due execution and attestation of the deed had been proved.

Lastly, it was contended that no portion of the consideration of the mortgage-deed was borrowed either for legal necessity or to pay off an antecedent debt, and that, therefore, the deed was not in any way binding on the sons of BS:

Held, that under the Hindu Law the principle of antecedent debt applied only when the sale or charge had been incurred not only antecedently but wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate, or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate, and that a debt could not be regarded as antecedent so as to bind the sons as such, unless it had been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from the joint family property, and that as it had not been shown that the debts, for the payment of which the money was borrowed by BS. were incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate and irrespective of the credit obtainable from the joint family property, the sons of BS. were not liable to pay any portion of the mortgage debt of the 26th July 1904. O CHANDIKA BAKHSH SINGH v. WIDOW OF JAGAN SINGH, 6 O. Specific performance—Agreement, oral, to grant lease—Draft to be prepared and approved by parties—Conditions, some, not settled—Specific performance, whether can be granted.

It is settled law that there may be a concluded agreement, though a document is to be executed embodying its terms.

Where the parties agree to the execution of a formal lease the draft of which is to be approved by them, specific performance can be enforced of the original agreement, even though the draft has not been prepared and approved.

The defendant contracted orally with the plaintiffs to give them a putni lease of his share in certain property, at a certain annual rent and for a certain premium The agreement provided for the preparation of a draft of the lease according to the terms settled, which was to be approved by the lessor's Pleader. In a suit for specific performance of the contract:

Held, (1) that all the material terms of the lease having been settled, in the absence of express agreement to the contrary, matters not expressly settled would be regulated by the provisions of the law in that behalf:

(2) that there was, in the circumstances of the case, a binding agreement to grant a lease, though a document was to be executed embodying its terms, and, therefore, defendant could not resile from the agreement, nor could he or his Pleader refuse assent to a properly drawn instrument is—Sarkhat acknowledging debt and stipulating rate of interest payable, nature of—Stamp payable.

A memorandum of the rate of interest to be payable in future, when appended to an acknowledgment of a debt, over the signature of the debtor, for the express purpose of being used hereafter as evidence of an agreement to pay interest at the particular rate specified, must be regarded as a stipulation to pay interest within the meaning of the proviso to Article 5 of the First Schedule to the Stamp Act, so as to make the document a memorandum of an agreement within the meaning of Article 5 of the same Schedule, and a document, described as a sarkhat, which, in addition to acknowledging a debt, contains, over and above the said acknowledgment, a note of the rate of interest to be payable hereafter on the debt thus acknowledged, is a document of the foregoing description.

The question whether a particular adhesive stamp has or has not been cancelled in a sufficiently effectual manner, so that it cannot be used again, is one which must be considered with reference to the facts of each particular case. Where a person writes his name close to a stamp on its left side, and continues the line which forms the upper portion of the writing in the Hindi character across the face of the stamp, and immediately against the right hand edge thereof continues his writing by the insertion of words of formal acknowledgment, this is an effectual cancellation of the stamp within the meaning of section 12 of the Stamp Act. A MAHADEO KORI v. SHEORAJ RAM TELI, 17 A. J., the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs, mortgaged two plots of land to the defendant, the arrangement being that the defendant should hold possession of both the plots for a certain period in full satisfaction of the debt and interest. Before the expiry of the term, the parties came to an arrangement whereby J, by an unregistered conveyance, sold one of the plots to the defendant-mortgagee and took back the other plot, the mortgage being thus paid off. The plaintiffs then brought this suit for recovery of possession of the plot sold to the defendant:

Held, (1) that the thing sold was merely a right in the immoveable property, the property being in the actual possession of the mortgagee, and that the sale, being thus of an intangible thing, could be made only by a registered instrument as provided in section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act;

(2) that the unregistered conveyance was inadmissible in evidence to prove the sale or the satisfaction of the debt.

Certain tenure-holders mortgaged their interest in the tenure, and it was stipulated in the mortgage-bond, inter alia, that the mortgagee should be put in possession of the mortgaged property in lieu of interest and that the mortgagors should pay off the principal at the end of a specified year and, in default of payment, the mortgagee should be at liberty to foreclose according to law. The mortgagee, however, was wrongfully kept out of possession by the mortgagors and was unable to get possession except for one year. During the currency of the mortgage and while he was out of possession, the mortgagee discharged a decree for arrears of rent obtained against the mortgagors, to prevent the property being sold in execution. He instituted the present suit to recover the principal debt with interest at 12 per cent and futher claimed, under section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act, to add to the amount secured the amount of the decree paid by him with interest thereon at 9 per cent per annum It was contended in appeal to the High Court (1) that the plaintiff was not entitled to interest, but (2 if he was entitled to interest at all, he could only claim interest by way of damages under the Interest Act:

Held; (1) that inasmuch as the plaintiff had been wrongfully kept out of possession, he was entitled to interest on the principal;

(2) that the plaintiff was entitled to interest as a charge on the property and that the amount claimed was not excessive.

Section 76 (i) of the Transfer of Property Act has no application to money due for improvements to a mortgagee in Malabar, because the value of improvements effected by such mortgagee cannot be brought under the expression 'amount due on the mortgage' in section 83 of the Act.

A mortgagee in Malabar has a right to remain in possession till he is actually paid or till he is ejected by decree of Court and hence he is not accountable for mesne profits till either of those events happens.

Per Napier, J—Section 5 of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act applies to all tenants except such as have been paid. If payment has been made and the term is determined or the mortgage has been discharged, the section has no application. If the 'compensation is so due,' i. e., has not been paid, then the section applies.

According to the policy of the Act, the compensation is to be ascertained by the Court. If a tenant accepts payment he waives his right, but if he claims assessment by the Court, there is nothing to deprive him of his statutory right under section 5,

Under the U. P. Municipalities Act of 1916 the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is limited by the provisions of sections 318 and 321 of the Act. Under these sections the only remedy of a person who considers himself aggrieved by a bye-law made under section 298 (G) of the Act is by way of appeal to the higher authority referred to in section 318 of the Act, but it is by no means equally clear that a suit would not lie for an injunction to compel a Municipal Board to grant the plaintiff a license for carrying on a particular [illegible] on a particular spot, provided always that the [illegible] prepared to take out the license subject to all the conditions prescribed by the bye-laws and could satisfy the Court that the Municipal Board had refused him the license for reasons wholly unconnected with the public health, safety or convenience. A MANNUA v. EMPEROR, 20 CR. A purchaser, under a contract of sale, is entitled to a good and marketable title. If the title is found to be doubtful, so as to require investigation, he cannot be compelled either to rescind the contract or to accept without investigation, the doubtful title. He may sue for specific performance of the contract and ask for an enquiry into the title by the result of which he will be bound.

E. entered into an agreement to sell her house to Oosman Sait & Co. for consideration, towards which the latter paid her Rs. 500 as earnest-money. One of the conditions was, that the sale was subject to good title and the advance was to be refunded if the title was found not to be in order. Before the date fixed for completion of the sale, the purchasers discovered that the vendor's grandson, in whose fav[illegible]r had created an estate in remainder, had, prior to the date of the agreement created mortgages on the house. On the vendor's requiring the purchasers to complete the purchase, the latter replied that they deferred performance pending an enquiry into the mortgages. There. upon the vendor rescinded the contract, stating that the mortgagor had no title and offered to indemnify. Both parties brought suits, the purchasers for specific performance and the vendor for rescission of the contract:

Held, (1) that the vendor was not justified in rescinding the contract, or in calling on the purchasers to complete the contract within a stated time without further investigation;

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 912 OF 1917.

HASAIN KARIKAR AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Muhammadan Law—Gift—Musha, doctrine of, applicability of—Donees, shares of, ascertainable, effect of—Procedure—Point not raised in pleadings, whether can be argued.

The Muhammadan Law doctrine of Musha is not applicable to a gift where the share of each of the donees can be ascertained. [p. 2, col. 2.]

A Court ought not to allow a point to be argued before it which is not founded on facts, and in respect of which no definite issue is raised. [p. 2, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Dacca, dated the 29th of January 1917, modifying that of the Munsif, 1st Court at that place, dated the 22nd of May 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Gopal Chandra Das, for the Appellant.—Defendant No. 1 is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of joint possession. Plaintiff's case is that the lands belonged to Saber and that these were gifted away in his widow's favour as also in favour of a foster-son. Plaintiff purchased them from the latter. Defendant No. 1 is the son of Saber. The question to be decided is whether there can be a valid gift of a property capable of partition and secondly, whether the gift is valid, when there is no delivery of possession, under the Muhammadan Law. If the doctrine of Musha be applicable, then the whole gift fails. There cannot be joint gift in favour of two persons unless the properties were partitioned by the donee. See Wilson's Digest of Muhammadan Law, page 349, section 312. There has not been a subsequent gift either which could have validated the gift. The joint gift is invalid if the property is capable of partition and is not actually partitioned. As regards my second point, it has been found by the lower Court of Appeal that there has been no delivery of possession. Refers to Ibrahim Goolam Ariff v. Saiboo (1), Abdul Aziz v. Fateh Mahomed (2). The subject-matter of these gifts is capable of partition, as they are cultivable lands. Even if a suit for partition is brought now, I submit that would not be maintainable.

Babu Surendra Nath Guha, for the Respondent.—The points taken by my learned friend are now being for the first time raised in second appeal. There were not sufficient materials on the record for the Court to come to a decision on the points now urged. As regards the scope of the applicability of the doctrine of Musha, I would draw your attention to Ibrahim Goolam Ariff v. Saiboo (1) where it has been held that the doctrine ought to be restricted in its use in progressive societies.

Babu Gopal Chandra Das, in reply.

JUDGMENT.—This suit originally was for the possession of 8 annas share in plots Nos. 1 to 6 and for the whole of plot No. 7. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff was not entitled to possession of plot No. 7, and the appeal now relates to 8 annas of plots Nos. 1 to 6.

These plots of land belonged to one Saber, the father of defendant No. 1. He made a heba of these plots in favour of his widow Sabani Bibi and a foster-son of the name of Kuran. The defence originally was that the heba was executed under the undue influence of Sabani Bibi at a time when the defendant was not present.

The learned Munsif held against that contention and after having dealt with the case made by the defendant upon that question he added that the defence was improved at the trial and in the arguments by introducing certain objections. One of these objections was that the gift was invalid on the principle of Musha. He held that the objection was not a purely legal objection but one in which facts had to be found. He appreciated that such a point required to be rejected, specially as no such issue was raised, but unfortunately he dealt with it. The Subordinate Judge held that the doctrine of Musha was not applicable to such lands, because the shares of each of the donees could be ascertained. The donees, as I have said, were the widow and the foster-child.

There is no question in this case that possession was given to the donees. The foster-child being an infant, the widow acted as the natural guardian. Although there is no distinct finding that there was appropriation of the rent derived from these lands in equal shares by the mother and the foster-child, yet there is no doubt that the shares are easily ascertainable. The Privy Council has laid down that the doctrine relating to the invalidity of gifts of Musha is wholly unadapted to a progressive state of society and ought to be confined within the strictest rules. The Courts have gone far beyond the strict rules. They have not applied the doctrine in the case of undivided Zemindaries where the proprietor of each share was entitled to collect a definite share of the rents. They have not held it to apply to the case of an undivided house in big commercial towns like Rangoon. Why that rule must be applied to the six plots of land held by the mother and the foster-child. I cannot understand. They are practically jointly interested. I, therefore, agree in holding that when the shares of each of the donees can be ascertained, the doctrine ought not to be held applicable. I ought to add that I think it extremely undesirable for the trial Court to deal with points of this character started without any foundation of facts and without any definite issue being framed. They ought to be rejected and not allowed to be argued. To allow them may be prejudicial to the parties concerned.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Babu HAR BAKHSH SINGH—DEFENDANT NO. 2—APPELLANT

Babu NAGINDRA BAHADUR SINGH—PLAINTIFF AND ALOPI DIN SINGH—DEFENDANT NO. 1—RESPONDENTS.

*Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), ss. 22, 23—Hindu Law—Succession to non-*talukdari property of talukdar, regulation of—Law, applicable—Impartibility—Custom—"Ordinary law," whether includes custom—Burden of proof.

Succession to the non-talukdari self-acquired property of a Hindu talukdar, entered in List II of the lists prepared under the Oudh Estates Act, is governed by the ordinary rules of Hindu Law, and not by the special rules laid down in the Act; in other words, in the absence of any custom established to the contrary, such property descends to the nearest collateral relative of that talukdar as against a remoter relative representing the senior line. [p. 3, col. 2.]

It does not follow that because there is a custom of impartibility in a family, therefore there is a custom involving an order of descent different from that recognised by Hindu Law, nor can any such detailed custom be presumed from the mere fact of impartibility. Impartibility is a form of property perfectly well known to Hindu Law. [p. 3, col. 2.]

The words "the ordinary law to which members of the intestate's tribe and religion are subject", in section 23 of the Oudh Estates Act, include a custom where one is made out, but it is for the person who alleges a custom varying the ordinary law to establish it and, unless he does so, the ordinary personal law will prevail. [p. 3, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareli, dated the 22nd January 1918, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 4th August 1917.

The Hon'ble Syed Wazir Hasan, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, Babus Surendro Nath Roy, Parmeshwar Dayal, Avadh Behari Lal and Pandit Gaduadhar Prasad, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal relates to a house which was the non-talukdari self-acquired property of Bajrang Bahadur Singh, the last male owner of the Baispur Estate in the Partabgarh district. The estate is entered in Lists I and II, i. e., it is one which by family custom prior to the 13th February 1856 ordinarily devolved on a single heir. The first talukdar after the passing of the Act was Saltanat Bahadur Singh. He was succeeded by his son Bajrang Bahadur Singh, who died in 1900. Bajrang Bahadur Singh was succeeded by his two widows Harnath Kuar and Sartaj Kuar, the last of whom died in 1916. On the death of the widows there were two collateral relatives of Bajrang Bahadur Singh in existence:

(1) Babu Alopi Din Singh, the nearest collateral who has sold his rights to the plaintiff respondent.

(2) Babu Har Bakhsh Singh the defendant-appellant, who though two degrees further removed from the deceased than Alopi Din Singh represented the senior line.

Babu Har Bakhsh Singh being the nearest agnate succeeded to the taluka in accordance with clause (10) of section 22 of Act I of 1869 as amended by the Oudh Estates Amending Act, 1910. He also obtained possession of the house in suit. This house is valued at only Rs. 2,000, but the case has been elaborately argued and it is stated that it is being fought as a test case.

The memorandum of appeal consists of eight paragraphs but it has been argued on a single issue, namely, whether Alopi Din Singh was entitled to succeed to the estate as being the nearest heir of Bajrang Bahadur Singh under Hindu Law. The learned Advocate for the appellant accepts the following sentence in the lower Court's judgment as correctly stating the issue he wished to argue :—

"I have, therefore, to see what law is applicable to the case,—whether Hindu Law or the customary law of succession." His argument is,

(1) that as a List II estate is by definition an estate in which there is an ancient custom of impartibility, the inheritance must necessarily be regulated by custom and not by Hindu Law;

(2) that there is a presumption that the non-talukdari and talukdari property descend to the same person, and

(3) that both on ground (2) and because the defendant is in possession, it was for the plaintiff to establish affirmatively a custom entitling him to succeed.

The fallacy of this argument is obvious. There is admittedly no evidence to prove any custom regulating the mode of descent in this family. It does not follow that because there is a custom of impartibility, therefore, there is a custom involving an order of descent different from that recognised by Hindu Law, nor can any such detailed custom be presumed from the mere fact of impartibility. Impartibility is a form of property perfectly well known to Hindu Law and the principles of succession to it have been laid down by the Privy Council (sic) in Subramanya Pandya Chokka Talavar v. Siva Subramanya Pillai (1) and in other cases. Under section 23, Act I of 1869, which governs the present case, succession is regulated by "the ordinary law to which members of the intestate's tribe and religion are subject." It is not disputed that the ordinary law includes a custom where one is made out ; vide Bhai Narindar Bahadur Singh v. Achal Ram (2) and Parbati Kunwar v. Chandarpal Kunwar (3). But it is for the person who alleges a custom varying the ordinary law to establish it and unless he does so, the ordinary personal law will prevail.

I am not sure how far an argument is drawn by the appellant from the rule of primogeniture adopted in cases falling under clauses (1) to (10) of section 22, but so far as he relies on this, it is only necessary to remark that these provisions have nothing to do with custom but are statutory provisions applying to all List II estates without regard to the nature of the custom previously governing them.

In view of these considerations the question at issue between the parties appears to admit of but one answer, but as the appellant's case has been argued chiefly on authority, it is desirable briefly to consider whether there is any recorded decision which conflicts with this view. The appellant relies chiefly on the case of Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mohammad Yasin Ali Khan (4) decided by the Privy Council in appeal from a decision of this Court reported as Yasin Ali Khan v. Murtuza Husain Khan (5). The parties belonged to a Muhammadan family in which a custom of primogeniture applying to the talukdari property was definitely proved by the evidence. The question arose whether it could be presumed to extend to the non-talukdari property. Their Lordships pointed out that among Hindus there were two kinds of property, ancestral and acquired, which were subject to different modes of devolution where there were no lineal descendants. There was no such distinction among Muhammadans, whose law only recognises one kind of property and one rule of succession. Among Muhammadans, therefore, it was for the person who asserted that the non-talukdari property followed a different rule of succession to prove it. This case is clearly no authority for a suit —

(1) which is between Hindus, and

(2) in which no custom of primogeniture is proved at all.

If this case, on which the appellant chiefly relies, fails to assist him, it is hardly necessary to consider any other. Thakur Ishri Singh v. Thakur Baldeo Singh (6) related to property admitted on both sides to be impartible. As far as this Court is concerned, Ghisa Singh v. Thakur Garaj Singh (7) is a direct authority in favour of the respondent. The Privy Council case of Janki Pershad Singh v. Dwarka Pershad Singh (8) (the Ranimau case) is also in respondent's favour. It is true that that case was decided on the question whether the non-talukdari property had been incorporated with the taluka, whereas in this Court the appellant does not plead incorporation, but the decision clearly implies that in the case of property not incorporated the ordinary law of inheritance applies.

The decision of the lower Court is, in my opinion, correct and I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JITENDRA NATH CHATTERJEE—DEFENDANT—PETITIONER

ASOKE NATH MITTER—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXXIX, r. 7 (1) (a)—Suit to redeem pledge—Order on pledgee to produce articles pledged, whether can be made after he has parted with articles—Revision—High Court, power of, scope of—Time fixed by lower Court for doing certain act, whether can be extended.

Certain articles of jewellery were pledged by the plaintiff with the defendant. In a suit to redeem the articles the defendant pleaded that, in consequence of a settlement between the parties, the plaintiff had abandoned his right to redeem and the articles in question belonged to the defendant, and that the latter had been dealing with them as his property having sold some, broken up others and raised money on some of them. On the application of the plaintiff the trial Court made an order requiring the defendant to produce in Court the articles in suit within one month. The defendant moved the High Court in revision, urging that the trial Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order in question, inasmuch as the articles were not in the custody or possession of the defendant at the time the application was made:

Held, that, although the articles were not in the custody or possession of the defendant, he nevertheless was in a position to redeem them and produce them in Court, and that consequently the trial Court had jurisdiction to make the order for their production under Order XXXIX, rule 7 (i) (a), of the Civil Procedure Code [p. 6, col. 2.]

In exercising the special powers given by section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code it is not for the High Court to enter into the question whether upon the facts a particular order is right or wrong. [p. 6, col. 2.]

Quære.—Whether the High Court, as a Court of Revision, has the power to extend the time fixed by a lower Court for the doing of an act by one of the parties.

Rule against the order of the Sub Judge, First Court, 24 Perganas.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. Chukerbutty (with him Babus Biraj Mohan Mojumdar and Ramendra Mohan Mojumdar), for the Petitioner, urged that the order made under Order XXXIX, rule 7, of the Civil Procedure Code requiring the petitioner to produce the articles and to place the same in the custody of the Court was without jurisdiction. First of all, according to the defence the articles were the property of the defendant, so without a determination of that point the order under Order XXXIX, rule 7, could not be made.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—The Court may make an order for the inspection of the property which is the subject matter of the suit, or as to which any question may arise therein.]

Yes. But the plaintiff must establish a prima facie title to the property.

Then, the defendant dealing with the property as his own was not in possession of all the articles in question. The articles had been pledged to a third person. The Court could not ask the defendant to produce that which was not in his possession. In requiring the defendant to produce that which was not in his possession or control, the Court acted without jurisdiction. The order should not have been made unless it was found that the defendant was liable to produce the ornaments in question. The articles were dealt with by the defendant on an assertion of his right to them. The question was one of title. It was a material irregularity within the meaning of section 115, Civil Procedure Code, to assume that the plaintiff was entitled to have the production of those articles. Further, there was no question of preservation of property involved in this case.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—The question is whether the order can be revised under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.]

In making the order the learned Subordinate Judge acted without jurisdiction. The order, though interlocutory, could be revised under section 115. Referred to Gobind Mohun Doss v. Kunja Behary Doss (1) and Bankey Behari v. Ram Bahadur (2).

Mr. C. C. Ghose (with him Babu Surendra Madhab Mullick), for the Opposite Party, submitted that under Order XXXIX, rule 7, clause (a), the plaintiff was entitled to an order for the inspection as well as for the preservation of the property. The Court below rightly made the order, and as no question of jurisdiction was involved in the case, it could not be revised under section 115. The Court below had jurisdiction to make the order and it did exercise that jurisdiction. The order was an interlocutory order, and the trend of decisions showed that such order should not be revised unless it was absolutely necessary to meet the ends of justice: Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, 6th Edition, page 246.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In this case a Rule was issued calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the order complained of should not be set aside or why such other order should not be passed as to this Court might seem fit.

The order in question was an order made by the learned Subordinate Judge of 24-Parganas to this effect: "The defendant appears to have pawned some of the articles in suit (that is 6 chooris set with stones). He must make arrangements to produce the same in Court within a month."

The suit was one in which the plaintiff was claiming a right to redeem certain articles which he had pledged with the defendant.

One of the defendant's defence was that the plaintiff had no right to redeem the articles, inasmuch as there had been a settlement between the parties and as a part of that settlement the plaintiff had abandoned his right to redeem and that consequently the articles in question were the property of the defendant.

In that suit the plaintiff made an application asking that the defendant should be ordered to produce in Court the unredeemed portion of the pledged articles, and that the same should be placed in the custody of the Court and, then there was an alternative relief asked, with which I need not deal. In the petition the plaintiff alleged, amongst other things, that he believed that the defendant had been wrongfully dealing with the ornaments and had parted with the possession thereof.

The defendant asserted that since the adjustment of the suit, that is the alleged settlement to which I have already referred, the defendant had been dealing with the jewellery as his own property having sold some of them, broken up some others and sold in part and raised money for his own purposes on a few of them along with other jewelleries

It does not appear from the affidavit what the particular articles which the defendant said he had pledged were, but we are informed by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff that the defendant stated in the lower Court that the articles which he had pledged were six chooris and it is obvious that the learned Judge must have had some statement of that kind before him, otherwise he could not have specified the articles in his order. Therefore, it must be taken for the purpose of this case that the articles which the defendant had pledged along with other articles were six chooris.

It is urged on behalf of the defendant that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to make this order. The order was made under Order XXXIX, rule 7 of the Civil Procedure Code, the material part of which is as follows: "1 The Court may, on the application of any party to a suit, and on such terms as it thinks fit,

"(a) make an order for the detention, preservation or inspection of any property which is the subject-matter of such suit, or as to which any question may arise therein." It is clear that the articles in question are part of the subject-matter of the suit. But Mr. Chakerbutty, learned Counsel for the defendant, urged that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order inasmuch as the six chooris were not in the custody or possession of the defendant at the time the application was made.

In my judgment the first part of rule 7 applies to the case where the articles are in the possession, custody or power of the party against whom the order is sought to be made. It is clear in my judgment that the articles in question were not in the custody or possession of the defendant. Therefore, the question is narrowed down to whether it can be said, upon the facts of this case, that the 6 chooris were within the power of the defendant in such a way that the learned Judge had jurisdiction to make an order on him to produce them.

The articles were pledged. One element of a pledge is that the pledgor has in the ordinary course a right to redeem the articles pledged. It was not alleged by the defendant in any part of the affidavits that he was unable to redeem these articles. It was not suggested that the time for redeeming had elapsed or that his pecuniary position was such that he could not redeem them, nor was it alleged in any way that he had no power to redeem them and produce them in Court.

Having regard to these facts and to the terms of the order of the learned Judge, I think that upon the facts of this case it must be taken that the learned Judge satisfied himself that the defendant was in a position to redeem the 6 chooris and produce them in Court. That being so, in my judgment the learned Judge had jurisdiction to make the order. If he had jurisdiction, the matter is at an end. It is not for us, when we are exercising the special powers given to us under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to enter into the question whether upon the facts of this case the order was right or wrong.

For these reasons I think that the Rule should be discharged with costs. Hearing fee five gold mohurs.

I should add that on the application of Mr. Chakerbutty we indicated that we had doubt whether we had power to extend the time for the production of the articles. We have, however, no doubt that upon a proper application, the Court below will extend the time to such period as it may think right.

Co-sharers, position of—Joint land—Possession, exclusive, for long time, effect of—Partition, suit for.

Where land is in the exclusive possession of one co-sharer from a long time, the other co-sharers of the village have no right to disturb his possession except by means of a suit for partition. [p. 7, col. 2.]

Maha Singh v. Bhoga, 7 O. C. 336 and Bhim Shankar Dat v. Ganga Dayal, 11 O. C. 355, distinguished from.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Sitapur, dated 20th March 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, Biswan (Sitapur), dated 30th November 1917.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to plots Nos. 109, 110 and 111 khasra abadi. The allegation of the plaintiffs was that the defendants had made encroachments on the said land by making new constructions thereupon within the last 5 or 6 years. The constructions complained of consist of certain buildings said to have been erected by the defendants and certain cattle-troughs with pegs attached thereto built by them for tying their cattle. The defence was that the buildings in question existed from 30 years and the plaintiffs had no right to have them removed. There was also a claim for the removal of a tree said to have been planted by the defendants on No. 111 khasra abadi 5 or 6 years ago.

The Court of first instance decreed the claim, holding that the constructions complained of had been made 8 years ago, on land which was till then in the exclusive possession of the plaintiffs. The lower Appellate Court, however, dismissed the claim on the bare ground that the proper remedy of the plaintiffs was to apply for the partition of their share.

There can be no doubt that where land is in the exclusive possession of one co-sharer from a long time, the other co-sharers of the village have no right to disturb his possession except by means of a suit for partition. The khasra abadi shows that land No. 110 was occupied as nashistgah or sitting-room of Bisram Singh, who is now represented by the plaintiffs, and that Nos. 109 and 111 were pieces of vacant land lying round about that sitting-room. No. 109 had standing on it at that time 3 imli and 2 nim trees belonging to Bisram Singh and No. 111 was partly used by Bisram Singh as his sahan and was partly lying waste, but beyond this there are no satisfactory indications of the plaintiffs having exercised any exclusive possession over those two plots. The nashistgah appears to have fallen some years ago. The Commissioner found the ruins of a house existing there. Over portions of those ruins the defendants appear to have built the room marked ABCD in the map of the Commissioner. As this room was built, according to the Courts below, about 8 years ago, the plaintiffs are entitled to its removal. But so far as the other buildings go, they stand on uftada land and do not appear to have been in the exclusive possession of the plaintiffs. No relief can be granted to the plaintiffs in regard to them after the lapse of 8 years from the date when possession was assumed over that land by the defendants. Being land originally joint or in other words not in the exclusive possession of either party, the remedy of the plaintiffs, if any, was to seek partition.

Some cattle troughs appear to have been constructed between the plaintiffs' house and the nashistgah close to one of the imli trees, which, according to the khasra abadi, belonged to the predecessors in-title of the plaintiffs. These cattle-troughs with the pegs appertaining thereto will also have to be removed. The decisions in Maha Singh v.

Bhoga (1) and Bhim Shankar Dat v. Ganga Dayal (2), to which the learned Counsel for the defendants respondents refers, are inapplicable, because they relate to land which was lying vacant before it was built over by one of the co-sharers. The principle laid down in Sobha Singh v. Ganga Bakhsh (3) is more applicable to the circumstances of the present case. The decision of the Court below, which directly permits a co-sharer to assume possession of any land which had till then been in the exclusive possession of another co-sharer, by building over it would have the effect of interfering with the rights accruing from long existing possession, which nothing but a partition can disturb.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiffs decreed for possession of the land comprised in No. 110 khasra abadi, so far as it has been encroached on by the building marked ABCD in the map prepared by the Commissioner and the removal of the cattle-troughs and pegs constructed and fixed on plot No. 109 khasra abadi close to the imli trees belonging to the plaintiffs. The defendants will be directed to remove the materials of the said constructions within two months from this date. In case of failure, the plaintiffs will be entitled to have the constructions and pegs removed and charge the defendants with the expenses of removal. The plaintiffs will, in the circumstances, get half of their costs here and hitherto from the defendants, who will get half of their costs from the plaintiffs throughout.

Appeal partly allowed.

Hindu Law—Succession—Full sister, whether should be preferred to half-sister.

Under the Mitakshara as between a full sister and a half-sister the former is the preferential heir to her deceased brother. [p. 9, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Belgaum, in Appeal No. 16 of 1915, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Chikodi, in Civil Suit No. 462 of 1913.

Mr. S. Y. Abhyankar (for Mr. S. R. Gokhale), for the Appellant.

Mr. Nilkant Atmaram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question of law arising in this second appeal is whether as between a full sister and a half-sister the former is the preferential heir or both of them are heirs to their deceased brother under the Mitakshara. Both the lower Courts have answered it in favour of the full sister.

In support of the case for the half-sister it is urged that neither in the Mitakshara nor in the Vyavahara Mayukha is any preference shown to the full sister over the half sister, and that the preference of the whole to the half-blood under the Mitakshara is confined to brothers and nephews, as pointed out in Samat v. Amra (1) and Vithalrao v. Ramrao (2).

There is apparently no decided case in this Presidency directly bearing on the point. The position of the sister as an heir has been considered in several cases: and it is not disputed before me that under the Mitakshara as under the Mayukha the sisters would be heirs, and that they would come in after the grandmother. The ground upon which the sister has been assigned this place as an heir under the Mitakshara has been a matter of some controversy and difference of opinion, as the judgments in Sakharamsadashiv Adhikari v. Sitabai (3), Kesserbai v. Valab Raoji (4), Mulji Purshotum v. Cursandas Natha (5) and Bhagwan v. Warubai (6) would show. The question, which I have to consider, relates to the preference of the whole to the half-blood, whatever the position of sisters as heirs may be in competition with other relations.

It is clear that Vijnanesvara does not refer to sisters in his commentary relating to the order of succession; and the ground upon which her position as an heir is determined may have some bearing upon the present question. I do not think, however, that it is necessary to discuss these grounds. It is clear that if the word "brothers" (bhratra) used in Yajnavalkya's text and in the commentary is interpreted as including sisters, the half-sister will have no case. In that case she will come in after the full sister as the half brother comes in after the full brother. I do not think that that interpretation can be pressed against the half sister, since it has been practically rejected in determining the sister's position as an heir under the Mitakshara.

Quite independently of this interpretation, Vijnanesvara gives a clear indication that the question of preference arising in this appeal must be determined by the test of propinquity: and according to that test the sister is the preferential heir. In dealing with the case of parents, Vijnanesvara applies the test of propinquity and it is significant that he treats the mother's propinquity as of a specially high order, and gives her a place before the father in the list of heirs (see Mitakshara, Ch. II, s. 3, paras. 3, 4 and 5; Stokes' Hindu Law-Books, pp. 442-443). In dealing with the case of brothers he gives preference to brothers of the whole blood on the strength of the text, which he cites in discussing the case of the mother, viz., "to the nearest sapinda the inheritance belongs." He prefers the brothers of the whole blood, "since those of the half-blood are remote through the difference of the mothers" (see Mitakshara, Ch. II, s. 4, paragraph 5; Stokes' Hindu Law Books, p. 445). There is no reason whatever why the same reasoning should not apply to the case of sisters. It is also clear that according to Vijnanesvara's definition of sapindaship given in his commentary on verse No. 52, Acharadhyaya, the full sister would be the nearer heir: and his specific application of it to the case of brothers shows that the same view should prevail in the case of sisters.

In the Vyavahara Mayukha there is no reference in terms to the case of a half-sister, though the case of 'sister' is specifically dealt with. Nilkantha does not accept Vijnanesvara's view as to the preference to be given to the mother over the father. But his preference of the whole to the half-blood is more marked than Vijnanesvara's in the case of brothers, as he assigns a much lower position to half-brothers in the list of heirs. Thus Nilkantha's view, so far as it goes, supports the conclusion in favour of the full sister based on the Mitakshara. No doubt under the Mayukha the anomaly of preferring her as an heir to a half-brother might arise, if her position as an heir is determined by treating her as included in the word 'sister' used by Nilkantha in discussing the sister's place as an heir. That consideration, however, is not relevant to the present point.

It is hardly necessary to go beyond these two books to justify the conclusion in favour of the full sister. As the Nirnaya Sindhu and the Dharma Sindhu are works which may be referred to, I may point out that in determining the order of persons entitled to perform the shradhs both Kamalakara Bhatta and Kashinath, the respective authors of the two treatises, mention the full and half-sisters and give preference to the full sister. I have quoted the relevant passages* from these

*In the absence of a brother's son, shradhs will be performed by the following relatives in this order: father, mother, daughter-in-law, sister and sister's son, because these relatives succeed in this very order to the property (if any) left by the deceased. Katyayana has laid down in his work known as 'Madan Ratna' that "the obsequies of a brother can be performed both by his elder sister as well as by the younger sister. In the absence of a full sister, a step-sister is entitled to perform the obsequies, and failing both, the sons of a full sister, and in their absence, the sons of a step-sister will (perform the shradhs.)—Nirnaya Sindhu—(published by the Nirnaya Sagar Press, 2nd Edn., p. 273, or the edition published by the same press with the Gujarati translation at p. 573).

As between a full-brother and a half-brother, the full (and not the half) brother has the preference. If, however, there is no full brother, the half-brother will perform (the shradhs). Failing a brother, the nephew, and as among nephews also, a full brother's son will have the preference. If there is no nephew of full blood, the nephew of half blood shall offer the funeral cake. Failing a nephew, whether of full blood or half blood, the father, and failing him, the sister shall perform them, and among sisters, the same rules as to preference of full blood over half blood will apply.—Dharma Sindhu—(published by Janardhan Mahadev Gurjar, in the same press, 2nd Edn., p. 282, or the edition published by the same press with the Gujarati translation at p. 485), books for easy reference in a foot-note. I do not wish to lay undue emphasis on these opinions. But they are valuable as referring specifically to the relative position of full and half sisters in the matter of performing the shradhs I have not been able to find any reference to the full and half sisters elsewhere.

In Kesserbai v. Valab Raoji (4) at page 207 of the report Sir Michael Westropp, C. J, has observed that "The Nirnaya Sindhu, which specially names the half sister as entitled to rank (in the performance of ceremonies, whence her heirship may be inferred), places her after, not on a level with, the sister."

Looking at the question from the point of view of the recognition of the rights of the sister as an heir, on the ground of positive acceptance and usage after Vijnanesvara wrote his commentary, there is no reason to suppose that there has been any positive acceptance or usage in favour of ignoring the distinction which exists between sisters of the whole and the half-blood. There is nothing in the reported decisions to countenance such a view, and the fact that the distinction is undoubtedly recognised in the case of brothers and nephews and that it is referred to specifically in relation to sisters in such modern works as the Nirnaya Sindhu and the Dharma Sindhu is undoubtedly against the possible suggestion that the distinction between the whole and the half-blood is not recognised in practice by the Hindu community as regards the sisters.

Lastly, it is urged on the strength of the observations in Samat v. Amba (1) and Vithalrao v. Ramrao (2) that the preference of the whole over the half-blood is confined to brothers and nephews. In neither of these decisions is the case of sisters referred to; and the decisions relate to male relations who come in as heirs after the sisters. The case of sisters is really indistinguishable from that of brothers so far as the test of propinquity is concerned. Westropp, C. J., in dealing with the point that arose in Samat's case (1) observes that in the Mitakshara and the Mayukha there is no distinction made on the basis of the full and half-blood relationship except in the case of brothers and brothers' sons. I cannot believe that in making the above observation in Samat's case (1) Sir Michael Westropp had any intention to express a dissent from the opinion which he had expressed in Kesserbai's case (4) as to the full and half sisters, and to which I have referred above. Besides in that case the question of preference among sapindas of the same degree of descent from the common ancestor did not arise. Even according to the test adopted in Samat's case (1) that the nearest Gotraja Spinda succeeds, the full sister would be the nearer heir. It is hardly necessary to refer to the grounds mentioned by Nilkantha in determining the sister's place as an heir next after the grandmother, relating to her having both sapindaship and gotrajatva, though there may be no community of gotra (sagotrata). But I prefer to distinguish the case on the ground that the present point is not decided there and the ratio decidendi does not involve the result that there is no distinction to be made between the full and half-sisters. As regards Vithalrao's case (2), it is not possible to treat it as deciding or expressing any opinion as to the present point. Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., has based his decision on the principle of stare decisis and Mr. Justice Ranade's observations have reference to relations, who according to decided cases come in after the sisters. His observations relating to different kinds of propinquity have no application to the case of sisters, which, as I have already stated, is not distinguishable from that of brothers so far as the difference between the whole and the half-blood is concerned.

In the view I take of these two decisions, it is not necessary to consider the argument urged on behalf of the first respondent (i. e., the full sister) that the decisions in Ganga Sahai v. Kesri (7), Sham Singh v. Kishun Sahai (8) and Nachiappa Gounden v. Rangasami Gounden (9) require that the view taken in Vithalrao v. Ramrao

(2) should be re considered. The argument is that, as pointed in Ganga Sahai's case (7), "the preference of the whole blood...is confined to members of the same class, or, to use the language of the Judges of the High Court in Suba Singh v. Sarafaraz Kunwar (10), to 'sapindas of the same degrees of descent from the common ancestor.'" If it had been necessary to examine this argument and to re consider the decision in Vithalrao's case (2), I should have referred this appeal to a Division Court. As it is, I feel no difficulty in deciding the point in favour of the full sister I need hardly add that if Ganga Sahai's case (7) is to be accepted as overruling Vithalrao v. Ramrao (2), as to which I express no opinion, I should not consider any independent examination of this point necessary at all, as in that event Ganga Sahai's case (7) would settle it in favour of the full sisters. I have thought it necessary to examine the point with reference to the sister's position as an heir in this Presidency, in consequence of the decisions in Samat v. Amra (1) and Vithalrao v. Ramrao (2) quite apart from Ganga Sahai's case (7).

I, therefore, confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs

Hindu Law—Joint family—Widow, position of—Partition, widow whether can enforce.

In a joint Hindu family, a widow has no right to claim a partition of the share which belonged to her husband, because by reason of survivorship that share lapses or devolves on the remaining male members of the family and the widow is only entitled to maintenance. In a separate family the widow inherits the share of her husband and can, subject to any equities which may arise, claim a partition in the same way as any other co-sharer, though her interest is in certain respects of a limited nature. [p. 13, col. 1.]

A Hindu widow, however, who inherits a share in any property from her husband and succeeds in getting mutation of names effected in her favour, is for the time being a recorded co-sharer of that property, for she represents the estate as against the other co-sharers, though her interest is limited to one for life and she has no power of alienation except in case of necessity. She has the right to obtain a partition of the share recorded in her name, unless by reason of bad faith or other cause there is a bar on equitable grounds [p. 12, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareli, dated the 14th August 1918, upholding that of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 23rd May 1918.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Pandit Harkaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The property in dispute belonged to Ganpat Singh, who died leaving a widow, Musammat Janki Kuar. He had a brother, Gayadin Singh, who had died in his lifetime without leaving any issue The plaintiffs are the first cousins of Ganpat Singh. They alleged that Ganpat Singh was living jointly with them and that after his death the name of Musammat Janki Kuar was entered in the revenue papers in respect of that property. On the strength of the above entry Musammat Janki Kuar applied for a partition of the share recorded in her name but was opposed by the plaintiffs. The Revenue Court before which the application for partition was pending directed the plaintiffs to get their title established by the Civil Court.

The plaintiffs assert that they were in possession of the disputed property, though the name of Musammat Janki Kuar was entered in the revenue papers in respect of it; and they sue for a declaration that Musammat Janki Kuar was not entitled to claim a partition or in the alternative for possession of the disputed property, in case Musammat Janki Kuar is found to be in possession of it.

The Courts below held that Ganpat Singh was living separately from the plaintiffs at the time of his death and that Musammat Janki Kuar was entitled to claim a partition. The contention of the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants is that as Musammat Janki Kuar has been in possession of the property in dispute as a Hindu widow for her life in lieu of maintenance under a compromise, she is not entitled to claim partition. The compromise in question was filed by the parties to the present suit in the mutation proceeding arising on the death of Ganpat Singh. It declared that Musammat Janki Kuar shall remain in possession and occupation of the property left by her husband for her life and take its profits and maintain her possession over the same in every way (har tarah par qubza rakkhen) that the present plaintiffs shall have no power to interfere therewith during her lifetime but will be entitled to get the property on her death and that Musammat Janki Kuar shall not have any power to alienate the property in any form. It further provided that the mutation of names in respect of the said property shall be effected in favour of Musammat Janki Kuar, that the present plaintiffs shall pay her the profits of her share after explaining the accounts, that if they did not do so, Musammat Janki Kuar would be entitled to recover her share of the profits by suit and that the present plaintiffs shall have, in any case, no objection to Musammat Janki Kuar remaining in possession and occupation of the sir land, left by her husband, for her lifetime.

Section 107 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901) allows any recorded co-sharer of a mahal to make an application for partition. A Hindu widow who inherits a share in any property from her husband and succeeds in getting mutation of names effected in her favour is for the time being a recorded co-sharer of that property, for she represents the estate as against the other co sharers, though her interest is limited to one for life and she has no power of alienation except in case of necessity. In Mahadeo Singh v. Musammat Deo Koer (1) and Jhunna Kuar v. Ohain Sukh (2) the right of such a widow to obtain a partition of the share recorded in her name was recognised.

The estate of a Hindu widow is not a mere estate for life and as pointed out in Mohadeay Kooer v. Haruk Narain (3) and Durga Nath Pramanik v. Chintamoni Dassi (4), she is entitled like any other share holder to claim a partition of the share which she has inherited from her husband, unless by reason of bad faith or other cause there is a bar on equitable grounds. A bona fide partition cannot prejudice the rights of the reversionary heirs of her husband on her death. Where there is any danger of prejudice, it is open to the Court directing the partition to do anything necessary to safeguard their interests.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants contends that by virtue of the compromise she was not given any higher right than a right to claim her share of the profits and to hold possession of the sir land. She was not, however, a mere assignee of a share of the profits in lieu of her maintenance. She was given the entire property left by her husband and allowed unrestricted enjoyment thereof in any manner she liked so long as the property was not alienated. She did not hold the same merely in lieu of her maintenance. She had an interest therein which made her a co sharer for the period of her life and if a partition was necessary in order that she might enjoy such rights as were conferred on her by the compromise it should not be refused. The decisions in Bhupal Singh v. Mohan Singh (5) and Neman v. Jas Kunwar (6) do not apply because in those cases the widow was granted some land merely to provide her with means for her subsistence to which she was entitled as a member of a joint Hindu family. In Kailashi Kunwar v. Badri Prashad (7), the widow was similarly put in possession for life of a share in certain property, the profits of which were to be paid to her in lieu of maintenance to which she was entitled as a member of the joint family. In a joint Hindu family a widow has no right to claim a partition of the share which belonged to her husband because by reason of survivorship that share lapses or devolves on the remaining male members of the family and the widow is only entitled to maintenance. In a separate family the widow inherits the share of her husband and can, subject to any equities which may arise, claim a partition in the same way as any other co sharer, though her interest is in certain respects of a limited nature. If it were not so, her position would be precarious and it would be within the power of every co-sharer to prevent her from realizing her share of the profits and to compel her to starve, until she is in a position to sue for her share of the profits and recover the same if she gets a decree. If her enjoyment of her interest cannot be secured without a partition, a restraint on alienation would make no difference.

The plaintiffs are not entitled to the declaration asked for.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Lease in favour of one person—Subsequent lease in favour of another—Rent, suspension of.

Where a lessor dispossesses the lessee from a portion of the holding the rent due by the lessee to the lessor is suspended. Similarly, where a landlord having let out a portion of the land to one person lets it out again with other lands to a subsequent lessee the rent is also suspended. The landlord having failed to perform the duty he had undertaken, the suspension of rent is equitable. [p. 14, col. 2]

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This appeal is preferred by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Rangpur, dated the 31st August 1916. The plaintiff sued for rent, first of all, for 9 months of the year 1318 and for the whole of the year 1319. That part of the claim has been decreed in full, and no question arises in this appeal with regard to it. The other part of the claim was for the years 1320 and 1321 and the rent in respect thereof was sued for on the basis of a compromise decree. That compromise decree was entered into in a former rent suit which the plaintiff brought for the years 1316, 1317 and the first 3 months of the year 1318. What had been the original state of affairs was this. There had been a demise to the defendant of 1,700 bighas of land, the rent being calculated at 12 annas a bigha, namely, Rs. 1,175. In the former rent suit, the defendant said that he was entitled to an abatement of rent and the reasons why he said that he was entitled to an abatement were, first, dispossession by title paramount of a portion by another Zemindar and, secondly, diluvion of another portion. The compromise provided that the rent for the 9 months of 1318 and the whole of 1319 should be Rs. 1125 for the five plots ga, gha, una, cha, and ja, on the map filed with the petition of compromise. That is the rent that has been decreed from 1320, and both parties agree that the document in the vernacular means that from the beginning of the year 1320, the rent of the 1,520 bighas of land of plots ga, gha, una, cha and ina, marked on the map was to be Rs. 1,140 and it was stated that khas possession of the plot ina, had been delivered to the defendant. The whole dispute in this case turns on this plot Ina. It will be noticed that the demise in the petition of compromise is of these plots ga, gha, una cha and ina, at an entire rent of Rs. 1,140. It is impossible to say what portion of that rent is attributable to plot ina. One may be able to guess; but no one can say that each and every portion of this sum of Rs. 1,140 does not issue out of plot ina, just as much as all other plots. It is one entire rent for the demise of all these plots. What has been found as a fact and it is not open to doubt is that the tenant has never been inducted into possession of this plot ina by the landlord. The statement that he has been given khas possession is wholly inaccurate, and the landlord took no steps in order to carry out that term of the arrangement. The learned Judge held that, in the circumstances, the landlord not having performed his duty by inducting the defendant into possession of plot ina, according to the terms of the demise, the rent was suspended. That is the point that has been urged against in this appeal. In England there is no difference between the case where the landlord has ousted the tenant from a portion of the holding and the case where the landlord has let out the property to the lessee having already put an earlier and prior lessee in possession of it, and in such cases the rent is suspended. It is only necessary to refer in support of that statement to the case of Neale v. Mackenzie (1). That was a decision of the Exchequer Chamber and the case has always been considered as good law. It is said that these decisions should not be applied to the system of law in this country and reliance has been placed on the decisions in Annada Prosad Mukhopadhya v. Mathura Lal Nag Mazumdar (2). The statement relied on is to be found at page 589 of the report. That decision may be a good decision in the circumstances of that particular case. But the rule that rent is suspended on account of the dispossession of the tenant by the landlord from a portion of the holding has been recognised in a number of cases in this Court and, in my opinion, it is not open to question now. It may be noted that the case of Stokes v Cooper (3) relied on by one of the learned Judges who decided the case of Annada Prosad Mukhopadhya v. Mathura Lal Nag Mazumdar (2) has been disapproved, first of all, in the case of Smith v. Raleigh (4). It is quite true that it is only a ruling of a Nisi Prius. But the Judge who made that ruling was Lord Ellenborough, C. J. It has also been disapproved in another case—I have not got the reference at present at hand—and the learned Judge who disapproved it was Baron Parke. It cannot be considered that the ruling of the Judge at Nisi Prius in Stokes v. Cooper (3) is good law. However, the rule has been recognized in India that in a case where the lessor has dispossessed the lessee from a portion of the holding, the rent is suspended and I see no reason why the other portion of the same rule should not be applied, namely, that where the landlord having let out a portion of the land to an earlier lessee lets it out again with other lands to a subsequent lessee the rent is also suspended. The landlord having failed to perform the duty he had undertaken, the rent ought to be suspended. I see nothing inequitable in holding this. I agree with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge of the Court below. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at one hundred and fifty rupees.

Oudh Courts Act (XIV of 1891), s. 8—Appeals, consolidation of, whether permissible—Pecuniary valuation—Bench of two Judges, hearing by.

Where in separate suits between the same parties, separate decrees are prepared and there is a separate appeal against each decree, the appeals cannot, for the purposes of pecuniary jurisdiction, be consolidated, so as to make the appeals triable by a Bench consisting of two Judges. [p. 15, col 2]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 14th February 1916.

Mr. H. C. Dutt and Babu Gaya Prasad, for the Appellants.

Babus Ram Chandra and Chhail Behari Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants in these five cases were defendants in five suits brought by the plaintiff, Radha Kishan, for the purpose of recovering certain sums alleged to be due in respect of five promissory notes executed on various dates by one or other of these defendants. The Subordinate Judge tried all the suits together and has decreed the plaintiff's claim. The total of the principal sums secured by the promissory notes in suit comes to Rs. 9,550. The defendants admitted the execution of these notes, and in reply to the plaintiff's claim set up a plea of part payment to the extent of Rs. 8,000. The case put forward by the defendants in this connection was that, on the 18th March 1914, they wrote a letter which was signed by Khushal Das and sent to the plaintiff Radha Kishan asking him to come and receive the money which was due to him. No particular sum was specified in the letter. It is said that on the 21st of March Radha Kishan came to the defendants' house and received from them a sum of Rs. 8,000 made up of 500 sovereigns and Rs. 500. A receipt (Exhibit B1) was put forward which was alleged to have been executed by the plaintiff Radha Kishan, as an acknowledgment of his having received this money. Radha Kishan's reply to the defence was that he had not received the letter dated the 18th March 1914 (Exhibit B2). He further denied that he had ever executed the receipt (Exhibit B1), relied upon by the defendants. The burden of proof being upon the defendants they led evidence in the case. Certain evidence was put forward by the plaintiff by way of rebuttal. The result has been that the claim has been decreed, the Subordinate Judge having come to a finding that the defendants' story of payment of this sum of Rs. 8,000 was untrue. The defendants appeal against the decrees in each of the five suits which were before the Court below. A preliminary point was raised by Mr. Dutt the learned Counsel for the appellants to the effect that inasmuch as the aggregate sum in dispute between the parties exceeded Rs. 10,000 these cases ought to be tried by a Bench, regard being had to the provisions of section 8 of the Oudh Courts Act (XIV of 1891). Reliance was placed on the wording of this section which, it was said, was identical with the language of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure which relates to the value of the subject-matter of cases which are appealable to His Majesty in Council. Regarding appeals to the Privy Council a special rule is laid down in Order XLV, rule 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure, by which suits may be consolidated for the purpose of pecuniary valuation. There is no such provision regarding suits in which appeals lie to this Court and it seems to me that the contention that these cases ought to be heard by a Bench is untenable. There were five separate decrees which were prepared in the Court below and there is a separate appeal against each decree. I hold that the appeals are triable by a single Judge.

Proceeding now to the merits of the case the learned Counsel has criticised at considerable length the observations passed by the Subordinate Judge upon the evidence which was put forward by the defendants-appellants in support of their story that they had paid a sum of Rs. 8,000 to the plaintiff. The oral and documentary evidence put in by the appellants must be considered together. I shall deal first with the letter (Exhibit B2) which purports to bear date of 18th of March 1914 and which, it is said, was sent to the plaintiff by way of inviting him to come to the defendants' house to receive payment.

This document was produced by the defendants and the explanation of their being able to produce it, notwithstanding the fact that it was sent to the plaintiff, is as follows. It is said that the letter was taken by hand to the residence of the plaintiff and that on the back of it he recorded a note written in Hindi to the effect that he would attend at the defendants' house on the following Saturday, which was the 21st of March 1914. A witness named Girja Dial, who is the Patwari of the village in which the defendants are proprietors and in which they reside, deposes that he wrote the letter under the instructions of the defendants. Another witness one Ghulam Ali who admits that he is illiterate and that he is a servant of the defendants says he took the letter to the plaintiff Radha Kishan who wrote something on the back of it and returned it to him. The learned Subordinate Judge in connection with this endorsement recorded on the letter (Exhibit B2) has pointed out that no evidence has been given to prove that the writing is the writing of Radha Kishan. That was one of the reasons which led the Court below to reject this piece of evidence. So far as Ghulam Ali's evidence is concerned it is open to the criticism that it comes from the mouth of one who is under the control of the defendants. We also have the fact that Ghulam Ali not being literate is unable to swear to the handwriting contained in the endorsement and I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that this document (Exhibit B2) is not a reliable piece of evidence so as to justify a finding in the defendants' favour One point which was made by the Subordinate Judge against the Patwari's evidence was that he had failed to make any record in his official diary of the fact that he had written this letter on behalf of the defendants. I do not think there is much in this argument because I am not aware that it is the duty of the Patwari to make entries relating to matters of this kind in his official register. At the same time I am unable to hold in favour of the appellants that this document, as a matter of fact, actually reached Radha Kishan and that it was for this reason that he came to the defendants' house to receive the money which they say they paid him. We next have to deal with the evidence relating to the actual payment. Here the important document is Exhibit B1, a document written in Hindi language and which purports to bear the signature of Radha Kishan in Urdu. The signature of the plaintiff is admittedly a peculiar one. The wording of the signature reads "Radha Kishan urf Radhe Kishan ba kalam khud." The first witness who deposes regarding the payment is a man named Param Hans. According to this man's story he saw the defendants actually paying Rs. 8,000 to the plaintiff. The witness is the man who wrote the receipt. He says he wrote it at the plaintiff's request and signed it. He further deposes that two witnesses named Bhawani Shankar and Bakhtawar attested the receipt The witness was asked to explain why Radha Kishan did not write the receipt himself, it being an admitted fact that he can write. As to this the explanation was that Radha Kishan had a pimple on his hand which prevented his writing with ease and that it was for this reason that he requested the witness to prepare the receipt. Bhawani Shankar who is a cultivator and who is one of the attesting witnesses to the so-called receipt supported the evidence of Param Hans. The third witness in this connection was a chaukidar named Kundan. Kundan could only say that the money was paid in his presence. He was not present at the time when the receipt was prepared. He deposed that just at the time the receipt was about to be written out he had to leave to attend to some business of his own. It may be noted that the witness Bakhtawar was not put forward. He seems to have evaded service and when at length service was obtained the defendants said he had colluded with the other side. The defendant Khushal himself gave evidence in support of the defence story. The evidence which was put forward in rebuttal tended to show that at or about the time the present suits were filed the defendants were in pecuniary difficulties. It was sought to prove that the defendant Khushal was negotiating with a money-lender named Jagannath to raise a loan of Rs. 21,000 for the purpose of discharging the debt due to Radha Kishan in respect of these promissory notes and of satisfying some other debts which were against him. A draft deed of mortgage was produced by a witness called Ishri the son of Jagannath. This, it is said, was drawn up at the time negotiations were going on between Khushal Das and Jagannath, and it was put forward with the object of proving an admission made in the document to the effect that the money owing in respect of these promissory notes was still outstanding. The story about how this draft was prepared and how it came to be produced in Court did not satisfy the learned Subordinate Judge. He regarded it as a very dubious piece of evidence, an opinion which I share with him. At the same time it is to be noted that Khushal the defendant, although he denied that any draft deed of mortgage had been prepared, nevertheless admitted that he had been consulting Jagannath with the object of raising a loan to discharge certain debts of considerable amount which he owed. He said, however, that these negotiations between himself and Jagannath took place subsequent to the payment made to the plaintiff. He says that he entered into dealings with Jagannath in the month of Baisakh; the suits in the present case were filed in the Hindi month of Chait. Now as regards the alleged signature of Radha Kishan on this receipt (Exhibit B1) a certain document (Exhibit W3) was put forward. Radha Kishan denied that he ever signed his name in the form in which it appears on this receipt, that is to say, "Radha Kishan urf Radhe Kishan." He was confronted with this registered document (Exhibit W3), a power-of-attorney, which had been executed in the year 1903. On that document a signature of Radha Kishan was to be found written in the same way as the signature on this receipt, that is to say, Radha Kishan alias Radhe Kishan. The plaintiff has had to admit that this was his signature and he gave a description of the circumstances in which the signature was written. He had prepared a document in which his name was spelt in one way but he signed his name in another way, and the registering officer insisted that he should write his signature with both spellings in order to prevent any doubt being thrown upon the genuineness of the document. We have it, therefore, that on one occasion some 11 years before the date of the receipt which we are now considering Radha Kishan did sign his name in this way. I have not, however, been able to satisfy myself that there is any striking resemblance between the writing of the two signatures. The Subordinate Judge observes that he noticed some similarity between the writings but was of opinion that notwithstanding the similarity it was not proved that the signature on Exhibit B1 was Radha Kishan's own signature. A mysterious point in connection with Exhibit W3 is, how it came into the possession of these defendants. So far as the record goes, it appears that it was produced in Court by one of the defendants himself. An explanation was asked as to where the document came from and it was suggested that a witness named Gauri, who was examined as the first defence witness, had been called upon to produce it and had produced it. There is on the record a summons addressed to this witness in which he was asked to produce any document in his possession bearing the signature of Radha Kishan. No particular document such as Exhibit W3 was specified in the summons. It is further apparent from the record that Gauri did appear in Court and that he deposed that he had not in his possession any document which bore Radha Kishan's signature. It seems to me quite clear, therefore, that Exhibit W3 was not produced by the witness Gauri. I must, therefore, it seems to me, assume that this document somehow or other got into possession of the defendants and it is by no means unlikely, as has been argued by the learned Counsel for the respondent, that the document was got hold of in some underhand way for the purpose of fabricating a signature upon Exhibit B1 in imitation of the signature on Exhibit W3. I agree with the learned Counsel for the appellants that some of the reasons given by the Subordinate Judge for discrediting the defence evidence are unsubstantial, but one thing is clear, namely, that it was for the defendants to explain in particular how they came to be in possession of such a large sum of money as Rs. 8,000 on the 21st of March 1914. It cannot happen often that people in the position of these defendants have in their house a bag containing 500 sovereigns, and this part of the story strikes me as being very peculiar. It is true that there is evidence in the case that the defendants are men in a big way of business in the hide trade. They seem to have got some concession from the Nepal Government for the export of hides and apparently they deal in considerable sums of money. At the same time the evidence leaves no doubt that when the plaintiff was pressing for his money shortly before the present suits were instituted, the defendants were short of cash. Khushal admits that he owed a large sum of money, Rs. 18,000, to the Nepal Darbar and I am, therefore, disposed to doubt this story which he now tells that he had in his possession a sum of Rs. 8,000 on the date on which he says he paid it to the plaintiff. He was asked in cross-examination how he got together this sum of Rs. 8,000; his only answer was that some of it represented proceeds of hides which he had sold and that the rest he had acquired as income from his share in the village in which he lives. I am not satisfied that this is a convincing story. Again when describing his negotiations with the money-lender Jagannath, Khushal made certain statements which were very far from being definite. He said that the Rs. 18,000 which he owed to the Nepal Darbar was due in respect of the instalment of his lease which was to fall due in the month of September or October. He next qualified this statement, and it is difficult to ascertain from his answers what he really meant to say in this connection. He was probably trying to make out that his negotiations for money with Jagannath took place at a much later period than they really took place, that is to say, some considerable time after he had, according to his own story, paid this sum of Rs. 8,000 to the plaintiff. I have carefully scrutinized all the evidence in the case and the impression which it creates in my mind is the same as it created in the mind of the learned Subordinate Judge. To put the matter shortly, it is not convincing evidence upon which any Court could rely for the purpose of finding definitely that, as a matter of fact, the sum of Rs. 8,000 had been paid to the plaintiff by the defendants on the 21st of March 1914. The result, therefore, is that the defendants failed to discharge the burden of proof which was upon them and the Court had no alternative but to pass the decree which it has already passed. I am unable to hold in favour of the appellants that the judgment of the lower Court is wrong. On the contrary I am satisfied that it is a right decision. I dismiss all these appeals with costs accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 9, scope of—Pre-emption suit—Sale of endowed property—Idol, whether necessary party—Hindu Law—Sale by one brother—Knowledge of other brother—Consent—Presumption.

In a suit for pre-emption in respect of property endowed to an idol, the idol is a necessary party, and unless it is impleaded as a defendant, the suit must fail on the ground that a decree cannot be recorded against a party who is not actually before the Court. [p. 19, col. 1.]

Order I, rule 9, of the Civil Procedure Code deals with cases where the Court can deal with the matter in controversy with regard to the rights and interests of the parties actually before it. [p. 19, col. 2.]

Where one brother in a Hindu family sells his property and there is no evidence of any quarrel, there is a strong probability that the other brother knows of the sale. [p. 18, col. 2.]

Mr. Gulzari Lal (with him the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru), for the Appellant.

Mr. N. C. Vaish (with him Dr. Surendra Nath Sen), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The property was sold on 21st of February 1916. The vendee, although not actually a co-sharer, was a mortgagee in possession from the vendor and his brothers. On the following July (long before the institution of the present suit) the vendee endowed the property. The present suit was instituted on the very last day of limitation by the vendor's own brother without making the Thakurji a party. The first Court dismissed it on the ground that the Thakurji was a necessary party to the suit. It held that the evidence as to the consent to the sale was not sufficient. We may say in passing that there is a strong probability when one brother in a Hindu family sells his property, and there is no evidence of any quarrel, that the other brother knows of the sale. We need hardly say that it stands to reason that where two Hindu brothers have not quarrelled, a brother desiring to sell his property would be only too pleased to sell his property to his own brother rather than to a stranger, if his brother was in a position and wished to buy. The lower Appellate Court held that the Thakurji was a necessary party and reversed the decree of the Court of first instance upon the ground that the suit against the Thakurji would not be barred. The Court thought that Article 120 of the Limitation Act would apply. We must bear in mind that the Thakurji was a necessary party to the present suit. If the effect of the deed of endowment was to vest the property in the Thakurji, then possession could only be got by virtue of a decree against the Thakurji. In the course of the argument the learned Counsel on behalf of the respondent was forced to admit that if the vendee had re-sold the property to an outsider, a decree for possession by pre-emption could not possibly be made in the absence of that third party. So far as the original vendee is concerned, he would have a complete answer to a suit for possession when he proved that he had re-sold the property and that it was no longer in his possession. An attempt has been made to distinguish between the Thakurji and a third party who had purchased property, because it is said that the possession is still in the hands of the defendant in his capacity as trustee. But it seems to us that he is in possession in an entirely different capacity. He was not sued as trustee, he was sued in his personal capacity. No doubt the Court has power to add a defendant. The Court, of course, would not add a defendant where it was clear that at the time he would be added as a defendant the claim was barred as against him. The Court below considered, as we have already stated, that Article 120 is the appropriate Article, and that the suit would not be barred as against the Thakurji if he was made a party. We think it unnecessary in the present case to decide what is the appropriate Article, but the fact remains that the Thakurji even upto the present time has not been made a party to the suit. We are asked that even now this Court should amend the pleadings by adding the Thakurji as a defendant. Bearing in mind the circumstances of the present case, namely, the relationship between the vendor and the pre-emptor and the date upon which the suit was instituted, we do not think that this is a case in which we are called upon to add parties at this stage. It is said that under the provisions of Order I, rule 9, the suit ought not to be dismissed by reason of the non-joinder of the Thakurji. A careful perusal of that rule shows that it only deals with cases where the Court can deal with the matter in controversy in the suit with regard to the rights and interests of the parties actually before it. The matter involved in the present case is the possession of the property sold. On the finding of the Court below, and, in our opinion also, this property is now in the possession of the Thakurji and it is impossible that we can give a decree against the Thakurji who is not before us. We must allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

Landlord and tenant—Lease—Covenant against alienation in permanent agricultural lease, validity of—Breach of covenant—Re-entry, right of Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 11—Agricultural lease, whether transferable.

A lease in respect of agricultural lands covered by section 11 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is transferable. [p 20, col. 2.]

A condition in a permanent lease restraining alienation is not void by itself, but the lessor is not entitled to eject the transferee from the lessee unless the lessor reserves to himself the right of re-entry or the lease provides that it would be void in case of a breach of the covenant against alienation. [p. 20, col. 2.]

Keshab Lal v. Madhu Sudan Pal, 6 Ind. Cas. 685; 12 C. L. J. 126, Nil Madhab Sikdar v. Narattam Sikdar, 17 C. 826; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1035, relied on.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Backergunj, dated the 10th of March 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, Barisal, dated the 16th August 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Nanda Lal Sarkar (with him Babu Hit Lal Guha), for the Appellants.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment. The tenancy—nimhowla—was created by a lease, dated the 20th October 1876. The lease provided that the tenant would not be able to sell the nimhowla to any one else except the lessor. Defendant No. 1, son of the original tenant, sold the lands to defendant No. 2 and took a miras ejara lease under him. The tenant was empowered to relinquish the holding. See Ramchurn Singh v. Raining Cool Association, Ltd. (1). In that case the option of relinquishment was given and the contract was held to be good. See also section 171, Bengal Tenancy Act. My submission is that the sale to a stranger is void as it is contrary to the express terms of the contract.

Babu Birendra Kumar Dey (with him Babu Bepin Chandra Bose), for the Respondent.—The only question is whether this contract is valid and if so, can a suit for ejectment be brought to evict the transferee. If it is heritable and transferable, as it appears to be from the terms of the lease, then the holding is permanent. See sections 3, 11, Bengal Tenancy Act. The condition in the lease is void. It is nobody's case that the land is not mourasi mokarrari tenure. The general principle of law is that one cannot put restraints on the power of alienation. Ordinarily a tenant cannot force relinquishment on the landlord.

Babu Nanda Lal Sarkar replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sought to eject the defendants under the following circumstances. The father of defendant No. 1 got a nimhowla right in the lands in suit by a lease dated the $\frac{\text{14th of Kartick 1283}}{\text{20th October 1876}}$. There is a provision in the lease restraining sale of the nimhowla to any other person excepting the lessor. Defendant No. 1 succeeded his father and sold the lands to defendant No. 2 and took a mirash ejara lease under him. The plaintiffs relied upon the above provision restraining alienation and further prayed that the defendant No. 1 might reconvey the property to them upon the receipt of Rs. 40 as provided for in the lease. The defendants contend that the provision in the kabuliyat against alienation is void and that the plaintiffs are not entitled to any khas possession. It is admitted that nimhowlas in Backergunj are permanent and heritable tenures. This lease is in respect of agricultural lands and if it was covered by section 11 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it would be transferable. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that a clause restraining alienation in a document of this character before the date of the Act is operative. It is to be noticed that in this lease no right of re entry is reserved to the lessors. It was held in Nil Madhab Sikdar v. Narattam Sikdar (2) that the plaintiffs are not entitled to eject the defendants when the lease contains no clause giving the lessor a right of re entry or providing that the lease shall become void in case of a breach of the covenant against alienation. That case is based upon the decision in Sonet Kooer v. Himmut Bahadoor (3). No doubt a condition in a permanent lease restraining alienation is not void by itself, as has been held in Keshab Lal v. Madhu Sudan Pal (4) but the plaintiffs not having reserved any right of re-entry, I agree with the Courts below that they are not entitled to eject the defendants. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

RAMPADARATH SINGH AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

SOHRAI KOERI—RESPONDENT.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 29, 147A—Landlord and tenant—Compromise changing rate of rent whether lease—Registration, whether necessary—

RAMPADARATH SINGH v. SOHRAI KOERI.

Enhancement of rent, legality of—Status, change of, effect of—Compromise relating to matters extraneous to suit, whether can be recorded.

Where a compromise is effected between a landlord and a tenant varying the terms of the contract previously existing between them in respect of property valued at more than Rs. 100, section 17 of the Registration Act does not operate if that compromise is embodied in a decree of the Court even though the compromise creates rights and liabilities extraneous to the suit. The only exception is where the compromise creates a lease requiring registration under the provisions of the Registration Act. [p. 21, col 2; p. 23, col. 1.]

A decree based upon and embodying a compromise, which does not transfer any interest in land but merely changes the terms of the contract on which a tenant was already holding, does not amount to a lease within the meaning of clause (d) of section 17 of the Registration Act [p. 23, col. 1.]

Section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply where a compromise changes the status of a tenant [p. 22, col. 2.]

There is no substantial difference between rule 3 of Order XXIII of the Civil Procedure Code and section 147A of the Bengal Tenancy Act in regard to the jurisdiction of a Court to record a compromise, and there is no reason why a settlement of disputes forming the subject-matter of a suit should not be regarded as the consideration for the contract relating to matters extraneous to the suit. [p. 22, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Gaya.

Messrs. Kailashpati and Nawal Kishore Prashad, II, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sivanandan Rai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—This second appeal arises out of a compromise decree made by the Munsif of Aurangabad in 1913 in a rent suit.

The plaintiffs and the defendant in that suit were in dispute about the rent and area of a holding. There was also a dispute as to whether the rent was entirely payable in cash or whether it was payable partly in cash and partly in kind. The result of the compromise was that the plaintiffs agreed to take a lump sum of Rs. 64 on account of the rent of the years 1316 to 1319 F. S, that in respect of future years the rent was fixed at Rs. 78 per year for ever in cash and that the area of the holding was to be reckoned at 12 bighas.

The suit out of which the present appeal arises is in respect of the rent of the years 1321 to 1323 F. S.

The plaintiffs seek to enforce the compromise and claim Rs. 78 per annum. The defendant denies that the compromise was legal and admits only Rs. 43-2-0 per annum.

The District Judge has found that the cadastral survey record stating the rent to be entirely cash and to amount to Rs. 43-2-0 per annum, correctly shows the state of affairs existing immediately before the compromise, and he has declined to admit into evidence the compromise decree on the ground that it related to matters outside the scope of the suit and, therefore required registration.

The plaintiffs accordingly appeal.

Now in their behalf the first ground taken is, that the Full Bench decision of this Court in Charu Chandra Mitra v. Sambhu Nath Pandey (1) clearly shows that the learned District Judge was wrong. It has been held in that case that, where a compromise is effected between a landlord and a tenant varying the terms of the contract previously existing between them in respect of property valued at more than Rs. 100, section 17 of the Indian Registration Act does not operate if that compromise is embodied in a decree of Court, even though the compromise creates rights and liabilities extraneous to the suit. The only exception recognized by their Lordships is where the compromise creates a lease requiring registration under the provisions of the Registration Act.

Therefore, in the present case the view taken by the learned District Judge, which it must be noticed was arrived at before the Full Bench judgment, is incorrect.

The learned Vakil for the appellants next contends that the compromise was in fact not outside the scope of the suit inasmuch as it purported to settle that the proper rate of rent payable upon the holding was Rs. 78. This contention is not tenable in view of the finding of the District Judge that the rent was Rs. 43-2-0. This is a finding of fact which cannot be assailed in second appeal. Moreover, it does not appear from the terms of the compromise decree that there was any adjudication at all as to the rate of rent. The sum of Rs. 64 decreed for the years 1316 to 1319 was a lump sum and there was no adjudication whatever as to the proper rate of rent payable during these or any previous years. The contract to pay a rate of Rs. 78 was clearly foreign to the suit and the argument that the decree relating thereto is res judicata must fail.

But the learned Vakil for the appellant succeeds on his first point.

In reply it is contended on behalf of the defendant respondent that the compromise is subject to the provisions of section 147A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That is perfectly true. It is contended that the Full Bench decision, above referred to, related to a compromise recorded under Order XXIII of the Civil Procedure Code which is not applicable to a rent suit. In my opinion, there is no force in this argument because the terms of the first part of section 147A of the Bengal Tenancy Act are identical with the terms of Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, and the rule laid down by the Full Bench is of general application.

The learned Vakil for the respondent next contends that, even if this is so, section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act renders the compromise illegal and invalid. It is contended that the defendant was both before and after the compromise an occupancy raiyat and that inasmuch as the compromise enhances his rent from Rs. 43-2-0 to Rs. 78, the contract is illegal and incapable of enforcement. This objection would be well grounded if it was in fact true that the status of the defendant had not been changed by the compromise. The learned District Judge, however, finds that the compromise has changed the defendant from an occupancy raiyat to a raiyat at a fixed rate of rent, so that section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act would not apply to his case. The learned Vakil, however, relies upon the case of Narendra Bhusan Roy v. Banku Behary Ghosh (2) and contends that the status of the defendant has not in fact changed. For this contention he relies upon that part of the compromise petition which places certain restrictions upon the right of the tenant to build and to excavate tanks.

The report of the case on which the learned Vakil relies does not put us in complete possession of the facts but if the learned Judge intended to rule that a tenant cannot become a raiyat at fixed rates if he places restrictions upon himself in the matter of building and making excavations, I would respectfully venture to differ. Reading the report, it would seem that the only point decided was, that in a pattah agreeing to let the holding at a certain rent from son to grandson, a restriction as to alienation and other matters was held to justify the construction that it did not create a tenancy at fixed rates. In the present case the document in express words creates a tenancy at a rate of Rs. 78 in perpetuity. The restrictions with regard to excavations and buildings are, in my opinion, not void under any provisions of the Tenancy Act, and I must hold that the defendant is no longer an occupancy raiyat. The compromise, therefore, does not offend against the terms of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and I hold that the Court in accepting it as a basis for the adjustment of the suit acted with jurisdiction.

In this connection it has been somewhat faintly suggested that the Court did not make any investigation into the legality of the compromise. The District Judge has, however, found that there is nothing to support this suggestion.

It is next contended that, even if the provisions of section 29 were not contravened and the decree was made with jurisdiction, still section 147A of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not empower the Court to record a compromise relating to matters extraneous to the suit. In my opinion there is no substantial difference between rule 3 of Order XXIII, Civil Procedure Code, and section 147A of the Bengal Tenancy Act in regard to the jurisdiction of the Court to record compromises; and the reasons given by the learned District Judge for holding that section 147A requires compromises to be confined to the subject-matter of the suit are, in my opinion, inconclusive. There is no reason why the settlement of the disputes forming the subject matter of the suit should not be regarded as the consideration for the contract relating to matters extraneous to the suit. I see no reason why in a suit for rent for a particular period the parties cannot, by consent, effect a change of status or rate of rent in regard to future years. The Tenancy Act does not expressly or by implication place any restrictions upon the parties in this respect.

Finally the learned Vakil for the respondent urges that even if his other contentions fail, the compromise decree in this case was a lease which is liable to compulsory registration under clause (d) of section 17 of the Indian Registration Act.

Now we have very carefully read the terms of the compromise petition, and we do not find that it contains any of the ingredients necessary for a lease. No transfer of any interest in land is effected by the document. All that it does is to change the terms of the contract under which the tenant was already holding, and it clearly comes within the category of the documents described in clauses (b) and (c) of section 17 of the Registration Act.

In these circumstances it was open to the plaintiffs to sue upon the compromise and to tender the compromise decree as evidence. The defendant, not having succeeded in rebutting that evidence, must submit to a decree for the full amount of the claim. The suit must, therefore, be decreed in full with damages at 25 per cent. and costs throughout.

JWALA PRASAD, J.— I agree to the order proposed by my learned brother. Although I do not want to commit myself to all the reasons given by him in support of the order made, it is sufficient to decree the appeal on the ground that the learned District Judge was under a misapprehension that the compromise petition, upon the basis of which the plaintiffs sued for a declaration of the rate of rent and for recovery of arrears thereof, was inadmissible without registration and hence could not be given effect to. The said compromise petition was incorporated into the decree of the Court and as such was exempted from registration under sub section 2, clause (vi) of section 17 of the Registration Act, inasmuch as the terms in question in the compromise did not amount to a lease under clause (d) of sub-section 1 of the said section, but came under clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section 1. A decree or order of a Court embodying the terms of an instrument coming under clause (b) or (c) is exempted from registration. Only gifts under clause (a) and leases under clause (d) of sub-section 1 are not so exempted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 90—Execution of decree—Sale—Misstatement of approximate value in sale proclamation—Irregularity—Sale, whether can be set aside.

A misstatement of the approximate value of the property in a sale proclamation constitutes material irregularity within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 24, col 2.]

Where on enquiry made by the lower Court it was ascertained that the value of the property sought to be sold in execution of a decree was Rs. 11,200 but in the sale proclamation the value was stated to be Rs. 6,000 and the property was sold for Rs 6,300:

Held, that the sale should be set aside, inasmuch as the decree-holder knowingly made a misstatement of the value in the sale proclamation which amounted to material irregularity, and thereby caused substantial injury to the judgment-debtor. [p. 24, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Dacca, dated the 14th of May 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Trailokya Nath Ghose, for the Appellant.—This appeal is on behalf of the judgment-debtor and it is against an order refusing to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud and material irregularity. The decree holder fraudulently and with a dishonest motive to have the mortgaged property sold at a nominal price knowingly made a misstatement of value in the sale proclamation. As a result of that the property, which in the opinion of the lower Court was worth Rs. 11,200, was sold for Rs. 6,300. My submission is that a wilful and gross misstatement of the value of the property in the sale proclamation amounts to material irregularity within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 90 of Act V of 1908, and as such misstatement has caused the mortgaged property to be sold at a price far below its proper price, the sale cannot stand; The sale is vitiated by fraud and irregularity causing substantial injury to the appellant and is, therefore, liable to be set aside: Sivadurga Debi v. Raymohan Poddar (1), Mahabir Pershad Singh v. Dhanukdhari Singh (2).

Babu Jatindra Mohan Ghose (with Babu Kunja Lall Das), for the Respondents.—The sale cannot be set aside unless the appellant can show that there was material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale and that the applicant has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity or fraud. See Jadoo Nath Chatterjee v. Aswini Kumar Banerjee (3). It is evident upon the facts of this case that the applicant cannot complain of substantial injury resulting from any material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale. Mere understatement of value in the sale proclamation is not a ground for setting aside a sale; see Macnaghten v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (4). The applicant must connect the irregularity with the inadequacy of price as cause and effect by means of direct evidence. As this has not been done in this case, the sale is not liable to be set aside.

Babu Trailokya Nath Ghose briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—This appeal is preferred by the judgment-debtor. The respondents obtained a decree against him on a mortgage for a sum of about Rs. 12,000 and applied for execution. A notice was then issued to the judgment-debtor under clause (2) of Order XXI, rule 66, Code of Civil Procedure, and the judgment debtor appeared in Court. Shortly after that, he applied to this Court for stay of execution of the decree and this Court ordered an enquiry to be made for the purpose of ascertaining whether the mortgaged property was sufficient security for the amount of the decree. This enquiry was held by the learned Subordinate Judge and the conclusion at which he came was that the property was worth about Rs. 11,200. Shortly after that enquiry was completed, the decree-holders asked to have a sale proclamation issued and a proclamation was issued; and, in that proclamation, the value of the property was stated to be not Rs 11,200 as it was found in the enquiry, but Rs. 6,000. In due course, the property was put up to sale. One item was sold at Rs. 2,100 and the other at Rs. 4 2 0 making a total of Rs. 6,300—only Rs. 300 above the sum mentioned in the sale proclamation. The judgment-debtor filed an application before the lower Court asking to have the sale set aside on the ground of material irregularity resulting in loss to him. The lower Court has rejected that application and he has consequently preferred this appeal. It appears to me quite clear on the recent authorities that the misstatement of the approximate value of the property constituted a material irregularity within the meaning of rule 90 of Order XXI, Code of Civil Procedure. That there was a misstatement there is no doubt. There was an elaborate enquiry in the lower Court as to the value of the property and it was found to be Rs. 11,200. That fact was perfectly known to the decree-holders and, if they were honest, they would have put that sum in the sale proclamation On the same materials, it is obvious that there has been a substantial injury to the judgment-debtor because the property has been sold not for 11,200 but for Rs. 6,300. I do not think it is of any consequence that the judgment debtor did not at once bring it to the notice of the Court that in the sale proclamation the value had been put as Rs. 6,000 instead of Rs. 11,200.

The remaining question is whether there is sufficient material for drawing the inference that the injury to the judgment-debtor resulted from the irregularity mentioned. I think there is, for we have the further fact that the only outsiders who bid at the sale stopped their bids at a few rupees more than the sums mentioned in the sale-proclamation. One man went up to Rs. 2,050 for one item and the decree-holders bought it for Rs. 2,100. Another man bid up to Rs. 4,150 for the second property and the decree-holders bought it for Rs. 4,200. It is probable that these bidders were discouraged from bidding beyond the sums entered in the sale proclamation. I think, therefore, it is safe to infer that the price realised was the direct result of the misstatement contained in the sale-proclamation. The appeal should, in my opinion, be allowed and the sale set aside with costs to the judgment debtor both in this Court and in the Court below. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at three gold mohurs.

(1) 10 Ind. Cas. 475; 15 C. W. N. 577.
(2) 31 C. 815; 8 C. W. N. 686.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 60—Deposit with banker—Suit to recover deposit—Limitation—Hindu Law—Nagar Brahmins of Gujarat, domiciled in Benares, whether governed by Mayukha or Mitakshara Law.

Where a deposit is in the nature of a banking deposit the depositee stands in a fiduciary relation to the depositor, and a suit to recover such deposit is governed by Article 60 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. [p. 26, col 2; p. 27, col. 1.]

Where a family of Nagar Brahmins of Gujarat was domiciled for over a century in Benares, and it was found that they were ignorant of any rules to be found in the Mayukha commentary and were unable to depose to a single instance of special succession under that commentary:

Held, that the family was governed by the Mitakshara Law which prevailed in Benares. [p. 27, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Benares, dated the 13th June 1916.

Messrs. Gokul Prasad, Baldeva Ram and Radhakant Malaviya, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sarat Chander Chaudhuri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen are the sons and grandsons of one Gulab Ram Jani, who died in the year 1958 Sambat corresponding to 1901-1902.

The plaintiff is the daughter's son of Gulab Ram Jani by the latter's daughter Gopi Kuar, who died in the lifetime of her father. Gulab Ram's wife was a lady whose name was Ballabh Kuar. The family to which the parties belonged is a family of Nagar Brahmins, who came originally from Gujarat and settled in Benares some 150 or 200 years ago.

The suit was brought for the purpose of recovering a sum of Rs. 9,567 8 9. This sum is made up of four items which are exhibited in the statement of account attached to the plaint. The first item is one for Rs. 3,791-14-0 said to have been deposited with the firm of the defendants by Ballabh Kuar; the second item is a sum of Rs. 2,207 said to have been similarly deposited by Musammat Gopi Kuar; the third item of Rs. 533 is also alleged to have been deposited by Gopi Kuar and the fourth item of Rs. 2,500 is said to have been deposited by the plaintiff himself.

The cause of action stated in the plaint was that the plaintiff in the month of January 1914 had demanded payment of these deposits which had been refused. The claim, therefore, was for the total sum of these items together with interest, the aggregate amount being as above stated Rs. 9,567-8 9.

A number of pleas were raised for the defence. First of all it was stated that the item alleged to have been deposited by Ballabh Kuar had been deposited by Gulab Ram Jani himself in her name by way of a trust fund from which were to be defrayed certain expenses for shradh.

With regard to the items Nos. 3 and 4, the case for the defendants was that Gulab Ram Jani before his death had placed these sums to the credit of Gopi Kuar and the plaintiff by way of favour and for their maintenance. It was pleaded that there was no consideration for these deposits which had been made by way of charity and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover them.

As to the second item it was admitted that Gopi Kuar had deposited Rs. 2,207 with the defendants' firm, but it was pleaded that on this account there was a debit against the plaintiff of Rs. 2,621-15-0. Further pleas to be noticed are:—

(1) That Gopi Kuar, the mother of the plaintiff, was not the daughter of Ballabh Kuar but of another wife of Gulab Ram Jani;

(2) that the suit was barred by reason of certain arbitration proceedings which had taken place before the claim was brought;

(3) that the claim was barred by limitation; and

(4) that in any case so far as the first item was concerned; the right of the plaintiff was to be determined with reference to the Mayukha and not the Mitakshara Law.

The lower Court found that the first item in dispute was the stridhan of Musammat Ballabh Kuar. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the defence had failed to prove that this money constituted a trust fund for the purposes of meeting the expenses of shradh. He next held that the arbitration proceedings upon which the defendants relied, were no bar to the suit inasmuch as the plaintiff had been no party to the reference to arbitration. The Subordinate Judge held also that Gopi Kuar was the daughter of Ballabh Kuar.

As regards the two deposits of Rs. 533 and Rs. 2,500, items Nos. 3 and 4, the finding of that Court was that Gulab Ram himself had made these deposits but that they had been made for the benefit of Gopi Kuar and her son and, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to get them.

With reference to the second item, namely, the deposit of Rs. 2,207, the Subordinate Judge found that this money had been put in deposit by Gopi Kuar but that there was owing to the defendants on this account a still larger sum, namely, Rs. 2,621 15 0. On the issue of limitation, the Subordinate Judge found that the suit was not time-barred and lastly he held that the Mitakshara Law governed the relations of the parties. He gave a decree, therefore, to the plaintiff for Rs. 6,409 15-0 with proportionate costs and interest pendente lite and future at the rate of five annas four pies per cent. per mensem.

Pausing here it may be observed that on the face of it, the decree of the lower Court is wrong. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that items Nos. 1, 2 and 4 carried interest and yet in making up the account between the parties he has not allowed interest on these sums up till the date of suit.

The defendants come here in appeal and two pleas have been raised on their behalf. The first plea is contained in the first and second grounds set out in the memorandum of appeal, that is the plea of limitation. The third and fourth grounds relate to the law applicable to the parties, the contention being that the family is governed by Mayukha and not by the Mitakshara Law. The plaintiff's case is that the Court below ought to have decreed his claim in full. He objects to the finding of the Court below that there was against him a debit balance of Rs. 2,621-15-0 and says that this sum ought not to have been deducted from his claim.

To deal first with the appeal, it may be observed that there is no longer any dispute about the various items mentioned in the plaint which were received in deposit by the defendants' firm. The case which was set up in the Court below regarding the first item, that is to say, the deposit made in the name of Musammat Ballabh Kuar has not been argued here. It is no longer contended that this item was placed with the defendants in trust for the performance of shradh ceremonies. We may take it, therefore, that each of the items in the account represents a separate deposit and this being so, the issue about limitation is disposed of at once. We think the lower Court is right in holding that the suit was not time-barred. The Article which applies is obviously Article 60 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act and time begins to run from the date on which demand was made, that is to say, in the present case from the 16th of January 1914. The suit was filed a few months later. The deposits were in the nature of banking deposits and the defendants stand in a fiduciary relation to the plaintiff. For these reasons the case falls within the purview of Article 60, and not of Article 62 as was pointed by the Counsel for the appellant.

As to the question whether the parties are governed by the Mitakshara or the Mayukha Law, we have already mentioned that this point arises only in connection with the first item in dispute. On the finding of the Court below this sum of Rs. 3,791-14-0 was the stridhan of Ballabh Kuar. If this is a case which is governed by the Mitakshara Law, the whole of this sum was inherited by her daughter Gopi Kuar and is now claimable by the plaintiff as the heir of his mother. On the other hand if the Mayukha Law is to be applied, the stridhan of Ballabh Kuar was divisible between her sons and her daughters.

A number of witnesses were examined in the Court below for the purpose of showing which school of law governs the relations of the parties. We have been referred to the statements of six witnesses who were examined on behalf of the plaintiff. There was also a deposition given in a former suit by Ravi Ram who was one of the sons of Gulab Ram Jani. Read as a whole, the evidence is not of very much value for most of it proceeds from witnesses who admit their ignorance of the differences between the Mayukha and the Mitakshara Law. However, so much is established from the testimony of these witnesses that the family is a family of Gujarati Brahmins who migrated to Benares 150 or 200 years ago. Ravi Ram, when examined in the earlier suit, deposed that the family first migrated from Gujarat to Jaipur and came from Jaipur to Benares about the year 1804 A. D.

The argument for the appellants is that as the parties are Gujaratis, they must be deemed to have brought their own law with them and that law must have been the law as laid down in the Mayukha. On the other hand the contention is that the presumption must be in favour of the application of the Mitakshara Law, because it is said that the commentary which goes by the name of the Vyavahara Mayukha did not make its appearance till after the year 1600 A. D. On the authority of the books there seems to be no doubt that the author of this commentary, Nilkantha, lived about the year 1600 A. D. in Benares and his works are said to have come into vogue about the year 1700 A. D. Support for this argument is derived from the history of the Mayukha as set out in West and Buhler's Hindu Law, Volume I, page 19 (3rd Edition), in which the statement of Borradaile is quoted as authority for the history given. It seems to us that it would be very difficult to say that a family which migrated from Gujarat nearly two centuries ago is governed by the special rules of inheritance which are set out in Nilkantha's commentary. The question whether the Mayukha is the governing authority in Gujarat is one which does not appear to have been definitely settled, although the view taken by the Bombay High Court seems to be that the Mayukha is the principal authority in that province. This view, however, has been challenged in a work which was cited before us at the time of the argument—"Codification in British India" by Bijoy Kishore Acharya (Tagore Law Lectures, 1912) at page 345 and the following pages. The learned author points out that the Court of highest jurisdiction in Baroda holds that the Mayukha is not of superior authority to the Mitakshara in the region of Gujarat.

On the evidence before us, we are of opinion that the Mitakshara ought to be applied here. The family has long been domiciled in Benares where the Mitakshara Law prevails, and such evidence as there is before us shows that these people are ignorant of any rules to be found in the Mayukha commentary. No instance of special succession under the Mayukha has been deposed to by any of the witnesses, and this is a fact of some significance for the family is a big one and instances might have been expected to be forthcoming if the Mayukha Law applied.

On the two points raised in the memorandum of appeal, we find against the appellants and the appeal fails accordingly.

Coming now to the cross-objection which relates to a sum of Rs. 2,621-15-0, which the Subordinate Judge debited against the plaintiff, it appears to us that the lower Court has not dealt correctly with this matter. The Subordinate Judge for some reason or other which is not apparent treats this sum as a debit, against the deposit account of Rs. 2,207, standing in the name of Gopi Kuar. On the other hand, it is the case of the defendants that all the items which go to make up this debit total were items advanced to or chargeable against the plaintiff and if this be so, the debit account should have been made up against the deposit of Rs. 2,500, which stands in the plaintiff's name.

The sum of Rs. 2,621-15-0 claimed by the defendants is made up of three items:—

(1) Rs. 811-9-0 debited to the plaintiff up till Kartik 1957 Sambat, that is to a date prior to the death of Gulab Ram Jani.

(2) Rs. 984-6-0, representing sums paid to the plaintiff since the death of Gulab Ram Jani.

(3) Rs. 826, debited to the plaintiff on account of interest.

There has been much argument before us regarding the account of the defendants which relates to this debit item. In order to support their claim the defendants produced an account which purports to date from 1941 Sambat at a time when the plaintiff can only have been about 16 years of age. This date (1941 Sambat) was 17 years prior to the death of Gulab Ram Jani. The account so produced is not the account from the very beginning, for it opens with a credit item of Rs. 678 6 0 in favour of Hari Ram carried over from an earlier account. By the end of 1949 Sambat this account had become a debit account and has been shown as such ever since. At the time of Gulab Ram's death the debit against Hari Ram is shown as amounting to Rs. 811-9-0.

It is proved beyond all doubt that when Gulab Ram died, he directed a sum of Rs. 2,000 to be placed to the credit of Hari Ram in addition to a sum of Rs. 500 which had been credited previously, and we think that there is good ground for supposing that it was the intention of Gulab Ram Jani in giving these directions to wipe out the debt which was then standing against the name of Hari Ram. This debit seems to have arisen by reason of Gulab Ram's himself paying sums to Hari Ram from time to time for his support and consequently when we find that Gulab Ram Jani just before his death left Rs. 2,500 for the support of his grandson, we think he intended this to be a fresh fund not subject to deduction in respect of any money which had been previously advanced.

We may mention here that the award of the arbitrators, who were appointed to make partition of the family business which belonged to the defendants, is upon the record. The accounts were examined by persons who were more or less experts and we find that the arbitrators in making up this account of Hari Ram took the same line as we are taking now. We are satisfied, therefore, that this debit item of Rs. 811-9-0, which was standing against the name of the plaintiff when Gulab Ram Jani died, should be excluded from the account.

Next we have to take the account from the time when Gulab Ram Jani died, starting with the fact that there was an opening of a credit balance of Rs. 2,500 in favour of the plaintiff. At the hearing of the appeal an extract was prepared from the account books of the defendants which is supported by an affidavit, and according to this extract there have been paid to the plaintiff since the death of Gulab Ram Jani sums the total amount of which comes to Rs 1,795-4-0. No interest is included in this sum. The learned Counsel for the respondent objected to one item in this account, namely, a charge of Rs. 891-8-0 said to represent money advanced to the plaintiff for certain marriage expenses. It was argued that this sum ought not to be debited in the account but ought to be treated as gift from the family business. In our opinion this contention cannot be maintained, for we are of opinion that any sums which were paid to the plaintiff after Gulab Ram Jani's death must, in view of what we have already said, be a charge against the plaintiff's account. There was no reason whatever why these defendants should have made a present of this sum of money to the plaintiff.

Over and above this sum of Rs. 1,795-4-0 there is another item of Rs. 131 which represents not money actually paid to the plaintiff, but debited to his account in the years 1964 Sambat. The history of this transaction appears to be that the plaintiff's father had pawned certain ornaments with the firm for Rs. 131. It is said that in 1964 Sambat the plaintiff was given the ornaments upon his agreeing to have the debt transferred to his own account. We think this is a reasonable and proper explanation of this item and we hold that it constitutes a proper debit against the plaintiff. We find, therefore, that the total sum which is properly chargeable against the plaintiff's deposit account of Rs 2,500 is Rs. 1,926 4-0.

As to the item of interest, namely, Rs. 826 to which we have previously referred, we leave that out of consideration altogether. The item includes certain entries which accrued due before the death of Gulab Ram Jani and for the reasons we have already given, no debit of a date prior to 1958 Sambat can be charged against the plaintiff. On the other hand, it is quite clear that since Gulab Ram Jani's death the account of the plaintiff, which began with a credit balance of Rs. 2,500 carrying interest at Rs. 4 per cent. per annum, has always been a credit account and consequently the defendants are not entitled to charge interest as if the account had been overdrawn. The lower Court has, as we have said, debited the plaintiff with Rs. 2,621-15-0. Our finding is that the proper debit is Rs. 1,926-4-0 and so the cross-objection must be allowed to the extent of Rs. 695-11.

We have already mentioned in an earlier part of the judgment that the decree of the Court below on the face of it is incorrect, inasmuch as the Subordinate Judge has not allowed interest in the decree although he finds in his judgment that interest was claimable in respect of items Nos. 1, 2 and 4. The correct amount owing to the plaintiff is Rs. 7,641-4-9 and we vary the decree of the Court below accordingly.

A decree will be prepared for this sum with proportionate costs and interest during the suit and future interest at the rate of Rs. 4 per cent. per annum. The result, therefore, is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs, which will include in this Court fees on the higher scale. The cross-objection is allowed with proportionate costs.

Appeal dismissed;
Cross-objection allowed.

APPEALS FROM ORDERS NOS. 136 AND 137 OF 1917.

March 21, 1919.

Present:—Justice Sir Charles Chitty, KT., and Mr. Justice Walmsley.

WAHED ALI—DEFENDANT—OPPOSITE PARTY—APPELLANT

CHAND MIA—PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLIII, r 1 (w), O. XLVII, rr. 1, 4, 7—Appeal from order granting application for review, when lies—"Sufficient cause" within meaning of O. XLVII, r. 1, what is—Review.

Order XLIII, rule 1 (w), of the Civil Procedure Code permits an appeal from an order granting an application for review only on the grounds mentioned in Order XLVII, rule 7, of the Code, and on no other. [p. 30, col. 2.]

The omission of the Court and the Pleaders to notice certain provisions of the Code which might govern a case would be a "sufficient reason" within the meaning of Order XLVII, rule 1, of the Code for granting a review. [p. 30, col. 2, p. 31, col. 1.]

Appeals against the orders of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Chittagong, dated the 5th of April 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Respondent.—Before the case is opened I beg leave to take a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal. The appeal is not competent as no appeal lies under Order XLVII, rules 4, 7 and 8 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Charu Chandra Sen (with him Babus Dhirendranath Bagchi and Monomohan Banerjee), for the Appellant.—These appeals arise out of a suit for recovery of money. The first Court dismissed the suit against defendant No. 1 and decreed against other defendants. There were two separate appeals preferred against the decision by defendants Nos. 2 and 3, which were allowed. In both these appeals defendant No. 1 was a party respondent. The plaintiff applied for a review of judgment. The application was granted by the following order of the learned Subordinate Judge: "I think the review applied for should be granted Rule 33, Order XLI, allows full power to the Court to grant relief against a party although no appeal has been preferred by the party seeking relief against him. My attention was not drawn to this provision of the law at the time of the argument in the appeals."

"It was contended on behalf of the opposite party that the Court was quite right in passing the order passed in my judgment in the appeals, because no relief was sought for by the present applicant as against him during the pendency of the appeals. As the law gives full power to the Court to do complete justice in the case as between the parties interested in a suit, I think these are proper cases for review. The applications are granted."

My submission is that Order XLVII, rule 4, is in my favour. An appeal lies under Order XLVII, rule 7, but no review can be granted. My point is that the express provisions of Order XLVII, rule 4, have been contravened. All the opposite parties did not get notice. The application for review must come under Order XLVII, rule 1. Here there is no sufficient ground for review as contemplated by that rule. The other defendants ought to have been made parties and notices should have been issued to them. My point is that the ground on which the application has been granted is not sufficient in law. Merely because the Judge failed to consider a point of law is no ground at all. See Chandi Charan Laha v. Manoranjan Chattopadhya (1), Ellem v. Basheer (2), Sabapathi v. Subraya (3). The application ought to have been rejected from a strict point of view of law.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the suit was brought by the plaintiff to recover some money from defendants Nos. 1 to 5. In the Court of first instance a decree was passed against defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 and the suit was dismissed against defendant No. 1. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 preferred two separate appeals to the Subordinate Judge, who allowed those appeals and dismissed the suit as against them. Defendant No. 1 was a party respondent in both those appeals. The plaintiff applied for a review of judgment as against the defendant No. 1 on the ground that the provisions of Order XLI, rule 33, Civil Procedure Code, had been overlooked by the Court and the Pleaders at the time of the hearing, and he asked that the appeals might be re-heard against the defendant No. 1, with a view possibly to applying the provisions of that section and granting a decree against defendant No. 1. The Subordinate Judge granted the application for review and against that order the present appeals are preferred.

A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies and we think that objection must be upheld. Order XLIII, rule 1 (w), permits an appeal from an order under rule 4 of Order XLVII granting an application for review, but rule 7 limits the grounds on which objection may be made to such an order. It can be objected to only on the ground that the application was (a) in contravention of the provisions of rule 4, or (a) after expiration of the period of limitation prescribed therefor and without sufficient cause. It is argued for the defendant No. 1, the appellant before us, that it is in contravention of rule 4, because it is said that the application was granted without previous notice to all the parties. Rule 4 (a) lays down that no such application shall be granted without previous notice to the opposite party to enable him to appear and be heard in support of the decree or order. In this case the review was only sought against defendant No. 1. It could not affect the other defendants against whom the plaintiff did not desire to proceed further. He had his decree against defendants Nos. 4 and 5 and he was content with the judgment of the Appellate Court to have the suit dismissed against defendants Nos. 2 and 3. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were, as a matter of fact, parties to the application for review, defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were not. We think, therefore, that there was no contravention of rule 4. It was suggested that there was no ground at all for entertaining an application for review in this case, but it cannot be said that the omission of the Court and the Pleader to notice certain provisions of the Code which might govern the case would not be a sufficient reason within the Muhammadan Law—Pre-emption—Partition—Shafi-i-khalit—Appurtenances, what are.

When there has been a perfect partition of an estate and separate mahals with separate tauzi numbers are formed, although certain properties, such as wells, roads, tanks, etc., are left undivided, no right of pre-emption on the ground of common appurtenances exists. [p. 32, cols 1 & 2.]

The term "appurtenances" means facilities or amenities peculiar to the owner of an estate but derived not from the estate itself but by easement from the estate of another. Roads, wells, tanks, rent-free land occupancy holdings, etc, left undivided on the partition of an estate are not appurtenances. [p. 32, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Muzaffarpur, dated the 8th December 1915.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad, Government Advocate (with him Mr. Chandar Sekhar Banerjee), for the Appellant.

Messrs Lachmi Narain Sinha, Nirsu Narain Sinha and Aghor Nath Chatterji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—In this case the appellant is dissatisfied with a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur dismissing his suit upon a claim to pre-emption. The facts of the case upon investigation appear clearly to be as follows:—

The property sold was a separate touzi number formed by partition from a parent estate. The plaintiff was the owner of another mahal formed by the same partition from the same parent estate. The majority of the lands had been divided, but joint between the parties were left a well, certain roads, a tank, a number of brahmottar and fakirana holdings and two holdings stated in the schedule of lands left common to be occupancy holdings. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the mere creation of a separate estate severed completely all connection between the plaintiff and the vendor of the share sold, and upon this ground alone, without entering into the question whether the ceremonies necessary to pre-emption had been performed, dismissed the suit. In appeal to this Court it is urged that the partition in question was not necessarily a complete partition, and that, therefore, before the Subordinate Judge could say that there were no lands of the parent mahal left undivided, evidence should have been taken as to whether the plaintiffs were in fact co-sharers in benefits to be derived from lands left undivided between the parties. On the other side it is urged that the point has been settled by concurrent decisions of the Courts of Allahabad and of Calcutta, beginning in the Allahabad Court from the case of Maya Ram v. Lachho (1) and in the Calcutta Court from Lala Puriag Dutt v. Shaikh Bundah Hossein (2). The facts of the latter case are somewhat different from the case before us, for in the body of the judgment it is distinctly stated that everything which was worth dividing was divided and the parties only remained jointly interested in what was either utterly worthless or more probably was treated as public property in the same way as roads. The Allahabad case, however, is directly in point. It was taken on appeal to the Judicial Committee [Lachcho v. Maya Ram (3)]. Their Lordships state the law to be as follows:—"Now whether the thok comprised the divided lands, which were recorded as belonging to Ibrahim alone, or included the undivided lands which were appurtenant to those divided lands, the plaintiff was no co owner with Ibrahim. She was not a joint tenant, nor a tenant-in-common with him as to the divided portion of the lands; if she were a tenant-in-common of the undivided lands, that did not make her an owner of Ibrahim's share in those lands. A tenant-in-common is the owner of his own share; but he is not an owner of the other tenant-in-common's share. It appears, therefore, to their Lordships that the plaintiff was not an owner of the thok which was sold." This disposes of the plaintiff's contention that he was sharik or co owner in the mahal sold. It is contended, however, on behalf of the appellant that if his claim as a sharik fails, he is still entitled to come in as a pre emptor in the second degree or khalit, that is, one who is a sharer in the appurtenances of the estate. But it cannot be said that the roads or the well, or the tank or the rent-free land or the occupancy holdings left undivided were appurtenances to the mahal. By the term appurtenances is meant facilities or amenities peculiar to the owner of an estate but derived not from the estate itself but by easement from the estate of another. In the case before us the roads and well, etc., which the plaintiffs ask us to regard as appurtenances to the mahal are not part of the estate of another. Common tenancy in these roads and wells is not an appurtenance to the plaintiffs' estate, but actually a part of it.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

COUTTS, J.—The principal ground for allowing the plaintiffs the right of pre-emption, which is urged before us, is that the plaintiffs have a right as shafi-i-khalit or co sharers in the appurtenances of the estate, and the decisions in Mahtab Singh v. Ram Tahal Misser (4) and Jahangeer Bukh v. Bhickaree Lall (5) are principally relied on. Neither of these cases, however, assist the appellants, for in both cases the parties were not owners of separate mahals but of separate pattis, and there was no perfect partition. In the present case, however, although some portions of the original mouza were not partitioned, there was a complete partition and separate mahals with separate tauzi numbers were formed.

This matter has been fully discussed in Abdul Rahim Khan v. Kharag Singh (6) and Munna Lal v. Hajira Jan (7). The first of these cases is exactly in point, and in both these cases it was held that when there has been a perfect partition, although certain properties—a village chaupal, wells, tanks, and such other properties—were left undivided, no right of pre-emption on the ground of common appurtenances existed. The test appears to be whether or not there has been a perfect partition. The formation of separate mahals with separate tauzi numbers is clear indication of such a partition, and I agree that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott and Mr. Justice Walsh.
Lala DARBARI LAL—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT

Revision—Jurisdiction of Court—Judge, whether bound to prove his jurisdiction—Party alleging want of jurisdiction, duty of.

Where the jurisdiction of a Court is attacked at the hearing, it is not the duty of the Judge to prove to the parties the foundation of his jurisdiction. It is the duty of the party alleging want of jurisdiction to prove his allegation by affidavit or otherwise. [p. 33, col. 1.]

It is the duty of a person when applying in revision, particularly when relying upon want of jurisdiction, to provide himself first with the materials which prove the allegation on which he relies, and to lay them before the Court either by affidavit if they consist of statements which do not prove themselves, or by production of the record if they consist of statements which are proved by the record. [p. 33, col. 1.]

Civil revision against the order of the Sub Judge, Aligarh, dated the 18th May 1918.

Mr. Girdhari Lal Agarwalla, for the Applicant.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—The question raised by this application is one of jurisdiction. The Court below was asked to consider this point and remarked that the town of Hathras, where the parties reside and where the property in suit is situated, is now, and was on the date of the order under consideration, within the jurisdiction of that Court as Subordinate Judge of Aligarh. If this statement is correct, it is conclusive of the question raised by the application for revision. There is nothing to show that the statement is not correct, and so far as one can gather from such orders as have been issued by this Court, the intention of the Court always was that the work of the Aligarh district should go to the Subordinate Judge and the work of the two districts in the judgeship, namely, Etah and Bulandshahar, to the Additional Subordinate Judge. We do not think any case is made out for interference. We dismiss this application.

WALSH, J.—I agree. I only want to add a word or two in consequence of the argument addressed to us. It seems to me that it is the duty of anybody when applying in revision, particularly when relying upon want of jurisdiction, to provide himself first with the materials which prove the allegation on which he relies, and to lay them before the Court either by affidavit if they consist of statements which do not prove themselves, or by production of the record if they consist of statements which are proved by the record.

In this particular case the Judge whose jurisdiction was attacked at the hearing went out of his way to answer the question and to give his reasons, and I cannot believe that in the town of Aligarh, if it be the fact that there is no order justifying this particular Subordinate Judge exercising jurisdiction over parties living in Hathras, there is no one who could not ascertain that fact by a very simple enquiry between May 1918 and March 1919. In fact I should think there is hardly a member of the legal profession who could not discover this, if he pleased, in the course of an afternoon. If we were to agree with the suggestion that the Judge is called upon to prove to the parties the foundation of his own jurisdiction, and because this particular Judge had not placed anything on the record to justify his opinion, that, therefore, this order was bad, it is obvious that every defeated party who has lost his case before this particular Judge would come up in revision to have his order quashed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIX, r. 7—Inventory, order directing preparation of, when can be made.

An order made under Order XXXIX, rule 7, of the Civil Procedure Code directing upon an application the preparation of an inventory of the property which is the subject-matter of a suit, should be made only where such inventory is essential for a proper decision of the case, and not otherwise. [p. 34, col. 2.]

Rule against the order passed by the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, 24-Pergannas, in Title Suit No. 27 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Sir Rash Behary Ghose, (with him Babu Krishna Kumar Mukerjee for M. A. K. Fuzlul Huq), for the Petitioners.—We complain against the order of the lower Court calling upon the Nazir to make an inventory of the moveables claimed by the plaintiff; as there was no question of detention, preservation or inspection of the properties, no order could have been made under Order XXXIX, Civil Procedure Code. Refers to Woodroffe's Civil Procedure Code, page 1161. There must be a fair prima facie case and serious inconvenience. Refers to Annual Practice, 1919, page 845. The learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in passing order under Order XXXIX, rule 7. Inspection should be made for the proper decision of a case. Mr. Justice Mookerjee's judg.

ment in Amjad Ali v. Ali Hussain Johar (1) is clearly distinguishable from the present case.

The Advocate-General (with him Mr. J. N. Singha and Babu Mohini Nath Bose), for the Opposite Parties.—This Rule ought to be discharged. This is an eminently fit case where the order passed by the lower Court was absolutely necessary for the decision of the case, and the Sub-Judge was right in passing orders upon the Nazir for making an inventory. The preparation of such an inventory is essential for a proper decision of the case. Refers to Amjad Ali v. Ali Hussain Johar (1), which lays down the principle in express words and which covers the facts of a case like this. There can be no distinction between inspection and the making of an inventory.

Sir Rash Behary Ghose replied.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule calling on the opposite party to show cause why the order complained of should not be set aside on such terms as to this Court may seem proper, or such other order passed as to this Court may seem fit.

The order made by the Court below was that an inventory of the moveable properties claimed by the plaintiff be prepared by the Nazir after notice to the Pleaders of all parties. This order was passed upon an application purporting to have been made under Order XXXIX, rule 7 (1) (a), which provides that the Court may, on the application of any party to a suit and on such terms as it thinks fit, make an order for the detention, preservation or inspection of any property which is the subject-matter of such suit or as to which any question may arise therein.

The order made by the Court below was not for preservation or inspection of any property but for making an inventory of certain moveable properties which are described in the schedule to the plaint. So far as they are concerned, no inventory is required; and it was not alleged in the application made to the Court below that there were moveable properties other than those described in the plaint.

We are referred to the case of Amjad Ali v. Ali Hussain Johar (1). It was observed in that case: "We must consequently hold that the right to grant an inspection implies the right to make an inventory, if the Court be satisfied that the preparation of the inventory is essential, for a proper decision of the case."

So far it has not been shown that it was essential in the present case to have an inventory of the moveable properties for a proper decision of the case.

The petitioner in her plaint prayed for discovery and for the appointment of a Receiver. It is open to her to apply for discovery or for the appointment of a Receiver, and we are informed that an application for the appointment of a Receiver is actually pending before the lower Court.

In all these circumstances the Rule must be made absolute and the order of the Court below set aside.

We make no order as to costs.

Rule made absolute.

It cannot be laid down as a uniform rule of law that where a plaintiff's suit is dismissed in spite of findings against the defendant, such findings are not res judicata. They will be res judicata where they are clear and where the intention of the Court was to give a definite decision on matters in issue not inconsistent with the decree or with any other finding. Under section 11, Civil Procedure Code, it is not necessary that in order to operate as res judicata a finding or decision should be engrafted in the decree. [p. 43, col. 1.]

Where costs are disallowed to a successful defendant owing to adverse findings against him and notwithstanding the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit, such findings are res judicata. [p. 37, col. 2.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The decision of the Privy Council reported as Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer, 11 C. 301; 12 I. A. 23; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 602; 9 Ind. Jur. 202; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 960 only means that, where in spite of a useless finding on the evidence, an exactly opposite finding is arrived at by the same Court as the basis of its decree, the former useless finding can never be res judicata in subsequent proceedings. But it will be going far beyond their Lordships' intentions to say that no finding against a defendant can ever be res judicata under any circumstances if the plaintiff's suit is ultimately dismissed notwithstanding that finding. [p. 39, col. 1.]

In cases where a plaintiff is non-suited on the ground of limitation, res judicata, misjoinder, insufficient Court-fee on the plaint, jurisdiction or a like technical and preliminary ground and yet the Court proceeds to give a finding on the merits against the defendant to save a remand by the Appellate Court, such finding will not be res judicata if, on appeal, the Appellate Court does not itself think it necessary to give its decision on the merits or if, in case there is no appeal, it is evident that the first Court did not intend its findings to be final. [p. 39, col. 2.]

The doctrine of res judicata should not be unduly conditioned and qualified by all sorts of ingenious attempts at evasion, where there has been in fact a fair contest on a question in dispute between the parties and the Court intended to give and has given a final decision on that question. [p. 42, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Mayavaram, in Appeal Suit No. 43 of 1915 (Appeal Suit No. 796 of 1914 on the file of District Court), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 308 of 1911.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. Rangachariar for Mr. G. S. Venkatrama Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff's suit was dismissed notwithstanding the findings against defendants as to the ownership of the site and right of access to lane. Those findings were not the basis of the ultimate decree. Defendants are not precluded from re-agitating these matters. See observations of the Privy Council in Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1) and also Achanta Venkatasuryanarayana v. Yellapragadu Shiva Sankara Narayana (2). Those findings were not necessary for the final decision in the previous case in the view which the High Court took. See Nundo Lall Bhuttacharjee v. Bidhoo Mookhy Debee (3), Parbati Debi v. Mathura Nath Banerjee (4), Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (5).

The finding has not been merged in the decree and is not the foundation of the legal rights or liabilities of the parties.

The doctrine of res judicata should be guardedly applied as the effect of its application is to prevent Courts from going into the merits of the case.

Mr. B. Sitarama Row, for the Respondents, relied on the Privy Council case in Krishna Behari Roy v. Bunwari Lall Roy (6) and on Varathayyangar v. Krishnasami (7). The findings against defendants were substantial decisions. They were arrived at on a consideration of the evidence and were intended to be final. They could not be re-agitated in the present suit.

It is immaterial that they were not embodied in the decree. Section 11, Civil Procedure Code, does not require that it should be.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are the appellants. The facts are a little complicated. Though the decision of this second appeal ultimately depends upon our opinion on a pure question of law, it is necessary to state the material facts for clearly defining the legal question.

The plaintiff and the defendants are neighbours, the plan Exhibit III showing their respective houses and house sites. Roughly we might say that the plaintiff's house and his vacant site are west and north of the defendants' house and backyard site.

In the plaintiff's vacant site (north of defendants' house and west of the defendants' backyard) there is situated a well marked A, which well is common to both the plaintiff and the defendants. In 1905 the plaintiff tried to enclose the well by walls so as to give the defendants access only to the south eastern half of the circumference of the well (and not to the remaining north-western half) from the defendants' back door (in the northern wall of the defendants' house) situated to the south-east of the well The defendants then obstructed the plaintiff and the plaintiff brought the suit, Original Suit No. 425 of 1905, for an injunction against the defendants' attempted obstruction to the construction of the walls. The plaintiff's allegations in the plaint in that suit were (a) that the whole vacant site (within and near the south eastern corner of which the well was situated and including the said well site) belonged to the plaintiff, (b) that the defendants had only the right of easement of taking the water from the well, and (c) that as the owner of the servient tenement, the plaintiff was entitled to put up walls in his own site leaving a convenient way to the defendants to approach the well from their backyard door (south-east of the well) to the south-eastern half portion of the circumference of the well.

The defendants contended in that suit that the whole vacant site itself, including the site of the well, belonged to themselves as part of their house. The District Munsif found in that suit that the site did not belong to the plaintiff but to the defendants, and so dismissed the suit. On appeal, the District Judge was inclined to differ from the District Munsif on the question of title to the vacant site in which the well stood, but he held that the well itself belonged to both parties and hence that "convenience and mutual relations between neighbours" dictated that the plaintiff's suit for an injunction should be dismissed and he, therefore, confirmed the District Munsif's decree. On second appeal, this Court made the following observations in its judgment:

"The District Munsif found that the site did not belong to the plaintiff, and so dismissed the suit. The District Judge has not stated any finding on the question of ownership and though he states his opinion that the defendants' access to the site cannot be obstructed, he does not state any finding as to the legal character of the defendants' right." Then, directions were issued to the District Judge to send up findings on the following issues:—

(1) Does the site in question belong to the plaintiffs or to the defendants and have the plaintiffs a right to build a wall as alleged in the plaint?

(2) Whether the defendants have any right in the site in question, so as to entitle them to prevent the plaintiffs from building the wall?

The District Judge's findings (in substance) were as follows:—(a) that the vacant site except the site of the well itself belonged to the plaintiff; (b) that the well and its site belonged in common to both parties; (c) that the defendants' contention that even if they had no ownership right in the surrounding vacant site, they had an easement of right of way, not only from their house (to the south-east) to the whole circumference of the well but also another easement of way along a lane running south to north along the western boundary of the vacant site had not been established, they not having used any such way as of right, though they might have been passing across all portions of the vacant site and along the western boundary line into the public lane north of the vacant site, without objection through plaintiff's permissive indulgence. The District Judge finally said that the defendants had as owners of half the well such rights over plaintiffs' vacant site as were necessary for the ordinary use and enjoyment of the well and that such rights would be infringed by the construction of the walls "as set out in the plaint and schedules" and that the defendants were, therefore, entitled to prevent the "building of walls in the manner proposed."

This Court then pronounced the following final judgment: "We accept the finding: though the site round the well is found to be the property of the plaintiffs, they are not entitled to build on it so as to obstruct the defendants' access to the well and to every part of the surrounding wall which is common to the plaintiffs and themselves. The suit was rightly dismissed and we dismiss the second appeal. As the defendants claimed ownership of the site and the finding is against them on that question, we dismiss the appeal without costs."

This final judgment of the High Court in the former suit is dated 15th August 1910. Four months afterwards, in December 1910, the plaintiff attempted to raise another wall so as not to infringe the defendants' rights of convenient access from their house to any portion of the circumference of the wall of the well. Then also the defendants obstructed. So he brought the present suit in July 1911 for an injunction and other proper reliefs.

The defendants contended (among all sorts of other defences) (a) that the vacant site belonged to them and they were not bound by the finding contra in the former suit; (b) that, in any event, the defendants had a right of access to the lane running to the west of the site: and that the plaintiff was not entitled to obstruct by his wall access to that lane; and (c) that even if the defendants had the right of access only to the entire circumference of the well, the wall proposed to be built by the plaintiffs would not give them as convenient and full an access to the well as they were entitled to.

This last contention need not be further considered as, before the District Munsif, the parties put in a joint statement that the construction of a wall as mentioned in that joint statement would give the defendants full and reasonable access all round the well. The District Munsif who ultimately decided the suit (there was at first a judgment against the plaintiff by a previous Munsif, which was upset and the suit was remanded for fresh disposal) held that the contentions (a) and (b) were res judicata against the defendants by the final decision of the High Court in the former suit. He, therefore, passed a decree restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff's construction of the wall in the manner proposed in the joint statement. The defendants appealed to the District Court, which transferred the appeal to the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram for disposal. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal, holding (with the District Munsif) that the defendants were bound by the findings in the former suit, namely, (a) that the plaintiffs were and the defendants were not the owners of the vacant site around the well; (b) that the defendants had no right of easement of way through that site and along the lane running in the western portion of the site to the public northern street called Kothan lane.

Before us in second appeal, the legal contentions argued were as follows: (Ground No. 5 in the S. A. Memo.) "The Courts below erred in holding that the determination of an unnecessary issue in the judgment in the Second Appeal No. 1225 of 1907 operated as res judicata when that decision was not the basis of the decree passed by the High Court." (6) "As the High Court dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on a different point and in spite of the finding as to the ownership, the law of res judicata would not apply." (7) "The Subordinate Judge erred in supposing that the determination of any issue in the previous suit would operate as res judicata."

The two findings in the former suit which are in controversy now are: (1) the plaintiffs are the full owners of the vacant site including the western lane site; (2) the defendants have no right of way to and along the lane and they cannot, therefore, object to the wall as proposed in the joint statement on the ground that though it gave them full access to all portions of the well, it did not give them access to the lane.

So far as ownership in the vacant site is concerned, even accepting as correct the very limited rule of res judicata contended for by the defendants, the High Court in their final judgment in the former litigation refused the defendants their costs on the express ground that the defendants claimed ownership of the site and the finding was against them on that question. The High Court decision, therefore, at least as to costs, was expressly based on that finding as to the ownership of the site and hence that finding is clearly res judicata in this suit.

Then comes the more difficult question whether the finding that the defendants have no right of easement to pass along the vacant site to the lane is also res judicata. It was first sought to be argued by the appellants that the District Judge himself in the former suit did not give any such findings because he mentioned it only in the 3rd paragraph of his finding and not in the fifth and final paragraph of his finding. I do not think that this argument needs further notice.

Then it was contended that though the District Judge might have given that finding in the former suit, the High Court did not confirm that finding. As we read the judgment of the High Court, however, we entertain no doubt that this Court accepted all the conclusions of the District Court, which included not only the finding that the defendants had a right of access to all parts of the wall of the well but also that they had no right of easement of way to and along the western lane.

Having thus cleared the ground, we are left the comparatively simple question for decision, namely, whether when the plaintiffs' former suit was dismissed notwithstanding the finding against the defendants that they had no right of easement to pass through the vacant site to go to the lane, this latter finding is res judicata against the defendants in the present litigation.

Numerous cases and elaborate arguments were placed before us by Mr. S. Rangachariar and by Mr. B. Seetharam Rao on either side. I shall deal only with the more important cases.

Mr. Rangachariar relied principally upon an observation in the Privy Council decision reported as Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1) and on observations in Achanta Venkatasuryanarayana v. Yellapragadu Shiva Sankara Narayana (2). Mr. Seetharam Rao relied, on the other hand, principally on the Privy Council case in Krishna Behari Roy v. Bunwari Lall Roy (6) and upon this Court's decision reported as Varathayyangar v. Krishnasami (7). In Run Bahadwr Singh v. Lucho Koer (1) the facts were as follows:—The plaintiff sued his brother's widow for possession of property on the ground that he and his brother were undivided in interest at the brother's death and that the widow was in unlawful possession as the plaintiff, being the survivor, was solely entitled to the property. Before the suit was brought, there was a succession certificate proceeding, in which it was held that the two brothers were divided. The widow defended the suit on the plea that her husband and the plaintiff were divided in interest and she claimed a finding in her favour on this question, both on the evidence let in by her as to the division and on the legal ground that the finding in her favour as to division in the succession certificate proceedings was res judicata against the plaintiff. She also relied upon a finding in another suit brought for rent against a tenant, which suit was within the cognizance of a District Munsif (who had no authority to try the later suit which was filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court). The Subordinate Judge on the evidence held that the brothers were separate in estate, though he decided against her contention that the decisions in the certificate proceedings and in the suit in the District Munsif's Court were also res judicata in her favour. The High Court on appeal upheld her contentions as to res judicata in her favour and instead of stopping with that, they went into the evidence and gave a finding on the evidence that the brothers were joint in estate. They, however, held that as that question was res judicata and had to be, therefore, decided by themselves against their finding on the evidence, they dismissed the appeal.

Then on the final appeal to the Privy Council, their Lordships agreed with the Subordinate Judge and differed from the High Court on the question of res judicata. Hence, their Lordships had to go into the merits and on the merits also, they agreed with the Subordinate Judge and differed from the High Court. During the course of their Lordships' judgment, there are two sentences at page 306 as follows: "The widow has not appealed against the decree nor could she because it is in her favour, but she has appealed against the finding of the High Court on the evidence that the brothers were joint in estate." "It may be supposed that her advisers were apprehensive lest that finding should hereafter be held conclusive against her, but this could not be so, inasmuch as the decree was not based upon it but was made in spite of it." I feel bound to state with due respect that taking advantage of these two sentences, several decisions in all the High Courts have tried to whittle down the beneficial doctrine of res judicata so as to promote vexatious litigation. It will be seen that in the case before their Lordships though the High Court gave a finding on the evidence that the brothers were joint in estate, they also gave the exactly opposite finding that the brothers were divided in interest because they thought themselves bound by the doctrine of res judicata to give that exactly opposite finding, and their decree was rightly based upon this latter finding as to division and ignoring the former finding as to joint interest. Their Lordships' observations, when read in the light of this state of facts, can only mean that where in spite of an useless finding on the evidence, an exactly opposite finding is arrived at by the same Court as the basis of its decree, then the former useless finding can never be res judicata in subsequent proceedings. The rule enunciated in some of the decisions of the High Courts that no finding against defendants can ever be res judicata under any circumstances if the plaintiff's suit was ultimately dismissed (notwithstanding that finding) goes in my opinion far beyond their Lordships' intentions.

I shall now consider the decision in Achanta Venkatasuryanarayana v. Yellapragadu Shiva Sankara Narayaana (2) decided by the Chief Justice and Seshagiri Aiyer, J. In this case, the plaintiff (evidently as reversionary heir) sued for a declaration that the adoption of the defendant by the widow of the last male owner was invalid. The District Court dismissed the suit as barred by limitation as being brought more than 6 years after the plaintiff had knowledge of the adoption, but gave also a finding against the defendant that his adoption was invalid through want of authority in the widow. The defendant appealed against the finding that his adoption was invalid. This Court, while dismissing the appeal because it was an appeal against a finding, remarked that "it was suggested on appellant's behalf that the finding may operate as res judicata against him" but that "there was no foundation for this contention." Then they refer among other decisions to the Privy Council case of Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1) as authority for their view. In the first place, the observation is obiter because the real basis of the decision was that no appeal was allowed by the Civil Procedure Code against a mere finding where the decree itself was entirely in the defendant's favour. In the next place, the exact scope of the short observation of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1) (which I have already quoted) has not been discussed in detail and it is, no doubt, true that in some classes of cases at least, a finding against the defendants by a Court which finally dismissed the plaintiff's suit on some other ground cannot be relied on as res judicata against the defendant in a subsequent suit. The case of Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1) belongs to one of those classes of cases. In that case the finding relied on (as to the joint interest of two brothers) was completely nullified by an opposite finding (as to the division of status between the brothers, based on res judicata). That case well illustrates one of the classes of cases in which the finding in the first suit will not constitute the decision res judicata in the subsequent suit. Achanta Venkatasuryanarayana v. Yellapragada Shiva Sankara Narayana (2) belongs to another such class, namely, where the plaintiff is non-suited on the ground of limitation, res judicata, misjoinder, insufficient Court-fees on the plaint, jurisdiction or a like technical and preliminary ground and yet the Court proceeds to give a finding on the merits against defendant to save a remand by the Appellate Court. In these classes of cases also, such findings in the first suit will not be res judicata if, on appeal, the Appellate Court does not itself think it necessary to give its decision on them, or if in case there is no appeal, it is evident that the first Court did not intend its findings to be final.

At this stage, I might turn to the consideration of the section itself in the Civil Procedure Code on this point. Section 11 says (omitting the immaterial portions): "No Court shall try any issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties has been heard and finally decided in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit and has been heard and finally decided by such Court." The only condition (besides conditions not in dispute and irrelevant to our present subject) imposed by the section to restrict the rule prohibiting a re trial of an issue (besides the admitted other conditions) is that the issue should have been heard and finally decided in the first suit. There is no further condition that the decision of the issue should have been the basis of the decree. It may be that it should not be wholly inconsistent with the decree (this is not the same thing as the decree being in spite of the finding) or with any other finding which is the basis of the decree and which nullifies its effect [as in the Privy Council case of Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1)]. It may also be that an issue should not be held to have been finally decided against the defendant when it is clear from the judgment that the Court did not intend it as a final decision on that particular point, such intention being ordinarily presumed where the suit is decided against the plaintiff on a preliminary point as to limitation, etc.

In the present case, I have no reasonable doubt that the High Court decided and intended to decide finally in the former litigation that the defendants had no right of access to the lane through the plaintiffs' vacant site and such a decision is res judicata, and the fact that the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed does not prevent the operation of the rule deducible from the plain language of the section in the Civil Procedure Code.

I am aware that there are several Calcutta cases in which it has been broadly laid down that no finding against the defendant is res judicata against him where the suit is finally dismissed unless that finding is incorporated in the decree as a declaration of rights and liabilities. I do not intend to consider them all nor the Bombay and Allahabad cases holding similar views, and I only wish to state that I respectfully dissent from the decisions in these following particular cases, namely, in Nundo Lall Bhuttacharjee v. Bidhoo Mookhy Debee (3), in Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (5) in Parbati Debi v. Mathura Nath Banerjee (4). I might add that these Calcutta decisions cannot in my opinion be reconciled with the decisions of the same Court in Niamut Khan v. Khadu Buldia (8) [which was, a Full Bench decision of five Judges and which was in my opinion, wrongly held in Nando Lall Bhuttacharjee v. Bidhoo Mookhy Debee (3) to have been overruled by the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1)], in Khater Mistri v. Sadruddi Khan (9), and Ekabar Sheikh v. Hara Bewah (10) (Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., was a party to the decision of this last case).

I shall now turn to the more important decisions which were relied on by Mr. Seetharam Rao and which, I think, support the view I have taken. In Krishna Behari Roy v. Bunwari Lall Roy (6), the facts were as follows:—B, as adopted son and heir of G, instituted a suit to set aside certain Putni leases on the ground that they were not binding upon him. The Putni lessee defendants raised two pleas, namely, (1) that B the plaintiff was not the adopted son and heir of G, and (2) that the Putni leases were binding upon him even if he was the adopted son and heir as they were given for a proper and necessary purpose. Then K, the reversionary heir of G, was made a supplemental defendant and he also denied the plaintiff's status as adopted son. The first Court found (a) that the adoption was true and valid, (b) that, however, the Putni lease was granted for a proper and necessary purpose, and so that Court dismissed the suit. The Putnidars did not appeal, but K, the reversionary heir, appealed against the finding as to adoption. According to the present prevailing course of decisions, he had no right of appeal but, anyhow, he appealed and his appeal was unsuccessful and a second appeal to the High Court was also unsuccessful. Then he brought a second suit to set aside the adoption, and it was contended by the adopted son that the finding in the former suit in favour of his adoption was res judicata against K. That view prevailed in the lower Courts and also in the Privy Council. Their Lordships of the Privy Council say: It is unnecessary to go at length into the reasons for the decision, because those reasons appear in a recent judgment of this Board in the case of Scorjomonee Dayee v. Suddanand Mohapatter (11). In that judgment it is said: "Their Lordships are of opinion that the term 'cause of action' is to be construed with reference rather to the substance than to the form of action.... But even if this interpretation were not correct, their Lordships are of opinion that this clause in the Code of Procedure would by no means prevent the operation of the general law relating to res judicata, founded on the principle 'nemo debet bis vexari, pro eadem causa.' This law has been laid down by a series of cases in this country with which the profession is familiar. It has probably never been better laid down than in a case, which was referred, of Gregory v. Molesworth (12) in which Lord Hardwicke held that where a question was necessarily decided in effect, though not in express terms, between the parties to the suit, they could not raise the same question as between themselves in any other suit in any other form; and that decision has been followed by a long course of decisions the greater part of which will be found noticed in the very able notes of Mr. Smith to the case of the Duchess of Kingston (13)."

It will be noticed that in the above case, the finding on a question of fact arrived at in a former suit against the defendant was held to be res judicata, even though that suit itself had been dismissed on another ground, namely that the Putni sought to be set aside was binding on the plaintiff.

The next case I shall refer to is the case in Varadhayyangar v. Krishnasami (7) decided by Muthusawmy Aiyar and Parker, JJ. The facts were as follows: V sought in the first suit to eject K from a certain land, alleging that K was a trespasser. K pleaded that he held as mortgagee under two documents one for Rs. 1,000 and the other for Rs 50. On second appeal, it was held that K was entitled to defend his possession only by virtue of the mortgage for Rs. 50 and that his other mortgage for Rs. 1,000 was invalid for want of registration. The suit was, however, dismissed as the plaintiff's claim was to eject the defendant as if he was a trespasser, which defendant was not. Then V brought the second suit to redeem the mortgage for Rs. 50. The defendant again set up that he had a further mortgage for Rs. 1,000. The District Judge held that notwithstanding the finding in the former suit that the mortgage for Rs. 1,000 was not binding upon the plaintiff, the defendant held a mortgage for a total sum of Rs. 1,050 (Rs. 1,000 plus Rs. 50). He, however, dismissed the second suit principally on the ground that it was barred by sections 13 and 43 of the old Procedure Code. On second appeal, the learned Judges say: "The decision of the question, however, whether respondent could defend his possession under the mortgage for Rs. 1,000 and if not under document 2 '(which was for Rs. 50)' was conclusive and binding upon the parties to that suit and the respondent" (that is the defendant) "is, therefore, estopped from now alleging the contrary." Thus, they clearly held that the defendant in that case was bound by the decision against him in the former suit that the bond for Rs. 1,000 was not binding on the plaintiff, even though the decree in the former suit was a decree dismissing that suit wholly. My opinion that the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1) should not be extended beyond its legitimate application to the facts of that case (and its application to the decision of the High Court which gave two contradictory findings and which their Lordships of the Privy Council were criticising) finds strong support from the decision in Krishna Behari Roy v. Bunwari Lall Roy (6) which their Lordships did not refer to, much less overrule in Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1). As I said already, in Krishna Behari Roy v. Bunwari Lall Roy (5) the first suit was dismissed notwithstanding or in spite of the decision against the defendant K as to the validity of the plaintiff's adoption, and yet, the finding against the defendant in the former suit was held to be res judicata against that party in the second suit. Here I might be permitted a few general observations. It has been argued that as the doctrine of res judicata prevents a Court from going into the merits, it should be very strictly and guardedly applied. If this means that where a former decision is relied on as res judicata, it and its contents should be strictly proved and mere ambiguous passages in the judgment should not be pressed in favour of the party claiming res judicata in his favour, I agree. But if it is intended to be argued that even where the finding is clear and where the intention of the Court to give a definite decision which is not inconsistent with the decree or with any other finding is also patent, still the Court should try its best to evade the very beneficial doctrine that a man should not be twice vexed in respect of the same contest as to his rights and the time of the Courts should not be wasted by trying the same matter several times, I entirely dissent. Just as Mr. Justice Mahmood said in a well-known Allahabad case that the doctrine that Statutes of limitation as restricting the trial of questions on the merits should be strictly construed is a dangerous doctrine because Statutes of limitation are also Statutes of repose, based on public policy, so I would hold that the doctrine of res judicata should not be unduly conditioned and qualified by all sorts of ingenious attempts at evasion, where there has been in fact a fair contest on a question in dispute between the parties and the Court has intended to give and has given a final decision on that question. Here I might quote certain passages from the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sheoparsan Singh v. Ramnandan Prashad Narayan Singh (14): "There has been much discussion at the Bar as to the application of the plea of res judicata as a bar to this suit....But in view of the arguments addressed to them, their Lordships desire to emphasize that the rule of res judicata, while founded on ancient precedent, is dictated by a wisdom which is for all time. 'It hath been well said', declared Lord Coke, 'interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium' otherwise great oppression might be done under colour and pretence of law, [Ferrer's case (15)]. Though the rule of the Code may be traced to an English source, it embodies a doctrine in no way opposed to the spirit of the law as expounded by the Hindu commentators. Vijnaneswara and Nilakanta include the plea of a former judgment among those allowed by law, each citing for this purpose the text of Katyayana". "And so the application of the rule" (that is the rule of res judicata) "by the Courts in India should be influenced by no technical considerations of form but by matter of substance within the limits allowed by law."

In this case, to repeat, this Court finally decided as a matter of substance in the former suit that the defendants had no right of ownership to and no right of easement in the vacant site other than an easement of access to the well and its whole circumference. The lower Courts were, therefore, right in treating the decisions on these two matters as res judicata and I would dismiss the second appeal with costs.

NAPIER, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by the plaintiff to enforce his right to build a wall round a well on his land, which right he claimed to have been established in an earlier suit against the defendants. The defendants set up in this suit all the defences which they pleaded previously in the former suit and contended that the matter was not res judicata. This latter is the sole question before us.

My learned brother has set out the facts at length in his judgment. In the first suit the plaintiff claimed the ownership of the property and that the sole right of the defendants was access to a part of the well. He had built a wall in such a manner as to give such access and claimed an injunction against the defendants to prevent them from interfering. The defendants claimed ownership of the whole plot of land claimed by the plaintiff and alternatively easement rights across it. When the case came before the High Court in second appeal it was remitted for findings to the District Court, and I agree with my learned brother that the result of those findings was that the site belonged to the plaintiff and that the sole right of the defendants was a right of property in the structure of the well and a right of access to the whole of the well. These findings were accepted by the High Court, but as the plaintiff had claimed to be entitled to limit the defendants and was building a wall so as to give access to a part only of the well the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. The plaintiff subsequently built a wall giving full effect to the rights found to exist in the defendants by that judgment, and the defendants again interfered with the result that the plaintiff was compelled to file the present suit.

In this suit the defendants have set up exactly the same claims as were negatived in the former suit and contend that the findings in that suit are not res judicata because in spite of those findings the suit was dismissed. We have to decide whether this contention is well founded. The proposition is stated as follows:—that where in spite of the actual findings the suit of the party in whose favour the findings were arrived at is dismissed for any reason those findings are not res judicata. The question is to be decided on the language of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code and the decisions based on it. The words of section 11 are: "No Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties,.....and has been heard and finally decided by such Court."

We have found that the matter directly and substantially in issue in this suit was directly and substantially in issue in the former suit and has been heard in that suit. It is contended, however, that it has not been finally decided and even if finally decided, there has been engrafted on this section by decisions of the Privy Council the limitation above referred to. As there is authority for this contention in decisions of other Courts, I think it necessary to examine the question somewhat at length.

The first thing to be noted is that the section does not say that the decision must be engrafted in a decree. That this is unnecessary will of course be apparent from the fact that it would depend entirely on the question as to who was the plaintiff and who was the defendant in any suit, whether the rights were so incorporated. If the person in whose favour the right was established was the plaintiff, those rights would appear in the decree. If on the form of the litigation he was the defendant, the suit against him would simply be dismissed and the decree would be silent on the subject. We have here a case, however, where the rights have been found in favour of the plaintiff but the suit has been dismissed because he put his claim too high.

The basis of the law of res judicata is stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sheoparsan Singh v. Ram Nandan Prashad Naryan Singh (14). In England the proposition is that it is for the well being of the State that there should be an end of the litigation. That is the doctrine declared by Lord Coke. In ancient India it is founded on the text of Katyayana that if a person defeated at law sues again he should be answered "you were defeated formerly". These are the foundations of the doctrine as stated by their Lordships on page 706 of that case. Their Lordships further point out what is most important that the application of the rule by the Court should be influenced by no technical considerations of form but by matter of substance. Applying this doctrine to the language of section 11, it seems difficult to argue that where the matter has been directly and substantially decided it is not finally decided because the form of the litigation or the extent of the plaintiff's claim prevented a decree in accordance with the decision.

The law of res judicata as applicable to India was considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council on the construction of the first Civil Procedure Code, Act VIII of 1859. Section 2 of that Code provided that "Civil Courts shall not take cognizance of any suit brought on any cause of action which shall have been heard and determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit." This language was considered by their Lordships in Soorjomonee Dayee v. Suddanund Mohapatter (11). At page 315 the report states that if the term 'cause of action' will not directly cover the matter which is claimed to be res judicata, they are of opinion that this clause "would by no means prevent the operation of the general law relating to res judicata founded on the principle 'nemo debet bis vexari, pro eadem causa' "; and their Lordships adopt the language of Lord Hardwicke in Gregory v. Molesworth (12) that "where a question was necessarily decided in effect, though not in express terms, between parties to the suit, they could not raise the same question as between themselves in any other suit in any other form." These propositions were reiterated by the Board in a case on the same Code 3 years later, Krishna Behari Roy v. Bunwari Lall Roy (6). That case is of importance because, as pointed out by my learned brother, the position was very like the position in this case. In the former suit in that case A, claiming to be the adopted son and heir of B, instituted a suit to set aside certain Putni leases. One of the defences was that A was not the adopted son of B, and a certain person C, who claimed to be the reversionary heir of B, was made a co-defendant. This issue was tried and decided in favour of A, but the suit was dismissed as it was found in favour of the Putnidar that the Putni could not be set aside. This judgment was upheld by the High Court. Subsequently C brought a suit against A to set aside the adoption alleged by him. The High Court held that the matter was res judicata and this view was upheld by the Privy Council on the authority of their previous decision in Soorjoomonee Dayee v. Suddanund Mohapatter (11). I agree with my learned brother that this authority covers the present case; and it is not argued before us, and could not be successfully argued, that the more definite language of the present Code has in any way limited the scope of the doctrine Vide Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1). This principle was applied by this Court in a case, Varathayyangar v. Krishnasami (7). The question was also considered by a Full Bench of five Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Niamut Khan v. Phadu Buldia (8), where their Lordships stated that they are bound to follow in its integrity the rule laid down by the Privy Council in the above cases. In that case A brought a suit against B for enhancement of rent. B's defence was, first, no notice, secondly, that the rent was not enhanceable. The Munsif found that the rent was enhanceable but dismissed the suit for want of notice. The decision of the Full Bench was that as the opinion of the Court has been given on a question which had been raised by the pleadings and argued, that opinion must be considered as res judicata even though it may not have been embodied in the decree. In a subsequent case in the same Court, Thakur Mogundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (5), a Bench of that Court declined to follow the judgment of the Full Bench on two grounds, (1) that the decision had not been followed in that Court, and (2) that the Privy Council in a more recent case had expressed an opinion which was in opposition to the judgment of the Full Bench. It is to be noted that the Bench did not consider the judgment of the Privy Council on which the decision of the Full Bench was founded, nor did they note that the subsequent decision of the Privy Council, namely, Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1), did not purport in any way to overrule the previous decision quoted at length by their Lordships. In my opinion the learned Judges misunderstood the decision in Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1). The facts of this case were as follows:—One Run Bahadur Singh sued the widow of his deceased brother, Murlidhar Singh, to recover possession of Murlidhar's property on the ground that he and his brother were joint in estate. The widow maintained that the brothers were separate and claimed a widow's estate. She further maintained that the question had been conclusively determined in her favour in a former suit. The High Court determined the plea of res judicata in her favour. At the same time the High Court considered the evidence adduced in the trial on the point and found that the brothers had been joint. But having decided that the matter was res judicata in her favour they dismissed the suit. The widow appealed against the finding of facts on the evidence, and with regard to that their Lordships of the Privy Council say, "it may be supposed that her advisers were apprehensive lest that finding should be hereafter held conclusive against her, but this could not be so inasmuch as the decree was not based upon it but was made in spite of it." It is this language which has given rise to what I conceive to be the misapprehension in the subsequent cases. For it has been treated as a dictum that wherever there is a finding which is not given effect to by a decree that finding is not res judicata. I am clear that their Lordships of the Privy Council never intended to lay down any such proposition. They simply said that where a Court gives a finding because it is bound to do so by reason of the application of the doctrine of res judicata and embodies that finding in a decree, any other finding on the evidence which negatives the finding that is the basis of the decree cannot be res judicata. This proposition seems to me to be obvious, for the finding based on the finding of res judicata must continue to be res judicata for all time and necessarily a finding of fact on the evidence cannot have the slightest effect. It is certainly unusual for the High Court to give findings on the evidence where they have found the opposite on a plea of res judicata, but it is done every day in the original Courts of this country. Munsifs return findings on all issues and it would be an extraordinary contention that a finding of fact on one issue by a Munsif on the evidence should have any validity as against his own finding based on res judicata which has been upheld in the Appellate Court. The learned Vakil for the appellant has pointed out that this decision in Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (5) has been followed in subsequent cases. I do not think it necessary to examine them, because I am satisfied that this decision is based on a complete misunderstanding of the decision in Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1) and that the true principles were stated in the decision of the Full Bench of that Court in Niamut Khan v. Phadu Buldia (8).

My learned brother has dealt with some cases of this Court which seem to adopt the view laid down in Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (5) as good law. If those decisions do go to the length of the propositions stated in Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (5), I must respectfully dissent from them. This case is, in my opinion, clearly covered by the decision of the Privy Council in Krishna Behari Roy v. Bunwari Lall Roy (6) and I am bound to follow it.

I agree with my learned brother that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Oudh Civil Courts Act (XIII of 1879), s. 7—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 24, 92—Suit under s. 92, whether can be transferred by District Judge to Additional District Judge.

Section 7 of the Oudh Civil Courts Act permits a District Judge to assign, with the sanction of the Judicial Commissioner, to an Additional District Judge any of the duties connected with the trial of civil suits cognizable by a Civil Court. [p. 47, col. 1.]

Therefore, a District Judge has power to transfer a suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code to an Additional District Judge, provided the assignment of such suits has been sanctioned in the manner required by law. [p. 47, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 22nd April 1919.

Mr. Mahesh Prasad, for the Applicants.

Mr. B. B. Chandra, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for the revision of an order passed by the District Judge of Lucknow, transferring a suit pending in his Court for trial to the Court of the Third Additional District Judge.

The suit in question was instituted under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the argument of the learned Counsel who appears for the plaintiffs is that such a suit is not covered by section 7 of the Oudh Civil Courts Act (XIII of 1879) and cannot be transferred by the District Judge to any other Court for trial.

Section 7 lays down that when the business before any District Judge requires the aid of Additional Judges for its speedy disposal, the Local Government may, upon the recommendation of the Judicial Commissioner, appoint such Additional Judges as may be requisite. It further declares that such Additional Judges shall perform any of the duties of a Judge under Chapter III of tha Act which the District Judge may, with the sanction of the Judicial Commissioner, assign to them and in the performance of such duties they shall exercise the same powers as the District Judge. Chapter III deals with the general jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in Oudh. Section 17, which forms a part of Chapter III, lays down that subject to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, section 15, and of any other enactment for the time being in force, the jurisdiction of a District Judge extends to all original suits cognizable by the Civil Courts. A suit under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure is unquestionably an original suit cognizable by certain classes of Civil Courts, and the question for consideration is whether there is anything in that section to prevent an Additional Judge from taking cognizance of it, if it is transferred to his Court by the District Judge.

It is desirable in this connection to refer for comparison to the provisions of the old Code of Civil Procedure, section 539 of which required that such a suit could only be instituted in the High Court or in the District Court within the local limits of whose civil jurisdiction the whole or any part of the subject-matter of the trust was situated. No power was there reserved to the Local Government to empower any other Court to try the same. Section 25 of the old Code of Civil Procedure did not empower the District Judge to transfer a suit pending in his Court to a subordinate Court. Section 92 of the present Code permits such a suit to be instituted in the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction or in any Court empowered in that behalf by the Local Government within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the whole or any part of the subject-matter of the trust is situated. Section 10 of the Oudh Civil Courts Act (XIII of 1879) declares that the Court of the District Judge shall be deemed to be the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction in the district over which his jurisdiction extends, and that the control over all the Courts in such district shall be vested in the District Judge, subject to the general control of the Judicial Commissioner.

The powers conferred by section 24 of the present Code of Civil Procedure are wide enough to empower a District Court to transfer any suit pending before it for trial or disposal to any other Court subordinate to it, provided it is competent to try or dispose of the same. An Additional District Judge is competent to try and dispose of a suit filed under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, if it is transferred to him for disposal by the District Court, because under section 7 of Act XIII of 1879 he can exercise, in respect of the duties assigned to him, the same powers as the District Judge. His jurisdiction is co-ordinate with that of the District Court, though for the purposes of section 24, he is deemed to be subordinate to the District Court. Section 7 of Act XIII of 1879 merely requires that the sanction of the Judicial Commissioner should be obtained before any functions are assigned to the Additional Judge.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs relies on the decisions in Abdul Karim Abu Ahmed Khan v. Abdus Sobhan Choudhry (1) and Muhammad Musa v. Abul Hassan Khan (2). In the former case a suit was filed under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure in the Court of the District Judge and was subsequently transferred by him to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, after the latter had been invested by name with the power to try that suit by the Local Government. An objection was taken before the Subordinate Judge to the trial of that suit by him, which was upheld on appeal on the ground that the notification empowering him by name was not of the kind contemplated by section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was said that it was a notification directed to a particular Judge and purported to deal with a particular litigation pending on the date of the notification in another Court, and that the District Judge had no power to transfer the suit to a Court which was not competent to dispose of it. In the latter case the transfer of a suit brought under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure by the District Judge to an Additional Judge who was not invested with the power to try such suits by the Local Government was held to be bad. But it is difficult to understand the reasoning on which that judgment proceeds. It was conceded that had the District Judge assigned, under section 8 of Act XII of 1887, to the Additional Judge the function of a District Judge in respect of suits under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, all might have been well. The argument was that the functions so assigned must be general and that an order of transfer under section 24 was insufficient to make the Additional Judge competent to try such a suit. But section 7 of the Oudh Civil Courts Act (XIII of 1879) permits the District Judge to assign, with the sanction of the Judicial Commissioner, to an Additional Judge any of the duties connected with the trial of original suits cognizable by a Civil Court. Reading this section with section 24 of the Code of Civil Procedure the transfer cannot be regarded as illegal, if the assignment of such duties has been sanctioned in the manner required by law.

(1) 13 Ind. Cas. 243; 39 C. 146; 6 C. W. N. 44.
(2) 22 Ind. Cas. 951; 41 C. 866; 18 C. W. N. 612.

Let the transfer of the case as a part of the assignment of the duties to be performed by the Third Additional District Judge be sanctioned and the trial of the case be proceeded with in his Court.

This application is rejected. No order is made as to the costs of this proceeding.

Pleadings Case not put forward in pleadings sought to be proved by evidence—Procedure - Court, duty of.

One T. consigned 51 tins of ghee to the plaintiffs and signed a risk-note in form H in respect of them. When the plaintiffs went to take delivery, it was found that out of the 51 tins of ghee, 25 were empty, 25 were full, and one was leaking. The plaintiffs thereupon refused to take delivery and brought a suit against the Railway Company for damages. T. was examined on commission on behalf of the plaintiffs, but during his examination no suggestion was made by the plaintiffs that the 25 empty tins were substituted for the 25 full tins, and no such case was made in the plaint. More than a month after the examination of T., one of the plaintiffs wanted to examine himself for the purpose of proving that the 25 empty tins had been substituted for the 25 full tins, but the Court did not allow him to do so:

Held, that the Court was quite justified in declining to allow the plaintiffs to embark on a new case at such a late stage of the proceeding. [p. 48, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Burdwan, dated the 27th August 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court at that place, dated the 15th July 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Satish Chandra Mookerjee, for the Appellants.—My client does not deny that he signed the risk-note in form H in respect of the consignment. My grievance is that the learned Munsif wrongly disallowed the second plaintiff to give evidence which he should have done. So I have been greatly prejudiced in the prosecution of my suit. It was no new case that was set up, because the plaint stated thus: 'Instead of 25 tins, 25 empty tins have been put in;' and the plaint was filed on July 23rd, 1915. So how could the learned Munsif shut out evidence on the point? It is not sufficient and does not meet the requirements of the plaintiffs' case that the Kutni man was examined on commission on 11th June 1916. Regard being had to the statement in the plaint, it cannot be said that we were going to make out a new case. No amendment of the plaint was necessary. The suit could have proceeded on evidence being given by the second plaintiff. So the case should be re-heard.

Babu Provash Chunder Mitter (with him Babu Ambicapada Chowdhry), for the Respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs whose suit for damages against the East Indian Railway Company has been dismissed by both the Courts below. It appears that on 5th October 1914 Tilak Chand Piramal at Kutni consigned to the plaintiffs at Asansole 51 tins of ghee and signed a risk note in form H in respect of them. The plaintiffs' case was that on arrival of the tins at Asansole on 13th October 1914 when they went to take delivery it was found that out of the 51 tins of ghee 25 were empty, 25 were full, and 1 was leaking. The plaintiffs wanted to take the 26 tins and give a qualified receipt, but this the Railway Company very properly refused to allow. The consequence was that the ghee remained for sometime before delivery was taken and eventually the full tins and the empty tins were sold. The plaintiffs, on 23rd July 1915, filed the present suit for damages, Rs. 1,099. The only point made by the plaintiffs in this Court is that on 14th July 1916 the second plaintiff was not allowed to give evidence of a case which was then suggested for the first time that the 25 empty tins had been substituted, it is not clear by whom or when, for the 25 full tins. It appears that on 11th June—a little more than a month before—a member of the firm of Tilak Chand Piramal had been examined at Kutni on commission. No such suggestion was made in his evidence, and it is obvious that he was the proper person to prove the identity of the tins consigned by him if there was any question as to their identity. No such case was made in the plaint, and we think that the Munsif was quite justified in declining to allow the plaintiffs to embark on a new case at such a late stage of the proceedings. They certainly could not have been allowed to do so without getting leave to amend their plaint and allow the defendant to put in an additional written statement. Under the risk-note it is clear that no liability fell upon the Railway Company. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 913), s. 30 (1)—Pre-emption—Vendee put in possession—Vendor not in exclusive possession, effect of—Limitation.

The vendors sold certain land owned by them and their nephew, who was a minor, ignoring his right and without joining him in the sale. The land being free of crop, the vendors stated to the Patwari that they had placed the vendee in possession:

Held, that, under the circumstances, it must be held that the vendee took possession of the land on the date of the sale and that limitation began to run from that date under section 30 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 28th February 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Rohtak, dated the 26th November 1917, decreeing possession by pre-emption of the land in suit on payment of Rs. 500.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr Manohar Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT —The only question here is whether this suit to pre empt was within time. At the time of the sale, which was oral, the unmortgaged portion of the land sold was free of crop and the vendors, reporting the sale to the Patwari, stated that they had placed vendee in possession. That statement was sufficient to transfer the possession.

But the District Judge holds that the vendors were not in exclusive possession inasmuch as one Bhartu was in possession with them and he did not join in the sale.

Now Bhartu is a minor nephew of the vendors and his interest has been ignored. Had the vendors sold or purported to sell their shares in the field, their possession could not be said to be exclusive, but they treated the field as their sole property and they were certainly in actual physical possession of it.

In my opinion the vendee took physical possession of this portion of the land sold on 23rd February 1916 and the suit was accordingly time-barred.

The appeal is accepted and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

When an offence is punishable with transportation for life or imprisonment for a term of ten years, if a sentence of transportation for a term less than life is awarded, such term cannot exceed the term of imprisonment, namely, ten years. [p. 49, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where, therefore, an accused, on conviction for an offence under section 395, Penal Code, was sentenced to transportation for 15 years, the High Court reduced the sentence to transportation for a term of ten years, that being the period of imprisonment provided for the offence. [p. 49, col. 2.]

Though the absence of any corroboration of the statement of an approver is not fatal to the conviction of a person named by him as one of the participators in an offence, it is nevertheless sufficient to cast doubt upon its justice and the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Kumaun, dated the 25th March 1919.

Mr. A. S. Osborne, for the Appellants.

Mr. L. M. Banerji (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by nine appellants against a conviction for dacoity by the Sessions Judge of Kumaun. Three of the appellants Allauddin, Tondi and Bhikhari have been sentenced to 15 years' transportation. During the hearing of the case it was pointed out to me, before whom originally the case came, that the legality of this sentence was open to question. At my request the learned Chief Justice appointed two Judges to hear and determine the appeal in order to dispose of the question of the legality of the sentence by an authoritative decision. Since then, however, our attention has been drawn to the case of the Queen v. Naiada (1), in which a Full Bench decided that "when an offence is punishable either with transportation for life or imprisonment for a term of 10 years, if a sentence of transportation for a term less than life is awarded, such term cannot exceed the term of imprisonment, namely, ten years." That authority which dates from 1875 is binding upon us. And the section which we have to administer, namely, section 395 of the Indian Penal Code is in precisely identical terms. We have, therefore, no alternative but to reduce the sentence in the case of Allauddin, Tondi and Bhikhari to a term of transportation for ten years. There is no substance in their appeals, their guilt is perfectly plain and speaking for myself I should have convicted Bhikhari on his own statement for rape. There is no doubt that a horrible rape was committed upon the wife of the complainant and it is a feature of the case that the woman has come forward and described what happened to her. I do not understand why the learned Judge acquitted this scoundrel, and he deserves a whipping as well as a severe term of transportation. However, we cannot deal with the matter which has been disposed of by his acquittal.

With regard to the other appellants Mr. Osborne, who has argued the case of all of them with his usual clearness, has drawn our attention to everything which can be said on their behalf and which comes to very little, and their appeals must be dismissed so far as their conviction is concerned with the exception of one, namely, appellant No. 9, Mahbub Shah He is last on the record amongst the appellants, and was the last person to be arrested and possibly on that account but also possibly, as Mr. Osborne suggests, because he was only brought into the case on account of the statement against him by Karim Bakhsh, he was not in fact put up for identification and was not identified by anybody in the case. In fact upon any analysis of the evidence it appears that the statement of Karim Bakhsh, the approver, against him is totally uncorroborated in law. That is not a fatal objection to the conviction, but in our view it is sufficient to cast doubt upon its justice and, moreover, the learned Judge was not satisfied to act upon Karim Bakhsh's statement alone. He evidently thought that some corroboration was required to satisfy his own mind. Turning to the portion of the judgment which deals with this man's case we find that the learned Judge explained his reason for convicting him by the fact that in addition to the statement of the informer his name had been mentioned to the Mukhia by one of the co-accused when the first detailed information of the participants in the dacoity was given to any one. The learned Judge, dealing with the mass of matter which he has done with great thoroughness, overlooks the fact that this really is not evidence of the fact at all and, therefore, cannot be used as corroboration of Karim Bakhsh. We, therefore, give Mahbub Shah the benefit of the doubt and reverse his conviction and direct that he be released. The appeal of all the others will be dismissed so far as the conviction is concerned. As we have already said, the sentences of Alla-ud-din, Tondi and Bhikhari must be reduced to ten years' transportation. The remaining appellants, whose convictions are upheld and who do not really seem to have been dealt with undue severity, have the good fortune, as Mr. Osborne has pointed out, to profit by the compulsory reduction of the sentences of the undoubted ring-leaders Inasmuch as Allauddin and Bhikhari certainly deserve severer sentences than the rest, it is only right that the sentences of the remaining five should be reduced. We, therefore, reduce the sentence of ten years' rigorous imprisonment passed on each of the five appellants, Nabbu Khan, Ghasita, Mohammad Husain alias Manna, Nanhe Khan and Abdul Ghani, to one of seven (7) years' rigorous imprisonment each, including three months' solitary confinement.

Confession, uncorroborated, value of—Conviction based on uncorroborated confession, legality of.

A conviction based upon an uncorroborated confession is not bad, if the surrounding circumstances point to the confession having been the outcome of a voluntary act on the part of the confessor, and in the absence of any evidence of coercion either by the Police or any other person. The fact that the confession was retracted before the Committing Magistrate would not deprive it of its voluntary character. [p. 51, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Sahabad, dated the 26th May 1919, sentencing the accused to transportation for life.

Messrs. S. Sinha and Gour Chandra Pal, for the Appellant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The appellant Sheo Prasad Koeri has been sentenced under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code to transportation for life for having committed murder by causing the death of Ram Sarup Koeri on the night of the 3rd April last.

The motive for the crime is alleged to have been that the deceased was suspected of carrying on an intrigue with the wife of the accused, and also with a girl named Asturni who was married to the grandson of Pran Koeri, who was the master and benefactor of Ram Sarup and brother of the accused's grandfather.

The body of the deceased was discovered in the sugarcane field of one Rigan Koeri on the 8th April.

The post mortem examination shows that death was due to strangulation probably caused by pressure of two sticks to the throat.

On the 10th April the accused met one Ram Autar in a neighbouring village, and on being informed by Ram Autar that the Police were searching for him, the appellant agreed to make a full confession on condition that Ram Autar would take steps to save him from punishment. Ram Autar thereupon took the appellant to Pararia, the place where the body was found and where the Sub-Inspector was conducting an investigation.

To the Sub-Inspector the appellant is alleged to have made a full confession at about 7 P. M. In consequence of that confession various persons were arrested on the 11th April, and in the house of one Jagannath the appellant is said to have pointed out a lathi as one of the lathis with which the murder was committed; and also a kudali as being the instrument with which the grave, in which the deceased was buried, was dug. The appellant was detained in Police custody till 5 P. M. on the 12th, when it appears he was produced before the Deputy Magistrate of Sasaram for the purpose of having his confession recorded.

The Deputy Magistrate states that being apprehensive that the accused might still be under Police influence and thereby coerced into making a confession, he remanded the accused to jail for that night. On the following day after repeated warnings he recorded the statement of the accused, from which it appeared that the accused together with five others had caused the deceased to come to the house of Jagannath and had there murdered him.

Both the assessors believe that story. They have accepted the confession as voluntary and have found the accused guilty.

On his behalf it is urged by Mr. Sinha that the confession having been retracted before the Committing Magistrate, it would be extremely unsafe to convict the accused without material corroboration. He contends that there is no material corroboration on the record.

Now the wife of the deceased deposes that the deceased and Jagannath came to the house of the deceased from Paran Koeri's house where they had been attending a feast, and that after a short stay Jagannath took the deceased away to his own house, saying that they were going to listen to some singing. This is some corroboration of that part of the accused's confession which states that Ram Sarup came to the house of Jagannath on the night of the alleged offence.

Next, if the evidence as to the finding of the lathi is believed, that also supplies some corroboration of the accused's story.

There is also the circumstance that when the wife of the deceased first went to the sugarcane field where the body was eventually found there was only a hand protruding out of the ground, and that as soon as the accused who was with the wife of the deceased saw it, he cried out that she had better not accuse any one and that the deceased would never return.

It may be contended that all these pieces of corroborating evidence are weak and would not justify a conviction, if we were not satisfied that the confession made by the accused was a substantially true account of what actually took place. But having considered the circumstances leading to the arrest of the appellant, the period of detention in Police custody, the proceedings of the Deputy Magistrate and the precautions taken by him with regard to the confession, it is impossible to believe that the confession was not voluntary, and that it was not prompted by panic or a hope of mercy.

There is no evidence whatsoever of any coercion either by the Police or any other person, and although a suggestion was made during the commitment enquiry and in the Sessions Court that the accused had been subjected to violence by the Police, there was no evidence whatever brought in support of that suggestion.

It seems that on the morning of the 13th April, after putting the three preliminary questions to the accused, the Deputy Magistrate gave the accused twenty minutes' time to think over what he was about to say; and that thereupon the accused proceeded to relate the part which he had taken in the murder. In these circumstances we are satisfied that the confession, though uncorroborated, was sufficient to justify a conviction.

Mr. Sinha has finally contended that the facts do not establish the offence of murder, and that having regard to the dissolute character of the deceased and the provocation given by him, there cannot be a conviction for any offence graver than culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The provocation was certainly grave but it was not sudden, and there are no circumstances which would justify us in holding that death was not caused after full preparation and with a full knowledge that the injuries inflicted would be likely to cause death.

The appellant himself according to his confession only held the legs of the deceased, while the others strangled him to death; but a conspiracy is clearly established, and, therefore, the appellant must be held guilty of the act which caused death.

ATKINSON, J.—I concur.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195, 435—Sanction to prosecute granted by Magistrate and upheld by Sessions Judge—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

Where a Court exercising jurisdiction under the Criminal Procedure Code sanctions, under section 195 of the Code, the prosecution of a witness for giving false evidence, and the sanction so given is upheld by the Sessions Judge, acting under clause (6) of section 195, the High Court has jurisdiction under section 435 (1) of the Code to call for and examine the record of the proceeding before the Sessions Judge and to set aside the order if it is not satisfied as to its propriety. [p. 53, col. 1.]

The existing state of the law permitting a revision to the High Court from the order of a Sessions Judge under section 195 (6) of the Criminal Procedure Code animadverted upon. [p. 53, col. 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Budaun, dated the 8th March 1919.

Mr. J. M. Banerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application in revision comes before this Court under the following circumstances :—

One Shamshul Hasan brought a complaint before a Magistrate accusing Zahur Uddin and seven other persons of offences under sections 147 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code. At the trial the present applicant in revision, named Muqaddas Husain, appeared as a witness for the complainant Shamshul Hasan. The evidence then given by him has been read to me and I find that, if the Court had felt itself able to act upon that evidence, it would have convicted Zahur Uddin and other persons of the offences alleged against them. As a matter of fact, the trial ended on the 1st of October 1918 in the acquittal of the accused persons. About a month later Zahur Uddin, passing over the complainant Shamshul Hasan and selecting Muqaddas Husain out of the various persons who had given evidence in support of Shamshul Hasan's complaint, applied for sanction under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the prosecution of Muqaddas Husain for the offence of giving false evidence, punishable under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code, alleged to have been committed by him when giving evidence in the criminal case above referred to. Sanction was not sought in respect of any of the statements of fact which formed the material substance of Muqaddas Husain's evidence. Three detached statements were abstracted from amongst the answers which Muqaddas Husain had given in cross-examination and sanction was sought for his prosecution in respect of the same. The Magistrate directed Muqaddas Husain to show cause why the sanction applied for should not be granted, but eventually passed an order as desired in Zahur Uddin's application. That order was dated the 24th January 1919. Muqaddas Husain thereupon applied to the Sessions Judge to revoke the sanction so granted in virtue of his authority under section 195, clause 6, of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Sessions Judge revoked the sanction granted in respect of two of the statements referred to in the order of sanction but has upheld the same in respect of the one remaining statement. Against this order, dated March the 8th, 1919, Muqaddas Husain comes to this Court in revision. It took him more than a month to present his application in revision before this Court and it has taken about a month and a half more for the said application to come up for hearing. The result is that more than $\frac{2}{3}$rds of the entire period of six months, which the Legislature contemplates as being the period for which an order of sanction shall remain in force, have gone by, and all proceedings based upon the said order have remained pending, having been stayed by the order of this Court passed at the time when this application was admitted. The rights and remedies open to Muqaddas Husain under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure were exhausted by his application to the Sessions Judge. If the order of sanction had been one passed by a Civil or Revenue Court of competent jurisdiction. in respect of any statements made by Muqaddas Husain as a witness in a civil or revenue proceeding, it is fully settled law that no further remedy would have been open to Muqaddas Husain ; he would have had to stand his trial upon any complaint which Zahur Uddin might see fit to file, within the statutory period of six months, on the strength of the sanction granted to him. It so happens in the present case that the original order of sanction was passed by a Magistrate exercising jurisdiction under the Code of Criminal Procedure and the subsequent order under section 195, clause (6), of the same Code was passed by a Sessions Judge, that is to say, by a Court of criminal jurisdiction inferior to this Court within the meaning of section 4 5, clause 1, of the same Code. It cannot, therefore, be denied that, as the law stands at present, this Court has jurisdiction to call for and examine the record of a proceeding like the present, that is to say of a proceeding under section 195, clause (6), held in the Court of a Sessions Judge. A further opportunity is, therefore, afforded to any person against whom sanction has been granted by one authority, and confirmed by an authority no less competent than that of a Sessions Judge, of further obstructing the process of justice by carrying the matter before this Court in the way of an application for revision. I have been referred to more than one reported case in which this Court has not merely entertained an application for revision similar to the one now under consideration, but has actually interfered with the order granting or refusing sanction. I have never myself denied the authority of this Court to interfere under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as it stands at present. In the case of Ahsanullah Khan v. Mansukh Ram (1) I made an express reservation in favour of the revisional jurisdiction of this Court as an ultimate resource to be employed, if necessary, in order to avoid a failure of justice. The question, as it presents itself to my mind, is wholly one of discretion. The result of an order of sanction is at worst that the person against whom that order is passed may have to stand his trial before a competent Court. The law allows a person against whom the allegation is made that he has committed the grave offence of giving false evidence an opportunity of contesting the propriety of any order of sanction which may be passed against him before one Court of superior jurisdiction to that which passed the said order. My own feeling in the matter is that it would be better in the interests of justice that Courts, at any rate, of so high a standing as the Court of Session, should be trusted to make a fair and equitable use of the powers given them by section 195, clause 6, of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that persons against whom an order of sanction has been passed and has been affirmed by an authority like that of a Sessions Judge should, generally speaking, be discouraged from delaying and obstructing the cause of justice further by invoking the revisional jurisdiction of this Court, unless and until they can show wholly exceptional reasons for so invoking that jurisdiction. This is an easy enough principle to lay down, but the difficulty of applying it lies in the fact that a person coming up to this Court in revision is necessarily heard in the first instance ex parte, and upon inadequate materials. Once he has obtained an order admitting his application, the main purpose of that application is more often than not fully served.

In the present case at any rate, the application of Muqaddas Husain was admitted, and proceedings were stayed, by order of a learned Judge of this Court. Under section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code the duty has been laid upon me of examining the records of the proceedings in the Sessions Court in this matter of sanction for the purpose of satisfying myself as to the propriety of the order passed. I have been driven to the conclusion that it is wholly impossible for me to profess to be satisfied with the propriety of the order in question. It is an order which I should certainly have refused to pass had the application come before me as a Court of first instance; and had it been my duty to deal under section 195, clause 6, of the Criminal Procedure Code with the order of sanction passed by the Magistrate in this case, I should have unhesitatingly revoked the same. The statement in respect of which sanction has been granted for the prosecution of Muqaddas Hussain is in the following words:—

"I am acquainted with Yakub Ali son of Unas Ali. He bears no sort of relationship to me."

(1) 25 Ind. Cas. 350; 12 A. L. J. 511; 36 A. 403; 15 Cr. L. J. 598.

MAHAMMAD MIAN v. EMPEROR.

I understand from an examination of the record of the original criminal trial that it was contended on behalf of Zahur Uddin that there was a feud between himself and the man Yakub Ali son of Unas Ali, referred to in the above statement Presumably the intention was to suggest that that feud was so bitter that any one connected with the said Yakub Ali by any sort of relationship must necessarily be regarded as a prejudiced witness in a case brought against Zahur Uddin. It appears that Zahur Uddin is in possession of information showing that Unas Ali, father of Yakub Ali, was married to a lady whose maternal grandfather was also the paternal grandfather of Muqaddas Husain. I find it difficult to conceive that, if the Court had not before it any stronger reasons for distrusting the evidence of Muqaddas Husain, its opinion as to the veracity of this witness would have been seriously affected one way or the other by the existence of this relationship. Moreover, the matter was not pressed in cross examination, as, in my opinion, it should undoubtedly have been if there was latent intention of making the witness's answer the basis for a charge of perjury. The form of the question put to the witness simply directed his attention to Yakub Ali son of Unas Ali. I do not know now whether Zahur Uddin claims to be in a position to prove that the lady Imtiazunnissa above referred to is actually the mother of Yakub Ali, or is merely one of the wives of Yakub Ali's father. The Magistrate's order of sanction suggests the former, but his review of the documentary evidence laid before him on behalf of Zahur Uddin suggests the latter. In any case the attention of the witness was not drawn to the question of the names of any lady or ladies to whom Unas Ali was married. The answer returned by Muqaddas Husain may have been a rash one. It may have been merely hasty. If it was intended to make that answer the basis of prosecution for perjury, the question should have been pressed home. His attention should have been definitely drawn to the fact that his cross examiner was in possession of instructions according to which a relationship between himself and Yakub Ali was traceable, not through Unas Ali himself, but through a lady whom Unas Ali had married. It seems to me that those conducting the defence of Zahur Uddin at the criminal trial never seriously intended to make anything of this question. They were well content with a hasty answer, which it was possible to represent as false in fact and to use as such hereafter for the annoyance of the witness. Had the question of the relationship between the witness and Yakub Ali been regarded by those responsible for the defence as one of any serious importance, the matter could not have been left where it was. For these reasons I am unable to hold that the order under revision satisfies me as to its propriety and, once the revisional jurisdiction of this Court has been invoked in a matter of this sort, it has to be exercised. My order, therefore, is that I set aside the sanction in question.

Sanction set aside.

CRIMINAL MISCELLANEOUS No. 18 OF 1919.

May 7, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Das.

MAHAMMAD MIAN—ACCUSED—PETITIONER

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526—Transfer of case, principles governing—Bias, apprehension of—Case pre-judged by Magistrate—Criminal trial—Procedure—Defence of accused, consideration of—Court, duty of—Intimidation of accused or Counsel, whether permissible—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 151—Indecent or scandalous questions, when can be asked.

A long series of cases has established the guiding principles upon which Courts should invariably act in dealing with applications for transfer, These are—

(1) that it is expedient for the ends of justice to transfer a case from the file of one Magistrate to that of an another competent to try it, if, by reason of the words or conduct of the Magistrate before whom the case is pending, any party reasonably apprehends that there is bias against him in the mind of the Magistrate, though there may not be in fact actual bias;

(2) the transfer of a case should be ordered when there are circumstances which may reasonably lead the petitioner to believe that the Magistrate has to some extent prejudged the case against him. [p. 56, cols. 1 & 2.]

An accused is entitled to ask the Court to consider his defence, whether true or false, and the Court acts illegally in shutting out questions which tend to establish this defence. [p. 56, col. 2.]

Indecent and scandalous questions may be put either to shake the credit of a witness or as relating to facts in issue, or to determine whether or not a fact in issue existed. If they are put merely to shake the credit of a witness, the Court has complete dominion over them and may forbid such questions, even though they may have some bearing on the question before the Court. But if they relate to facts in issue or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts in issue existed, the Court has no discretion to forbid such questions, though they may be indecent or scandalous. [p. 57, col. 1.]

Where questions are put in cross-examination to some of the witnesses for the prosecution which have not been put to earlier witnesses, it is the weight to be attached to the case that is affected and not the admissibility of the questions, and it is no ground for disallowing them even though they are scandalous or indecent. [p. 57, col. 1.]

Advocates have ample discretion in the conduct of the case of which they are in charge, and the Court cannot fetter their discretion by insisting that their case should be put to this witness or that. [p. 57, col. 1.]

It is highly improper for persons in charge of a prosecution to threaten or intimidate either the accused persons or the Pleaders appearing for them. The position of accused persons is at all times of grave anxiety and persons in charge of a prosecution should remember that nothing should be done by them which may have the effect of intimidating the defence or adding to its anxiety. [p. 58, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order, dated the 9th April 1919, of the District Magistrate, Purnea, refusing to transfer the case on the petition of the accused from the file of the Deputy Magistrate, Purnea.

FACTS briefly stated are that the accused, Mahammad Mian, was the Manager of "Professor" Ram Murti, a Circus Proprietor. He resigned his appointment on the 10th January 1919. R. K. Mitra, an employee of the said Ram Murti, lodged a complaint against the accused that he had embezzled Rs. 1, 50. The defence of the accused was that one of the main motives for instituting the case against him was that the said Ram Murti had been baffled in his attempt to get hold of a woman with whom he, the accused, was living as "husband and wife." Questions on this point were not put to the earlier prosecution witnesses and the Vakil of the prosecution objected that the questions put were scandalous and should be based upon proper instructions adding that Ram Murti might further proceed. The Court thereupon asked the defence Pleader to record in writing his source of information for the satisfaction of the Court as well as for his own protection. The Pleader refused to do this and insisted on putting the questions, adding that the accused had instructed him. The trying Court, being of opinion that the questions were scandalous and not necessary for the decision of the case, disallowed them and made the following note in the order sheet: "Here the defence Pleader put certain questions about Professor Ram Murti's dealing with a woman with whom the accused is living as husband and wife. This is a case of a misappropriation and I do not think I should allow slanderous questions to be asked, particularly when I find from the questions of the defence Pleader that the woman in question is of a doubtful character connected with the accused, who also accordingly has no character. I do not much value instructions on these matters from a man of the moral character of the accused."

Mr. M. Huque (with him Mr. Gour Chandra Pal), for the Accused. The Deputy Magistrate has adopted a non-judicial attitude, interfered with my cross-examination on vital points and prevented my entering into defence This attitude of his has been hostile to me, and there is apprehension in my mind that he has been favouring one party. The Deputy Magistrate has given me no character and I could not give instructions to my Pleader. The questions which were essential to establish my defence have been wrongly disallowed by the Court. It is clear, therefore, that my defence has been prejudged and I do not expect fair and impartial trial in that Court. The Vakil for the prosecution actually threatened my Vakil and, through him, myself, and after this those questions were disallowed and then the Magistrate recorded in the order-sheet that I had no character at all. Quotes Lolit Mohan Moitra v. Surja Kanta Acharjee (1). It is now a well established principle of criminal jurisprudence that when the accused reasonably apprehends from the incidents, though capable of explanation, that the Court is biassed against him even though in fact the Court is not actually so biassed, it is expedient for the ends of justice that the case should be transferred from that Court.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad, Government Advocate, for the Crown.—There is nothing to show that the trying Court is in any way prejudiced against him. Only two incidents are alleged against him. I submit that a trying Court is authorised by law to disallow scandalous and indecent questions which in his discretion are irrelevant to this case. The trying Court has also to satisfy itself that there are reasonable grounds for thinking that the imputation conveyed by such questions is well founded before he can allow those questions to be put. Here the Magistrate says that the questions were undoubtedly scandalous, regarding one Professor Ram Murti who was not a witness in the case. And the Magistrate says that they were put in a needlessly offensive form. Under the law there is a grave responsibility imposed upon Courts in these matters. The suggestions in the question were made at a late stage of the case. The Magistrate at the very worst may have erred in law in disallowing the questions as irrelevant, but that is no ground for transfer of the case. The Magistrate has detailed the circumstances under which he came to record the order in the order sheet about the character of the accused, and they do not show that he was biassed against the accused. The remark that the accused has no character, has reference to the accused's relation with the other sex which admittedly were not very honourable. There is no justification for the remark that the Magistrate has deliberately adopted an hostile attitude to the accused.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for transfer of a criminal case from the Court of the Deputy Magistrate of Purnea to some other Criminal Court. The petitioner complains that the Court has taken up an attitude with regard to him which leads him to believe that he would not get a fair and impartial trial at the hands of the learned Deputy Magistrate and he accordingly invites this Court to transfer the case to the file of some other Magistrate.

A long series of cases have established that (1) it is expedient for the ends of justice to transfer a case from the file of one Magistrate to that of another competent to try it, if, by reason of the words or conduct of the Magistrate before whom the case is pending, any party reasonably apprehends that there is a bias against him in the mind of the Magistrate, though there may not be in fact any actual bias, and (2) the transfer of a case should be ordered when there are circumstances which may reasonably lead the petitioner to believe that the Magistrate has to some extent prejudged the case against him and will in consequence be prejudiced against him. As Lush, J., said in the celebrated case of Serjeant v. Dale (2): "The law, in laying down this strict rule, has regard not so much perhaps to the motives which might be supposed to bias the Judge as to the susceptibilities of the litigant parties. One important object, at all events, is to clear away everything which might engender suspicion and distrust of the tribunal, and so to promote the feeling of confidence in the administration of justice which is so essential to social order and security."

These being the guiding principles upon which the Court invariably acts in dealing with applications of this nature, I have to consider whether, in the circumstances of this case, I should direct the transfer of this case from the file of the Deputy Magistrate of Purnea to that of some other Magistrate. The petitioner contends before me that the learned Deputy Magistrate has not only shut out his defence but has prejudged it with this result that so far as that Court is concerned, there is little chance of his being able to establish his defence. He says that one of the main motives for the institution of this case is that Rama Murti, the Circus Proprietor, who is the real complainant, "was baffled in his attempt to get hold of a woman with whom he, the petitioner, is living as husband and wife." Now this case may be true or false, but it seems to me that he was entitled to ask the Court to consider his case. It appears, however, that the learned Magistrate shut out all questions in cross-examination which tended to establish this defence. The learned Deputy Magistrate, in his explanation to this Court, justified the ruling which he gave on this point, on two grounds, first, the questions were scandalous and not necessary for the decision of the case, and secondly, the suggestions were made at a late stage and were not put to the earlier witnesses examined on behalf of the prosecution.

So far as the first ground is concerned, the learned Magistrate was clearly in error; indecent or scandalous questions may be put either to shake the credit of a witness or as relating to facts in issue or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts in issue existed. If they are put merely to shake the credit of a witness, the Court has complete dominion over them and may forbid such questions, even though they may have some bearing on the question before the Court. But if they relate to facts in issue or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts in issue existed, the Court has no discretion to forbid such questions, though they may be indecent or scandalous. The learned Magistrate thought that in a case of allegad misappropriation, scandalous questions should not be allowed to be asked. But the case of the defence is that no one would have heard of this alleged misappropriation if scandalous circumstances did not exist. It seems to me that the questions related to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts in issue existed and, therefore, should have been allowed to be put.

The second ground put forward by the learned Deputy Magistrate is equally without merit. It is true that the case as suggested by the questions which were disallowed was not put to some of the earlier witnesses examined on behalf of the prosecution. That, in my opinion, affects the weight to be attached to the case, not the admissibility of the questions. Advocates have ample discretion in the conduct of the case of which they are in charge, and the Courts cannot fetter their discretion by insisting that their case should be put to this witness or that. There may be perfectly good explanations why this particular case was not put to some of the earlier witnesses. If a satisfactory explanation is not ultimately given as to why the case of the defence was not put to some of the earlier witnesses, the Court would be entitled to approach that case with suspicion, but the stage for explanation had not arrived, and the Court was not entitled to disallow the questions on that ground. The learned Counsel for the petitioner says that the Court has already made up its mind that the defence must be false because it was not put to some of the earlier witnesses. Another fact prominently brought to my notice is the note of the learned Magistrate to the effect that he "did not much value instructions on these matters from a man of the moral character of the accused." In my opinion, the petitioner may reasonably be apprehensive after this expression of opinion that the Court has prejudged his defence. Instructions on these matters could only be given by the petitioner and if the learned Magistrate does not value these instructions, the petitioner may reasonably think that it would be worse than useless for him to put forward his defence before the Magistrate trying the case.

I think, therefore, that a transfer is expedient in this case. I ought to state, however, that, in my opinion, the Magistrate has no real bias against the petitioner. But he has unfortunately used words which are calculated to create in the mind of the petitioner a reasonable apprehension that justice may not be done to him. I cannot too strongly press upon the Magistrate that "next to the importance of deciding a case fairly and impartially is the importance of conducting oneself in such a manner as to inspire in the minds of the parties a confidence that nothing but absolute justice would be done to them:" [See Lolit Mohan Mcitra v. Surja Kanta Acharjee (1)]. I have no doubt whatever that the learned Deputy Magistrate would have tried the case fairly and impartially, but I have also no doubt that, without intending it, he has unfortunately conducted himself in such a way as has created in the mind of the petitioner a reasonable apprehension that he will not secure absolute justice from him. In this view and without casting the slightest reflection on the Magistrate, I deem it expedient that the case should be transferred from his file.

There is one matter which I cannot pass by in silence. The petitioner alleges that when the questions which were subsequently disallowed by the Magistrate were put on his behalf to Krishnarao, Babu Jyotish Chunder Bhattacharjee, who was appearing for the complainant in this case, "said something indicating a threat that Rama Murti would take legal steps against the defence Pleader." The learned Magistrate, in his explanation, denies that Mr. Bhattacharjee held out a threat that Rama Murti would take legal steps against the defence Pleader, but he admits that he said that Rama Murti might further proceed. In my opinion, the distinction sought to be made by the learned Deputy Magistrate is without a difference Babu Jyotish Chunder Bhattacharjee is a Vakil of standing and eminence and I am unwilling to believe that he could have used expressions which have been imputed to him by the learned Deputy Magistrates; but I deem it my duty to say that it is highly improper for persons in charge of prosecution to threaten or intimidate either the accused persons or the Pleaders appearing for them. The position of accused persons is at all times one of grave anxiety, and persons in charge of prosecution should remember that nothing should be done by them which may have the effect of intimidating the defence or adding to its anxiety.

I direct that the case be transferred to the file of the District Magistrate of Bhagalpore, who will either try it himself or make it over to some officer competent to try it.

Case transferred.

MUHAMMAD ISHAQ—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 250—Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859), ss. 1, 2—Complaint against workman, dismissal of—Compensation, whether can be awarded.

A Magistrate has no jurisdiction, when dismissing a complaint under section 1 of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act, to direct the complainant to pay compensation to the accused. [p. 59, col. 1.]

Criminal reference by the Sessions Judge, Cawnpore.

FACTS appear from the following

REFERRING ORDER.—This is an application for revision against an order of Mr. R. M. White, Joint Magistrate, Cawnpore, ordering the applicant to pay Rs. 5 compensation at the time of dismissing a complaint by the applicant under section 1 of Act XIII of 1859 (Workman's Breach of Contract Act). The order of the Magistrate purports to be under section 250 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. That section begins: "If in any case instituted by complaint as defined in this Code.....a person is accused before a Magistrate of any offence triable by a Magistrate..." An offence is defined as an act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force. I am of the opinion (having regard to the list of punishments given in section 53 of the Indian Penal Code and also on the ground of usage) that an order by a Magistrate under section 2 of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act requiring a workman to perform his service contract (or to re-pay the money) is not an order inflicting a punishment. The punishment only supervenes when such an order is disobeyed. This view has been taken by the Calcutta High Court: Ram Sarup Bhakat, In the matter of (1). Reference may also be made to Averam Das Mochi v. Abdul Rahim (2). There are rulings of the Bombay and Madras High Courts which would suggest that those Courts also hold the same view: Emperor v. Dhondu Krishna Kamblya (3) and King-Emperor v. Takasi Nakayya (4). No case of the Allahabad High Court to this effect has been cited. As the defect in the order of the Magistrate arises from what is, in my opinion, a defect of jurisdiction, I feel bound to report the case to the Hon'ble High Court although on its merits I do not think that the applicant has much to complain of. The Magistrate came to the opinion that the allegation by the applicant that he had advanced the accused Rs. 28 to be re-paid by Rs. 4 a month was probably false and merely a counterblast to the accused having sued him for wages. The Magistrate also found that even if this were not the case, there was no contract of service based on an advance and the case was merely one of a loan. For the reasons stated above, I direct that after obtaining the explanation of the Magistrate the case be reported to the Hon'ble High Court for its orders.

EXPLANATION OF THE MAGISTRATE.—I have nothing to say. I thought that a complaint could not be made in a Criminal Court except in respect of an offence; but I do not dispute the reasoning which leads to the contrary opinion.

JUDGMENT.—For the reasons set out in the referring order of the learned Sessions Judge I direct that the order of the Magistrate by which the accused Mohammad Ishaq was directed to pay Rs. 5 compensation to the complainant be set aside. The money, if paid, will be refunded.

Order set aside.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 447, 457, 511—Attempt and preparation, distinction between—Scaling roof in order to commit theft—Offence—House-breaking—Criminal trespass.

Accused was detected on the roof of a bazaar with an open clasp knife in his hands and two gunny bags. It was found that he had come there with the intention of committing theft:

Held, that the matter not having proceeded beyond the stage of preparation, the accused could not be convicted of an offence under sections 457 and 511 of the Penal Code, but that he was guilty of an offence under section 447 of the Code.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Eastern Sub Divisional Magistrate, Rangoon.

Mr. Shaw, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, a sepoy in the 91st Punjabis, was convicted by the Eastern Sub Divisional Magistrate, Rangoon, under sections 457 and 511, Indian Penal Code, for attempted house breaking by night, with intent to commit theft, in the Sooratee Barra Bazaar at about 1 A. M. on the 3rd February last.

He was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 6 months. He appealed to this Court from the Jail.

I have heard Mr. Shaw who appeared to support the conviction and sentence, and have read the record of the case.

The facts are quite clear. The appeal was only admitted because there was some doubt as to whether the offence committed by the appellant was actually one under sections 457 and 511, Indian Penal Code.

It is proved that the appellant was detected on the roof of the bazaar, with an open clasp knife in his hands, and 2 gunny bags. There is, therefore, no reasonable doubt that he had come there with the intention of committing theft in the bazaar premises, some of which were open to him from where he was situated, if he had descended into the open bazaar.

The evidence of Ahmed Moosaji, Walli Mahomed Sikandar and others proves the case, as stated very clearly, and the defence of the appellant was manifestly false.

On consideration, I do not think that the matter had proceeded beyond the stage of preparation, i.e., that it had not yet arrived at the stage of an attempt, for which some overt act is required. In house-breaking, for instance, it would be necessary to show that the accused had actually done something towards the offence, i.e., such an act as breaking open a wall. In this case it is clear that he was not in the premises, but on the roof thereof. House-trespass required that there should be some entry into the house, or building.

The appellant was, therefore, wrongly convicted under sections 457 and 511, Indian Penal Code. The section applicable appears to me to be section 447, Indian Penal Code. This view is supported by the case of *Walidad v. King Emperor (1).

It is possible that there is some lacuna in the Penal Code, if indeed, as I think, this is correct law, but, as matters stand, I consider that it is the only possible course to take. The conviction of the appellant is altered to one under section 447, Indian Penal Code, and the sentence is reduced to 3 months' rigorous imprisonment, the maximum under that section.

Conviction altered; Sentence reduced.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 109—Security for good behaviour—Arrest under suspicion—Accused residing within jurisdiction—Order directing furnishing of security, legality of.

Accused was arrested under suspicious circumstances and was placed before a Magistrate, within whose jurisdiction he resided, who disbelieved his explanation of his presence at the place where he was arrested, and, under section 109 of the Criminal Procedure Code, bound him over to be of good behaviour:

Held, that the Magistrate's action was bad in law, as it could not be said that the accused was unable to give a satisfactory account of himself within the meaning of clause (b) of section 109 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Cawnpore.

Mr. S. N. Mukerji, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The point raised by this application in revision may be stated thus:—One Laltu was arrested by certain Police Officers along with a number of other persons in a lane in the City of Cawnpore under what were undoubtedly suspicious circumstances. The matter came before the Joint Magistrate of Cawnpore, and he was of opinion that Laltu had not given a true explanation of his presence on the night in question at the spot where the Police arrested him. Upon this finding Laltu has been bound over to be of good behaviour under section 109 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I have ascertained that Laltu resides within the jurisdiction of the Joint Magistrate before whom proceedings were taken. I do not think it is possible to apply the provisions of section 109 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to the state of facts above set forth. There are two cases of this Court more or less in point, that of Sharif Ahmad v. Emperor (1) and that of Ghulam Jilani v. Emperor (2). The latter was obviously a much stronger case against the applicants in revision than is the one now before me. On the principles laid down in these two rulings I am quite satisfied that it cannot be said of Laltu that he could not give a satisfactory account of himself within the meaning of section 109, clause (a), of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I set aside the order against Laltu and direct his sureties to be discharged and his security bond to be cancelled. If he is in custody for failure to furnish security, he must be released.

Order set aside.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is a Rule calling upon the Chief Presidency Magistrate and also on the opposite party to show cause why the order complained of should not be set aside. The complainant complained before the Chief Presidency Magistrate charging the accused-opposite party with cheating and criminal breach of trust. The case set up by the accused was that he had already been tried and acquitted in Burdwan on a charge which involved the same set of facts and that, therefore, this case ought not to be permitted to go on. The matter, however, had already been once before this Court and the Rule that had been obtained by the accused was discharged on the ground that the accused ought to have taken the plea of his previous acquittal before the trial Court as a defence. It is quite impossible to give effect to that judgment without hearing the case and ascertaining what the facts in this case are; and if it becomes necessary to frame a charge, then the accused would be able to set up the previous acquittal as stated by the learned Judges in the former judgment as a plea in his defence. I am not satisfied one way or the other as to whether the facts are or are not the same. It is exceedingly difficult, without having any evidence, to ascertain whether these facts are the same facts that were gone into in the Burdwan Court. That is a matter which has got to be ascertained after hearing the evidence and ascertaining what the facts are in this case and what were the facts found in the Burdwan Court. I think we ought to make the Rule absolute and send the case back to the Presidency Magistrate to have the complaint of the petitioner duly enquired into and determined.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 464, 471—Using false document—Alteration of date—Dishonesty or fraud, absence of, effect of—Offence.

The accused altered the date of a document for the purpose of having the document received in evidence, but the alteration did not in any way help him as by altering the date he ruined his case. He was, nevertheless, convicted of an offence under section 471 of the Penal Code. In appeal to the High Court:

Held, that inasmuch as the element of "dishonesty" or "fraud" required under section 464 of the Penal Code was wanting, the conviction under section 471 could not be maintained.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 10th May 1919.

Mr. G. W. Dillon, for the Applicant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Additional Sessions Judge has tried this case with great care. His reasoning is for the most part excellent and his conclusions of fact are, in my opinion, absolutely made out.

I am satisfied that the appellant deliberately altered the figure 1282 into the figure 1262, under the impression that if he did not make the alteration the document would not be received in evidence. But the question remains whether on the facts as found by the learned Additional Sessions Judge an offence is made out under the law. In my opinion an offence is not made out because the element of "dishonesty" or "fraud" required under the provisions of section 464 is wanting. "Dishonesty" is defined in sections 23 and 24 of the Indian Penal Code. Now what did the appellant do here? He made an alteration for a very silly reason. As a matter of fact he mismanaged his case from beginning to end. It was perfectly true that the Zemindar's predecessors-in-interest had granted the appellant's predecessors in-interest land on favourable terms in recognition of their service. Now this circumstance was one which the Settlement Officer would no doubt have taken into consideration under the proviso to section 87, Local Act III of 1901, in an application for enhancement of rent. He would not be bound by the fact one way or another, but he would take it into consideration. The applicant could in no way be helped by making this alteration. The lease had been executed in 1282 Fasli, that is to say, in 1875 A. D. He could not be satisfied with the truth, but with that stupid low cunning that distinguishes so many persons of his class not only in the Basti district, he wanted to throw the document back to the year 1857 and in consequence ruined his own case. He behaved badly and improperly, but he did not behave "dishonestly" within the meaning of the law, and as he did not behave dishonestly or fraudulently within the meaning of the law, he cannot be convicted under section 471. The result is that I accept the appeal and set aside the conviction and sentence.

Appeal accepted.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 193, 423—Kabuliyat, whether document, within meaning of s. 423—Revision against acquittal—Question of law not free from difficulty—High Court, interference by.

It is doubtful whether the language of section 423 of the Penal Code could be so interpreted as to include a kabuliyat within its scope [p. 62, col. 2.]

The accused executed a registered document purporting to be a kabuliyat in favour of the complainant which contained recitals designedly false. According to the accused this kabuliyat was accepted by the complainant:

Held, that as the recitals in the kabuliyat would be evidence against the complainant, the accused was guilty of an offence under section 193 of the Penal Code [p 63, col 1.]

Where in an application for revision against an order of acquittal the questions of law that arose were not in all respects free from difficulty, the High Court refused to interfere in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. [p. 63, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, 24 Pergannahs, dated the 5th December 1918, reversing that of the Deputy Magistrate, Diamond Harbour, dated the 31st May 1918.

Mr. Sasmul, Babus Gagan Chand Bural and Santosh Kumar Pal, for the Petitioner.

Moulvi A. K. S. Akram, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The opposite parties in this case were convicted by the Magistrate of offences under sections 423 and 193 of the Penal Code and sentenced to terms of imprisonment. On appeal they were acquitted by the Sessions Judge. The petitioner, the complainant in the case, then obtained this Rule calling upon them to show cause why the acquittal should not be set aside.

The Magistrate found, in accordance with the allegations made by the petitioner, that the opposite parties had executed and registered a document purporting to be a kabuliyat in respect of certain land, which contained recitals designedly false. The document stated that the petitioner and his full brother and the other maliks of the land had demanded a kabuliyat from the opposite parties and that the kabuliyat had been executed in compliance with that demand. The petitioner denied that he or his full brothers had ever demanded or accepted the kabuliyat, and he further asserted that he and his brothers were the only maliks of the land and that the reference in the document to other maliks was made in support of some false claim.

The learned Sessions Judge held in effect that, assuming the falsity of the statements impugned, no offence had been committed either under section 423 or under section 193 of the Penal Code, nor under section 423 because a kabuliyat was not a document "which purports to transfer or subject to any charge any property or any interest therein" within the meaning of the section, and not under section 193 because the statements being made by the opposite parties could not be used by them in their own favour and would be inadmissible in evidence as against the petitioner and his full brothers.

As regards section 423 we are disposed to concur with the Sessions Judge's view. No doubt it has been held for some purposes that a kabuliyat when accepted operates as a lease [Rai Moni Dasi v. Mathura Mohan Roy (1)], but it is doubtful whether the language of section 423 could be so interpreted as to include a kabuliyat within its scope.

As regards section 193, however, the view expressed by the Sessions Judge is open to criticism. The meaning of the term 'fabricating false evidence' is defined in section 192 of the Penal Code, and in support of the construction of that section which the learned Sessions Judge has adopted he has cited the cases of Empress v. Gauri Shankar (2) and Emperor v. Chandra Kumar Missir (3). Some doubt has been thrown on the correctness of those decisions in Criminal Revision No. 1989 of 1914 decided on the 2nd May 1915, Baroda Kanta Sarkar v. Emperor (4). But apart from that the learned Sessions Judge has overlooked the fact that according to the opposite parties the kabuliyat was accepted by the complainant and his full brothers. On that footing the recitals in the kabuliyat would be evidence against the complainant and his full brothers. Moreover, the learned Sessions Judge has omitted to consider whether circumstances might not arise in which the kabuliyat would be admissible in evidence under the terms of section 13 of the Evidence Act.

We need not, however, express a final opinion on any of the points argued before us. The decision of a Criminal Court on the truth or otherwise of the statements contained in the kabuliyat would not be binding on the Civil Courts should the question ever be raised in these Courts, and as the questions of law which arise are not in all respects free from difficulty, we have come to the conclusion that there is not a case in which we ought to interfere in the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction.

Police Act (V of 1861), ss. 9, 29—Failure to return to duty after leave, conviction for—Order to return to duty, disobedience of—Offence—Conviction for failure to obey order, legality of.

Accused, a Police constable, failed to return to duty on the expiry of leave which he had obtained. He was prosecuted under section 29 of the Police Act and fined Rs. 30. During the pendency of this case he was placed under suspension, and on the conclusion thereof he was reinstated and directed to appear in the Police lines and there to give two months' notice as required by section 9 of the Act, if he did not wish to continue in the Police force. He failed to comply with this order and was again prosecuted under section 29 and sentenced to undergo imprisonment. The Sessions Judge recommended that the conviction and sentence be set aside on the ground that the accused's failure to return to duty was one single offence and he could not legally be again convicted merely because he still failed to return:

Held, that the second conviction was not for the same offence but for another similar offence—the first conviction being for failure to return to duty after leave and the second for failure to return after he had been reinstated. [p. 64, col. 1.]

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 19th June 1919.

JUDGMENT.—Nurul Hasan, Police constable, failed to return to duty on the expiry of "casual leave" and was in consequence prosecuted under section 29 of the Police Act and, on conviction, was fined Rs. 30. This was on the 17th January 1919. Pending that trial he had been suspended, but on the 1st February 1919 the Superintendent of Police passed an order reinstating him and called upon him to return to duty. Orders were repeatedly sent to him to this effect, and it is admitted that in spite of these orders he failed to return to duty. In consequence he was prosecuted under section 29 of the Police Act for his failure to comply with the order of the Superintendent of Police dated the 10th March 1919, directing him to appear in the Police lines and there give a two months' notice as required under section 9 of the Act. This order was so worded because Nurul Hasan had in the meantime sent in an application for leave to resign. This order was received by Nurul Hasan on the 13th March 1919. He failed to comply with it and in consequence he was prosecuted again under section 29 of the Act. The accused admitted the facts, but pleaded that as he had already been fined Rs. 30 for failure to return to duty, he was justified in disobeying subsequent orders calling him back to duty. The learned Magistrate convicted him and sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for two months. The learned Sessions Judge of Saharanpur has referred the case to this Court, with a recommendation that the conviction and sentence be set aside on the ground that his failure to return to duty was one single offence. The Judge says: "He withdrew from his duties without giving two months' notice and he has been punished," and suggests that, therefore, he could not legally be again convicted, merely because he still failed to return to duty. It seems to me that the accused has not been punished again for the same offence but for another similar offence. Section 9 of the Act provides that no Police Officer shall be at liberty to withdraw himself from the duties of his office except as provided in that section. At the first trial Nurul Hasan was punished for failure to return to duty after casual leave. On the second occasion he was prosecuted for failure to return to duty after he had been reinstated. These were two distinct and separate offences, though similar in character. It seems to me, therefore, that legally the conviction is right. At the same time I think under the circumstances of the case, a sentence of rigorous imprisonment for two months is perhaps unnecessarily severe. I reduce the sentence to one of one month's rigorous imprisonment from the date of his original sentence.

Let the record be returned.

Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859), s. 1, scope of—Contract to be performed outside British India—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to take action.

A contract to be performed outside British India does not come within the purview of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act.

Gregory v. Vadakasi Kangani, 10 M. 21; 1 Weir 671; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 765, relied upon.

Criminal revision against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kyaikto.

Mr. Villa, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—S. Po Thit applied to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kyaikto, to take action under the Workman's Breach of Contract Act, 1859, against Ma Saw Shin, a cheroot roller, who had taken an advance of Rs. 100 and agreed to proceed to Penang to work there.

The Magistrate held, following Gregory v. Vadakasi Kangani (1), that a contract to be performed outside British India does not come within the purview of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act.

The preamble of the Act runs :—

"Whereas much loss and inconvenience are sustained by manufacturers, tradesmen, and others in the several Presidency Towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay and in other places, from fraudulent breach of contract on the part of artificers, workmen, and labourers, who have received money in advance on account of work which they have contracted to perform; and whereas the remedy by suit in the Courts for the recovery of damages is wholly insufficient, and it is just and proper that persons guilty of such fraudulent breach of contract should be subject to punishment. It is enacted as follows:—"

Section 1 of the Act provides that "When any artificer, workman or labourer shall have received from any master or employer resident or carrying on business in any Presidency Town, or from any person acting on behalf of such master or employer, an advance of money on account of any work, which he shall have contracted to perform, or to get performed by any other artificers, workmen, or labourers, if such artificer, workman or labourer shall wilfully, and without lawful or reasonable excuse, neglect or refuse to perform, or get performed, such work according to the terms of his contract, such master or employer, or any such person as aforesaid, may complain to a Magistrate of Police, and the Magistrate shall thereupon issue a summons or a warrant, as he shall think proper, for bringing before him such artificer, workman, or labourer, and shall hear and determine the case."

Although it is not expressly stated in the preamble or section 1, it is to my mind distinctly implied that the work contracted to be performed is to be within the limits of British India, and that the Act does not refer to contracts to be performed outside India. This was the view taken by a Judge of the Madras High Court in the case cited and it is, in my opinion, the correct interpretation of the Act.

I have been unable to find any Burma ruling on this particular point and the rulings quoted by Counsel for applicant are not on the same point.

The application for revision is dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10, applicability of—Money deposited as security—Payment to make good defalcations—Suit to recover money paid—Limitation.

The plaintiff, while filling the office of gomasta under the Court of Wards, deposited as security his Post Office Savings Bank Pass Book with the defendant, then manager of an estate under the Court of Wards. In 1910 plaintiff was dismissed, and it was found that a sum of money was due from him to the estate on account of defalcations he had committed. On 8th July 1913, the sum so due was, with the sanction of the Collector and the consent and authority of the plaintiff, withdrawn from the Savings Bank and credited to the estate. The plaintiff demanded the money from the defendant, and this was refused on 14th September 1913. The estate was released in 1917 and the plaintiff on 25th February 1918 brought the present suit to recover the money from the defendant, who contended that the suit was barred by limitation, more than three years having elapsed since payment was refused. The trial Court overruled the objection and gave the plaintiff a decree, holding that section 10 of the Limitation Act was applicable to the case, as the money, or the Post Office Savings Bank Pass Book which the defendant converted into money, was trust property. The defendant moved the High Court in revision reiterating his plea of limitation:

Held, that section 10 of the Limitation Act had no application to the case, as no property had vested in the defendant in trust for the plaintiff, as he had no control over it and could not withdraw the money without the consent and authority of the plaintiff, and that as the suit was instituted more than three years after the refusal to pay the money, it was barred by limitation. [p. 66, col. 2.]

Rule against the order of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, 24-Pergannahs, exercising the powers of a Court of Small Causes, in Small Cause Court Suit No. 148 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Samatul Chandra Dutt, for the Petitioner.—The defendant No. 5 is the petitioner before your Lordships. He was a manager of the Court of Wards. The plaintiff was a Tahsildar under them. Plaintiff had, under the rules, to deposit a Savings Bank Pass Book. He was there from July 1909 to February 1910. The defendant No. 5, the present petitioner, was the manager after the dismissal of the plaintiff from his office. Several proceedings were taken against the plaintiff. Defendant No. 5 withdrew the money with interest thereon from the Savings Bank on account of plaintiff's defalcations, with the sanction of the Collector in 1913. Plaintiff demanded the refund of the money deposited by him and was refused in September 1913. The estate was released from the management of the Court of Wards in March 1917. The present suit was instituted in February 1918. The defendants pleaded, inter alia, that they were entitled to a notice under section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure and that the suit was barred by limitation. The learned Small Cause Court Judge, however, overruled the defendants' pleas and decreed the suit, holding that the defendant No. 5 was personally liable for the money withdrawn and that no notice was necessary under section 80 of the Code. The judgment was delivered on the 2nd September 1918. The defendant then applied for a review of the judgment but the application was forthwith dismissed. The defendant's ground for review was that he took a receipt from the plaintiff for the money withdrawn. This document was not entertained by the learned Judge. My points would be that the defendant is a public officer and, therefore, a notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code is necessary. He withdrew the money as a public officer. See section 2 (17); Collector of Bijnor v. Munuvar (1); section 59 (a), Act I of 1906 (B. C.). The defendant has been served as a manager.

My next submission is that the suit is barred by limitation. The money deposited by the plaintiff was withdrawn by the defendant in July 1913. The suit was instituted in February 1918. The learned Small Cause Court Judge has held that the defendant No. 5 was a trustee and, therefore, section 10 of the Indian Limitation Act applies to the case. This, I submit, is an erroneous view of the law. The money could not be treated as trust property. The true test to determine whether the property is trust property or not is to see whether the trustee has got a full control over the property in question. See Kathia- war Trading Co., Ltd. v. Virchand Dipchand (2). My submission is that Article 62 of the Indian Limitation Act would apply to the present case. An express trust must be proved under section 10 of the Limitation Act. See Kherodemoney Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee (3), Mathuradas v. Vandrawandas (4), Bhurobhai v. Bai Luxmani (5) and Balwant Rao v. Puran Mal (6). The suit ought to be dismissed on these points.

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule calling on the opposite party to show cause why the judgment and decree of the lower Court passed against the petitioner should not be set aside.

The petitioner who was the manager of the estate of defendants Nos. 1 to 4 under the Court of Wards from 7th May 1911 to 30th April 1914, was defendant No. 5 in the suit. The plaintiff opposite party was a gomasta under the Court of Wards from July 1909 to February 1910. As gomasta he deposited his Savings Bank Pass Book as security with the manager. He was dismissed in 1910 and a certain amount was found due from him on account of defalcations made by him. The petitioner, who was then the manager under the Court of Wards, withdrew a sum of Rs. 224-14-5 from the Post Office Savings Bank account with the sanction of the Collector and with the consent of and under authority from the plaintiff on the 8th July 1913. The plaintiff demanded the money from the defendant No. 5 and this was refused on the 14th September 1913. The estate was released from the Court of Wards to the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 on the 1st March 1917. The present suit was instituted by the plaintiff on the 25th February 1918.

The defendant No. 5 contested the suit inter alia on the grounds, first, that the suit could not be maintained without a notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code, secondly, that the suit was barred by limitation, having been instituted more than three years after the date of the refusal to pay the money, and thirdly, that he was not in any case personally liable for the amount, he having withdrawn the money with the sanction of the Collector and credited the same to the account of the estate.

The learned Small Cause Court Judge overruled the plea set up by the defendant and decreed the suit against the defendant No. 5 personally, holding that the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were not liable.

The defendant No. 5 obtained this Rule.

We are of opinion that the suit is barred by limitation. The money was withdrawn on the 8th July 1913 and the suit was instituted on the 25th February 1918. The learned Judge below was of opinion that section 10 of the Limitation Act was applicable, as he held that the money in the hands of the manager or the Postal Savings Bank Pass Book which he converted into money was trust property. We are of opinion that there was no trust in favour of the plaintiff and section 10 of the Limitation Act is not applicable to the present case.

Apart from the question of the vesting in trust for a specific purpose, we think that no property had vested in the petitioner in trust for the plaintiff. So long as the money remained in deposit with the Savings Bank, the petitioner had no control whatever over it; he could not withdraw the amount without authority of the plaintiff and in fact when this amount was withdrawn, it was done with his consent and authority, though it is stated that the authority was obtained by means of threat. If there was any trust at all, the manager was trustee for the proprietor's estate. However that may be, the money having been withdrawn from the Post Office with the authority of the plaintiff cannot be said to have been held in trust for the plaintiff by the petitioner and section 10 does not apply to the present case. The suit having been instituted more than 3 years after the refusal to pay the money, it was barred by limitation.

Although this is sufficient for the disposal of the case, it may be mentioned that our attention has been drawn to certain documents certified copies of which have been produced before us and which show that the entire amount, namely, Rs. 222-14-5 withdrawn from the Post Office Savings Bank was credited to the account of the estate. It appears that these papers were not before the Court below at the original hearing and were produced before that Court when an application for review was made.

The Rule is accordingly made absolute and the suit against the petitioner must be dismissed with costs.

The petitioner is also entitled to costs of this Court, which we assess at two gold mohurs.

The Hon'ble Mr. Moti Lal Nehru, Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, Messrs. Bhagwati Shankar and Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.— This is a question of procedure arising out of an election petition consequent upon a recent Municipal election in Allahabad which has been referred to us by the Commissioner, the tribunal appointed for the trial of the petition, such reference being in his opinion a question of law under section 23, sub section 2, clause (e) of the Municipalities Act.

The point may be shortly stated in this way:—Is it competent for an unsuccessful candidate petitioning against the election of more than one successful candidate to join a claim that all or any of the successful candidates, being more than one, be unseated in one petition? In this particular case there were six candidates, three of whom were elected, the present petitioner being the 4th, two other persons who were formerly respondents and have been struck out being 5th and 6th on the poll. The petition claims that upon various grounds raising questions of legality, corrupt practices, personation and so forth, the three successful candidates should be declared not to have been duly elected or in other words unseated and that the petitioner and his two colleagues (the two other unsuccessful candidates) should be declared elected in their places as members of the Board or that vacancies should be declared in respect of those candidates decided to be unseated. A further claim is made that in view of the practices alleged, the Court should take proceedings under other sections of the Municipalities Act against the respondents.

The provisions with regard to election petitions and the procedure thereunder are contained in sections 19 to 26 of the Municipalities Act and, with one possible exception which has given rise to the main argument on behalf of the respondents in this case, seem to us to be clear and free from any difficulty. By section 19 the lawful election of a candidate as a member of the Board may be questioned in an election petition on certain grounds. By section 20 such petition must be presented within 15 days of the election day and shall contain a summary of the grounds on which the election is challenged. Further, by the same section a right is given either to an unsuccessful candidate or to ten or more electors to present the petition. In the case of the candidate presenting the petition, he must be one who claims to be declared elected in the room of the person whose election is questioned. If this provision stood alone, it would appear to indicate that the petition in the case of an unsuccessful candidate claiming to be elected in the place of the successful candidate, who is unseated, must be confined to one successful candidate. The result of this would be a somewhat clumsy arrangement, because there is nothing in the Act which indicates that if an unsuccessful candidate acting upon information in his possession believes that he has grounds for unseating all three but is uncertain of his success against either of the particular individuals, he may not, if he wishes to make assurance doubly sure, claim that each of the three be unseated and that he be elected in the place of either one or other of those whose election is declared void; he would be compelled in that case to file separate petitions against each. Clause 23, however, gets over this difficulty. By sub section 2 (a) it is provided that two or more persons whose election is called in question may be made respondents to the same petition and their cases may be tried at the same time, and any two or more election petitions may be heard together but so far as is consistent with such joint hearing, the petition shall be deemed to be a separate petition against each respondent. That section is perfectly clear. It provides in unmistakable language for a joint petition against more than one respondent, otherwise it would be inappropriate to deem it to be a separate petition; if only separate petitions were allowed there would be no necessity for the Legislature to provide for a petition to be deemed to be separate against each respondent. After all the argument would be the same if the unsuccessful candidate filed a separate petition against each of the three successful candidates claiming the seat of each. He could not fill more than one vacancy, if all his petitions succeeded. The word "petition" is clearly used in the section in two senses. In the earlier part of the clause "petition" means the paper or complaint which is originally presented and which must be presented within 15 days and must contain the summary of charges. That is the petition which is in question in this reference, the contention being that it is bad ab initio because presented against three respondents, but in the latter part of the section the word "petition" clearly means the procedure under which the complaints against the election of a candidate are investigated and decided. The word "petition" is quite common both in familiar use and in legal use in both senses and what that clause clearly provides is that a joint petition filed against one or more respondents who have been elected may be heard as one or as two and usually for the purpose of evidence be treated as separate petitions against each individual, giving the Court a wide discretion for its own conduct of its own proceeding but protecting the respondent against any unfair breach of the laws of evidence. This seems to us a perfectly reasonable provision on general grounds. The mere fact that so short a time as 15 days is allowed for the presentation of the petition places a very heavy burden indeed upon the petitioner to prepare any sort of case at all, in a matter covering such a wide area as a contested election, and it is far easier as a matter of procedure for the Court in the exercise of its discretion to separate cases which have once been united in a joint complaint than it is to consolidate several cases which have been originally filed as separate and distinct matters. So far as the consequences of the proceeding are concerned it is really unimportant, except for the purpose of qualifying the candidate who presents the petition to present the petition by declaring himself ready to fill a vacancy which he asks to be created, whether as a matter of law the Court decides in its discretion to declare the unsuccessful candidate elected in the place of the candidate unseated or whether it prefers to declare that the seat is merely vacant, and that a fresh election should be held. That decision does not in the least depend upon the claim made by the candidate presenting the petition, but upon the general circumstances of the case and the exercise of the Court's discretion which is wide under the Act.

The real difficulty of construction raised by Dr. Sapru in his argument on behalf of the respondent occurs in the use of these words in clause 20, sub-section 2. The candidate who presents a petition must be a person "who claims in the petition to be declared elected in the room of the person whose election is questioned", and it is said that this by implication imposes a limitation not upon the procedure but upon the right, that is to say, inasmuch as one man can take only one vacant place, if it is desired to challenge the election of more than one successful candidate, it cannot be challenged by one man because he cannot ask to fill the vacancies of the persons whose election he questions. In other words, as he cannot fill the vacancy of three persons, he cannot by himself question the election of three persons. There is a good deal to be said for this argument, but on the whole we have come to the conclusion that it is not the correct view, for these reasons:—It seems to us that the intention of the Legislature really was, as is sufficiently expressed in this clause, that whereas any number of electors might question an election so long as they are not less than 10 in number without reference to any claim to succeed to the vacancy if one were created as the result of the petition, in the case of a candidate who no longer holds any position distinct from that of an ordinary elector after the election is over, he must show, so to speak, his bona fides, or at any rate his public spirit by following up the attack which he makes upon his successful rival by willingness to take his place if he is unseated, and reading the other portions of the Act in connection with clause 20, sub-clause 2, particularly section 25 which gives a wide discretion to the Court as to whether it shall or shall not declare any other candidate to have been duly elected or prefer to declare a vacancy and, therefore, involve re-election, all that was meant was that so long as the candidate claimed the vacancy, he was qualified to present a petition, but there is nothing in the rest of the Act to indicate that he may not do as this petitioner has done, that is, claim one vacancy in particular and leave it to the Court to decide whether the other vacancies which he has also attacked shall be filled by the other unsuccessful candidates or left vacant. As a general rule where a vacancy is declared for malpractices, corruption and so forth such as are alleged in this petition, it by no means follows that the unsuccessful candidate, in this case the petitioner, has any moral claim to the vacancy when it is declared; whereas if as the result of an election petition it is shown that, if the election had been conducted according to law, i. e., there had been no personation or duplicate voting or vote by unqualified voters and so forth, the unsuccessful candidate would probably have succeeded, then no doubt the unsuccessful candidate is awarded the seat. But where the vacancy is created by a decision that the election has been carried through by improper practices, the usual consequence is that a vacancy is declared and a fresh election ordered. Having regard to these considerations, it seems to us that section 20, sub-section 2, does no more than require the candidate presenting the petition to claim the seat of the person or one of the persons whom he claims to have been unduly elected. This the petitioner has done. We think that it is in accordance with the Act and that the answer to the question must be that the claim (we think the words "cause of action" in connection with an election petition should be altogether avoided) made by the petitioner is properly made and that the petition is presented according to law.

We think, subject to any special reason to the contrary which the Commissioner may consider, that the costs of this proceeding should be costs of the petition.

Answered in the affirmative.

Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876*), s.* 9—Pre-emption—Under-proprietary village, division of, into mahals and pattis, effect of.

Where an under-proprietary village is divided and sub-divided into mahals and pattis, the sub-divisions must be recognised as separate entities for the purposes of section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act, although there is no separate engagement for the payment of the revenue in consequence of the division. [p. 70, col. 2.]

Therefore, a co-sharer in such an under-proprietary mahal falls under the category of the persons referred to in section 9, clause 2, of the Oudh Laws Act and can enforce his right of pre-emption, if he is related to the vendor as against a person who is a co-sharer in the same mahal but is not related to the vendor or is a co-sharer in another under-proprietary mahal. [p. 71, col 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 7th February 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Fyzabad, dated the 21st June 1918.

The Hon'ble Mr. Wazir Hasan and Syed Ali Mohammad, for the Appellants.

Chaudhuri Nian at ullah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre emption. The property sold is an under proprietary interest in the village Sarai Bhinauli. The village is divided into several mahals, one of which is called Mahal Sultan Muhammad Khan. Mahal Sultan Muhammad Khan is divided into three pattis: (1) Patti Sultan Muhammad Khan-Sultan Ahmad Khan, (2) Patti Musammat Mohamdi Bibi, and (3) Patti Dost Muhammad. The owner of Patti Musammat Mohamdi Bibi has sold that patti to defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Neither the plaintiff nor the defendants-vendees had any share in Patti Musammat Mohamdi Bibi. The plaintiff and one of the vendees are co-sharers in Patti Sultan Muhammad Khan Sultan Ahmad Khan. The other vendee is a co-sharer in another mahal of the same village. The plaintiff is related to the vendor.

The question for consideration in this appeal is whether the plaintiff is entitled, in the above circumstances, to claim pre-emption as against the defendants vendees. The Court of first instance dismissed the claim, but the lower Appellate Court allowed the appeal filed by the plaintiff and remanded the suit to the Court of first instance for its disposal on the merits.

The contention of the learned Counsel for the defendants-vendees is that the plaintiff did not hold a higher position than that of a member of the village community and he was not entitled, therefore, to any superior right. He argues that where a village is split up into superior proprietary and under proprietary rights, the division of under-proprietary rights into separate blocks does not operate as a partition of the village into mahals, unless the superior proprietary rights are partitioned at the same time and in the same manner.

A mahal is defined in section 4 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901) as meaning any local area held under a separate engagement for the payment of the land revenue or any revenue free area for which a separate Record of Rights has been framed. That definition does not apply, strictly speaking, to a division of an under-proprietary holding, for an under-proprietary holding is liable to pay rent to the superior proprietor and there is no separate engagement for the payment of the land revenue either to the superior proprietor or to the Government as such. Section 4, however, expressly excludes the above interpretation where such a meaning would be repugnant in the subject or context. Section 106 of the Act defines the perfect partition of a mahal, as a division of it into separate mahals, each severally responsible for the revenue distributed thereon. The definition of "mahal" as contained in section 4 applies to the word "mahal" as used in section 106 and the succeeding sections dealing with the partition of superior proprietary rights. It cannot, however, apply to section 138, which deals with the partition of under-proprietary mahals and of mahals held by lessees whose rent has been fixed by the Settlement Officer or other competent authority. Under section 74 what is payable by those mahals is rent and not revenue. There can be no separate engagement for the payment of revenue in case an under-proprietary mahal is divided in consequence. Section 138, clause (4), of the Act authorises the Revenue Court making a partition of an under-proprietary mahal to divide the rent payable by the under-proprietors to the superior proprietor, and empowers it to entertain and determine all objections to the distribution which may be made by the under-proprietors or, it may be by any of the superior proprietors thereof. Sections 100 and 101 of Act XVII of 1876, which were in force in Oudh before the U. P. Act III of 1901 came into force, contained similar provisions. It can hardly be argued consistently with the provisions of section 138 of U. P. Act III of 1901 that in the case of a division of an under-proprietary village the mahal, referred to in section 9, clause (2), of Act XVIII of 1876 has no existence in law. Such a mahal may exist, for section 138 of the U. P.

Act III of 1901 expressly contemplates its existence, and a person, who is a co sharer in such an under proprietary mahal, falls within the category of the persons referred to in section 9, clause (2), of Act XVIII of 1876 and can enforce his right of pre-emption, if he is related to the vendor, as against a person who is a co-sharer in the same mahal but is not related to the vendor or is a co sharer in another under-proprietary mahal.

On behalf of the defendants-appellants reliance is placed on the decision in Sheoraj Kunwar v. Harihar Baksh Singh (1). But in that case the so-called under-proprietary mahal was formed of blocks of villages and several village communities had been conglomerated for the purpose of forming a united holding. Three villages and two pattis were sold in that case by one of the under-proprietors and it was held that the under-proprietors who held shares in other villages had no right of pre-emption in respect of the three villages sold as against the Taluqdar who had purchased the same. Here the suit relates to one and the same village. The under proprietary mahal still exists as a separate entity. The vendor was a co-sharer in one subdivision of it. The plaintiff and one of the vendees were co-sharers in another subdivision. But as the plaintiff is related to the vendor and the vendees are not, the Court below rightly allowed the plaintiff a preference.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Principal and agent—Tahsildar of landlord, failure of, to inform landlord of arrears of rent Arrears barred through neglect of Tahsildar—Damages, suit for, maintainability of—Cause of action, accrual of—Accounts, suit for—Damages for laches, claim for, whether can be joined.

A Tahsildar appointed by a landlord, whether he has or has not the power to institute suits for arrears of rent, is certainly under an obligation to take steps in proper time to give information to the landlord that unless suits are brought in respect of certain arrears of rent, they would become barred by limitation [p. 72, col. 2.]

The omission of the Tahsildar to do so would make him liable for damages in respect of the arrears of rent thus becoming barred by limitation. [p. 72, col. 2.]

The cause of action for a suit against the Tahsildar for such damages arises when the arrears of rent become barred by limitation. [p. 72, col. 2.]

In a suit for accounts against an agent a claim for damages on account of loss caused by his laches can be included [p. 72, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 19th July 1916, modifying that of the Munsif, 1st Court at that place, dated the 28th May 1915.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Bysak (with him Babu Satish Chandra Bhattacharya), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant before your Lordships. This was a suit for accounts and damages for loss caused by the wilful negligence of the defendant, who was the Tahsildar of the plaintiff. The learned Munsif very rightly gave the plaintiff a decree also for a sum of Rs. 217-5-0, but the lower Appellate Court has set aside that part of the decree and has proceeded on a wrong view of the circumstances of the case. It has been distinctly found that the defendant caused a lot of rents to be barred by limitation, though as a Tahsildar of the plaintiff it was his duty to inform his master of the rents due from tenants which were going to be barred by limitation. Simply because there has been a claim granted against the defendant for accounts for a certain period, there is no reason why the plaintiff should not be entitled to damages for the laches of the defendant though that fell in the same period.

Babu Suria Kumar Guha, for the Respondents.—In a suit for accounts a claim for damages cannot be included. Further, the defendant was not in duty bound to inform his master of the fact that certain rents were going to be time-barred. He could not institute the suit, it was the lookout of the plaintiff. Moreover, it is very strange that a claim for damages should be granted, though the claim for account for the period up to 1315 was disallowed.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Bysak replied.

JUDGMENT.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—The appeal arises out of a suit for accounts instituted by the plaintiff, who is the part proprietor of certain properties, against the defendant who was his Tahsildar. In addition to the ordinary claim for an account of receipts and disbursements there was a claim for damages on the allegation that the defendant had fraudulently and in collusion with the tenants allowed large sums of money to be barred by limitation. The allegation in the plaint was traversed in the written statement. There was a preliminary decree for account against the defendant. A Commissioner was appointed to examine the accounts and finally the matter came up before the Munsif, who decreed the suit in part and included in that decree a sum of Rs. 217-5-0, on the ground that this amount was not realised from the tenants on account of the default of the defendant and became barred.

The lower Appellate Court has set aside the decree of the Munsif so far as this amount is concerned. The sums which were allowed to be barred were payable by the tenants as rent for the years 1313, 1314 and 1315 and those sums could only have been barred if not realised respectively in 1316, 1317 and 1318. The lower Appellate Court gives two reasons for disallowing the plaintiff's claim in respect of these sums. In the first place, the learned Subordinate Judge says that as the claim for account for the period up to 1315 was disallowed, the plaintiff could not claim anything in respect of that period. It seems to me that the fact that these sums accrued due during a previous period makes no difference whatever. The cause of action in respect of these sums arose when they became barred by the law of limitation, and as already pointed out, all those sums were barred during the period for which the defendant has been made liable to render accounts to the plaintiff. The second ground of the Subordinate Judge's judgment seems equally untenable. The learned Judge observes with reference to the argument that the defendant by reason of his negligence failed to realise these sums during 1316 to 1318: "There was no contract or custom in support of the plaintiff's contention. The defendant was not hence liable for the omission." The defendant was a paid servant of the plaintiff. Whether he had or had not the power to institute suits himself, it was certainly his duty to take steps in proper time to give information to the plaintiff that unless suits were brought those sums would become barred. This, as found by the trial Court, he omitted to do. He was legally bound to take all the precautions which an ordinary prudent man of business would take in managing affairs of his own. This clearly he has not done and it seems to me that he is liable for the loss that has been occasioned to the plaintiff by his own default.

It has, however, been urged before us that in a suit for accounts a claim for damages cannot be included. On this point we have the authority of an unreported decision of this Court in Second Appeal No. 98 of 1917. That decision is exactly in point and I see no reason to differ from it.

For these reasons we decree this appeal and restore the decision of the first Court, with this modification only that the cost of the commission would be borne half and half by the plaintiff and the defendant.

The plaintiff is entitled to his costs in this Court and in the Court below.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 29th January 1918.

The Hon'ble Mr. Wazir Hasan and Mr. Niamat-ul-lah, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. Nasim, M. Wasim, M. Imatiaz Ali and Mohammad Ismail, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in a suit brought by the plaintiffs Haji Abu Said and others against the defendant-appellant Chaudhri Sakhawat Ali for a declaration of their right to obtain a partition of their share of 2 annas 3 pies in Mauza Sukhrawal, Mahal Sakhawat Ali, and of 1 anna 6 pies in Mauza Raipur, Mahal Sakhawat Ali. The plaintiffs are the successors-in-title of Abdul Baki, the uncle of Sakhawat Ali, partly by direct purchase and partly by virtue of a decree for partition. The defences to the suit which have been urged in this Court as well as in the lower Court are, first, that the suit is barred by reason of an agreement effected between Abdul Baki and the defendant's father on 11th December 1882 and, secondly, that it is barred by limitation.

The circumstances under which the agreement of 1882 was entered into were these. A dispute had arisen between the parties as to the extent of Abdul Baki's share and the appellant Sakhawat Ali had instituted a declaratory suit in the Civil Court. In the course of that suit he and Abdul Baki and his uncle Ilahi Bakhsh, who represented the third branch of the family, entered into a compromise, whereby Sakhawat Ali admitted the extent of the shares of Ilahi Bakhsh and Abdul Baki and agreed to assign to them the possession of certain specific land rent-free as yielding profits equal to the profits of their share. Sakhawat Ali, it appears, was in possession of the whole property as lambardar. Then follows this clause:—

'We, Abdul Baki and Ilahi Bakhsh, agree that so long as Sakhawat Ali does not interfere with the land set apart for profits as noted below, we shall not claim partition of our shares privately or through Court. If they, contrary to this condition, claim partition, their claim will be considered false and untenable. The land which has been set apart for profits and is entered below has been taken by us in accordance with our shares. . . . . Abdul Baki and Ilahi Bakhsh shall have no claim to rendition of accounts."

It has been established in a number of cases, of which it is sufficient to mention Rajender Dutt v. Sham Chund Mitter (1) and Pirojshah v. Manibhai (2), that owners of property which is in its nature partible cannot by any agreement between themselves impress on it permanently the character of impartibility, and this position has not been challenged in this Court though it seems to have been a matter of controversy in the Court below. The matter was tersely put by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jafri Begam v. Syed Ali Raza (3). The suit in that case was based on an arbitration award, one clause of which directed that there should be no partition. As to this their Lordships say :—

(1) 6 C. 106; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 70.
(2) 12 Ind. Cas. 543; 36 B. 53; 13 Bom. L. R. 963.
(3) 23 A. 333 at p. 392 (P. C.); 5 C. W. N. 585; 23 I. A. 111; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 27.

"It may have bound the parties who agreed amongst themselves to abide by it. But as against the present plaintiff" (the plaintiff, it may be noted, was the successor-in interest of one of the parties) "the clause has no effect whatever. The arbitrator.....had no power to make property which was divisible by law indivisible for ever."

The learned Advocate for the appellant has sought to distinguish this case on the ground that the agreement was made for consideration and was acted upon and, therefore, there arises something which in his own words "may, for convenience' sake, be called an estoppel." Estoppel in the ordinary sense there was not, as admittedly no false or misleading representation was made by Abdul Baki which caused the appellant to alter his position for the worse. The facts relied on are

(a) that in pursuance of the agreement Sakhawat Ali got his suit dismissed in the Munsif's Court,

(b) that one clause of the agreement was that Sakhawat Ali will have no claim in respect of debts, and

(c) that Abdul Baki and his successors-in-interest have continued, up to this time, in possession of the property assigned to them.

The learned Advocate also relies on the fact that the learned Subordinate Judge has decided the extent of the share on the basis of the agreement. It is urged that having done this he could not treat any other part of it as void. The learned Advocate is not altogether correct in his facts. The learned Subordinate Judge has, no doubt, treated the agreement as an admission by the appellant of the extent of the respondents' share, but he has at the same time stated that the amount of that share is further proved by the documentary evidence on the file. It has not been argued before me that the shares so found are incorrect and the learned Subordinate Judge's finding has only been used as an argument for treating the whole agreement as binding.

On the question of consideration very little need be said. If the fact of consideration being given could convert an illegal agreement into a legal one, section 23 of the Contract Act would become a dead letter. The word "agreement," as defined in the Contract Act, in itself implies that there is consideration and there certainly was consideration in several of the cases cited as, for instance, in the case of Rajender Dutt v. Sham Chand Mitter (1). The first two points relied on by the appellant amount to little more than saying that the agreement was for consideration and that the consideration agreed on was paid or rendered. The only act relied on not contemporaneous with the agreement is the fact that Abdul Baki and his successors in interest have continued in possession of the lands allotted to them. As to this the agreement itself shows that they were given possession of certain specific lands in order that they might realize the income thereof as equivalent to the profits which Sakhawat Ali must otherwise have paid to them in respect of the share to which they were entitled. In short, they were put in possession of the lands to save the necessity for a periodical rendition of accounts. The agreement would have been substantially complete if the clause relating to partition had been omitted altogether. In almost all the cases in which the effect of an agreement not to partition has been considered, the parties have continued in possession of their shares up to the time when the suit for partition was brought. In my opinion the rulings relied on by the appellant—Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (4) and Jagannath Prashad Singh v. Abdullah (5)—have no application to circumstances like the present. As was said by the Allahabad High Court in T. C. Mukerji v. Afzal Beg (6), the right to bring a suit for partition unlike other suits is a continuing right incidental to the ownership of joint property; and no agreement between the owners of that property, whether acted on or not, can operate to render the property permanently incapable of partition.

The argument of limitation depends to some extent on the same consideration as the preceding issue. The property being revenue-paying property can only, under the provisions of the Land Revenue Act, be partitioned by the Revenue Court. In 1889, Abdul Baki applied to the Revenue Court to partition the property. The Revenue Court being doubtful of the effect of the agreement of 1882 declined to do so until the then plaintiff established his right in the Civil Court. The Commissioner's order in appeal is dated the 19th May 1890 and the appellant contends that because Abdul Baki failed to bring a declaratory suit within six years of that date his suit is barred by Article 120 of the Limitation Act. Another attempt was made in 1909 and a similar order was passed. The Collector's order is dated the 30th November 1909 and the suit is admittedly within time, if time is reckoned from that date. The Revenue Court did not, as it might have done, pass an order under section 111 (1) (b) of the Land Revenue Act, requiring the applicant to institute a civil suit within three months, and that section, therefore, admittedly does not apply. The appellant concedes that if the plaintiff was in possession of his share, the mere fact that the Revenue Court on a particular occasion declined to partition the property until he had got a declaration from the Civil Court could not debar him from applying for partition on a future occasion. He contends that under the agreement Abdul Baki was not in possession of his share but was given certain specific lands in lieu of it. This is, in my opinion, a mere quibble and quite unsustainable. A co sharer may be in possession of his share either by receiving profits from the lumbardar or by collecting the profits himself from specific lands which, though they continue to be joint property, he holds in his separate possession. It is clear that the latter course was taken by the agreement of 1882 to avoid the necessity for rendition of accounts. Abdul Baki was put in possession of certain specific lands, the produce of which was considered equivalent to the profits of his share. As was said in the case of T. C. Mukerjee v. Afzal Beg (6) already cited, the right to partition is a continuing right incidental to the ownership of joint property. "It may be that at one time the desire for partition may cease; circumstances may again occur which make it desirable or necessary that partition should take place." Abdul Baki and his successors have continued and still are in joint possession of their share by realizing the profits from the particular lands assigned to them, and the mere fact that they did not take steps to enforce their right to a partition in 1890 cannot deprive them and their successors of the right to do so for all future time.

(4) 20 C. 296 (P. C.); 19 I. A. 203; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 224; 10 Ind. Dec (N. S.) 201.

The decision of the Court below is correct and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

It is not correct to say that a conveyance by a Hindu father in consideration of antecedent debts can in no case be enforced during the father's lifetime. [p. 78, col. 1.]

Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh, 39 Ind. Cas. 280; 39 A. 437; 21 C. W. N. 688; 1 P. L. W. 557; 15 A. L. J. 437; 19 Bom. L. R. 49; 26 C. L. J. 1; 33 M. L. J. 14; (1917) M. W. N. 439; 22 M. L. T. 22; 6 L. W. 213; 44 I. A. 126 (P. C.), considered.

Where there is a personal debt enforceable apart from a prior mortgage, there is no reason why it should not have the same effect as any other antecedent debt. [p. 78, col. 1.]

Where it is found that the purpose for which a Hindu father agreed to effect an alienation of family property was one which would be binding on the sons and that a complete contract had been entered into by the father from which he could not legally withdraw, the liability of the sons cannot be affected by the fact that the father committed a breach of contract and that the vendee was compelled to resort to the Court to enforce its execution. [p. 78, col. 2.]

Where it is found that the bulk of the consideration for an alienation of family property by a Hindu father was for antecedent debt or valid necessity so that it would have been impossible to raise the required amount except by effecting the sale in dispute, the fact that the vendor was able to obtain from the purchaser something over and above the amount binding on the estate is not a sufficient ground for setting aside the deed. Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Barabanki, dated the 25th July 1917.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen and Rai N. N. Ghoshal Bahadur, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff Girdhari Lal for a declaration that a sale-deed executed by his father Behari Lal for a sum of Rs. 10,000 was not binding on him and for possession of the property. The actual figure entered in the deed was Rs. 9,999, as this was supposed to be a lucky number. It is admitted that the actual consideration agreed on was Rs. 10,000. The plaintiff is a minor and filed the suit through his mother Musammat Hardei, his next friend. Behari Lal, his adult son Gauri Shankar and the plaintiff form a joint family. The plaintiff's case is that the deed was not executed for any valid necessity and, therefore, cannot bind the joint family property. The suit was decreed by the Court below. The vendee Gur Sahai now appeals.

The case is complicated by the fact that the sale-deed was not executed voluntarily. Behari Lal entered into a contract of sale with the appellant on 16th October and a sale-deed was prepared, but owing to disagreement which arose between the parties, was never executed. The appellant subsequently brought a suit for specific performance against Behari Lal alone. The suit was decreed and the decree was upheld by this Court. The sale-deed wes actually executed by the Subordinate Judge on Behari Lal's behalf under Order XXI, rule 34, Civil Procedure Code, on 26th January 1916.

The details of the consideration are set out in the lower Court's judgment and are as under;—

	Rs
Left with the vendee to pay up two deeds of simple mortgage executed by Behari Lal, dated the 13th September 1904 and 25th May 1908, respectively	8,693
Received in cash as earnest money	65
Purchases of stamp ...	100
Cash	1,142
TOTAL ...	10,000

The two main questions which arise for decision are

(1) Whether the sum of Rs. 8,693 for payment of two earlier simple mortgages can be regarded as antecedent debt within the meaning of the Privy Council ruling in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1).

(2) Whether the fact that the deed was not executed voluntarily affects the plaintiff's liability.

Two propositions are contended for by the respondents:—

(1) that there can be no antecedent debt during the father's life, and

(2) that a debt secured by a mortgage cannot constitute antecedent debt.

Both questions depend on the interpretation of the ruling in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). Their Lordships in that case, in the hope of putting an end to a conflict of decisions in India, went beyond what it was strictly necessary to decide for the purpose of the case before them. The only point actually arising in the case was whether a mortgage executed in lieu of a contemporaneous loan could, in a suit to enforce the mortgage against the sons of the mortgagor, be treated as having been made for antecedent debt. This point had been decided against the mortgagee by the Allahabad High Court in Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (2), and this decision was approved by their Lordships. Unfortunately the judgment delivered by Lord Shaw has itself given rise to considerable difficulty in this country. It has been considered by at least three High Courts with reference to the question how far it makes a change in the law as previously understood. The points in which the judgment modifies the law as previously understood in this part of India are, first, in laying down that the pious obligation of a Hindu son to pay his father's debts can never arise during his father's lifetime, and, secondly, in drawing a distinction between that obligation and the special exception in favour of an alienation effected by a father in lieu of antecedent debt. It had hitherto been understood that that exception, which is confined to the case of a father or grandfather, was founded solely on the doctrine of pious obligation, and this view derives some support from the observations of their Lordships themselves in Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (3) where it was said that the sons, by reason of their obligation to pay their father's debts, could not recover ancestral property which had passed from the family under a conveyance executed by their father in consideration of an antecedent debt, such debt not being contracted for illegal or immoral purposes.

In the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) there appears no room for doubt that a distinction is made between the two things. Their Lordships say that the two principles—(1) that the manager cannot dispose of joint family property without the consent of all the co parceners, and (2) that consent will be presumed for certain necessary purposes—would cover all the ground but for an exception hereafter to be noted. The exception in question is that in favour of an alienation made in lieu of antecedent debt. They then proceed: "Before dealing with that exception their Lordships desire to note an argument presented to the following effect." The argument here referred to is that based on the pious obligation of a Hindu son to pay his father's debts. Their Lordships held that no such obligation can be pleaded during the father's life and concluded with the words: "The whole of this part of the case is accordingly at an end." They then proceed to discuss separately, as a part of the case entirely separate from the principle they have hitherto been discussing, the exception in favour of a sale or mortgage by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt. They reject this exception as inapplicable to the facts before them, not on a consideration of whether the father was alive or dead, but on the ground that the debt was not independent of the mortgage transaction in support of which it was pleaded. It appears quite clear from this analysis that their Lordships did not intend to lay down that the exception in favour of antecedent debt could not be pleaded till after the father's death, and this is the view arrived at by the Madras High Court on a careful review of their Lordships' ruling in Veda Vinkanna v. Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (4). It is there said that their Lordships' judgment shows no indication of any intention to overrule a long course of previous decisions to this effect.

The Punjab Chief Court on a consideration of the same judgment of their Lordships has held in 15 Punjab Record 1918 [Amar Nath v. Rustomji (5)] that a money decree against a Hindu father for purposes neither illegal nor immoral can be enforced in execution against the joint family property even during his lifetime. In Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad (6), the Allahabad High Court, while taking a slightly different view from that taken by this Court as to what constitutes antecedent debt within the meaning of the Privy Council decision, clearly did not consider that the fact of the father being alive made any difference, for it appears from the report that the father was a party to the suit, which ended in an issue being remitted for the purpose of determining whether the debt was an antecedent debt. This view of the judgment derives some support from another judgment of the Privy Council itself in Jogi Das v. Ganga Ram (7). The judgment was delivered by Viscount Haldane, who said that in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) it was laid down in effect that joint property could not be alienated as against co-sharers by way of mortgage, or otherwise, except for necessity or for payment of an actual antecedent debt quite distinct from the debt incurred in the mortgage itself, and it was added that the mere circumstance of a pious obligation doesnot validate the mortgage. In these words the validity of the transaction has to be determined quite apart from any question of pious obligation.

Reference has been made to certain decisions of this Court reported in the Oudh Law Journal, Volume V, but it is sufficient to say that there is none of those cases which is a direct authority for the proposition contended for by the respondents. In our opinion the Privy Council did not intend to lay down in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) that a conveyance in consideration of antecedent debts can in no case be enforced during the father's lifetime.

As regards the second proposition the respondents were obliged to admit the existence of a Bench ruling of this Court which is against them. In Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (8) it was said with reference to Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1): "What their Lordships seem to lay down is that an antecedent debt secured by a mortgage might be open to the same objection as a subsequent mortgage effected to pay the debt. They nowhere say that the personal obligation comprised in every simple mortgage cannot be separated from the mortgage debt and that..... the personal obligation to repay the money may not amount to an antecedent debt which the son may be under an obligation to pay if it was incurred for purposes neither illegal nor immoral."

The principle laid down in Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (8) has been followed in a number of subsequent cases in this Court, and on the principle of stare decisis we consider that we ought to follow it unless and until it is pronounced erroneous by higher authority. The words "wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate" used by their Lordships must, we think, be interpreted with reference to the facts before them. Where there is a personal debt enforceable apart from the prior mortgage, we see no reason why it should not have the same effect as any other antecedent debt.

The next question is whether the plaintiff's liability is affected by the fact that the document was executed under a decree for specific performance of a contract to sell. The learned Subordinate Judge has treated this as an indication that the creditor did not act in good faith. He relies on the observation in the Privy Council judgment that the rule in favour of an alienation to meet antecedent debt, being an exception to a wider rule, should not be extended and should be carefully guarded. This is a view which cannot be accepted. The Privy Council judgment itself indicates the directions in which the exception should be limited. As regards good faith it certainly cannot be said that when the vendor has made a binding agreement for sale with the intending purchaser and then without any justification backs out of it, the latter is guilty of bad faith by seeking to enforce it by the ordinary legal remedy. It was conceded in argument before us that the property was sold for its full value. If, therefore, the sale was one which Behari Lal was entitled to make, no question of bad faith on the part of the purchaser can arise. It is worthy of note in this connection that the bargain was made with the full assent of Behari Lal's only adult son, the defendant Gauri Shankar. He was present when the draft was prepared, it was he who purchased the stamp for the actual deed and it was he who wrote the receipt for the earnest money. Order XXI, rule 34, Civil Procedure Code, provides that the execution of the document under that rule shall have the same effect as if it had been executed by the party himself. The purpose for which the deed was executed being one which would be binding on the sons and a complete contract having been entered into from which he could not legally withdraw, it does not appear to us that the liability of the sons can be affected by the fact that he committed a breach of contract and that the vendee was compelled to resort to the Court to enforce its execution.

There still remains one further point to consider, namely, the remaining portion of the consideration money and the effect on the suit, if it is found not to have been borrowed for valid necessity. The item for purchase of stamp goes with the main amount. If the sale-deed as a whole was binding, it was necessary to purchase a stamp in order that it might be executed in conformity with law. There remain the items of Rs. 65 paid as earnest money and Rs. 1,142 which was to be paid in cash. In this case there is no question of antecedent debt or of legal necessity. At the same time when the deed was finally executed, the creditor appears to have refused to repay this item retaining it against the costs due to him under the decree for specific performance. On this ground he ingeniously argues that it should be treated as an antecedent debt. This was, however, no part of the bargain between the parties. The bargain between the parties was that the amount should be paid in cash and it is impossible to treat it as an item binding on the sons. It has, however, been held in two cases, one of this Court and one of the Allahabad High Court, that where the bulk of the consideration is for antecedent debt or valid necessity so that it would have been impossible to raise the required amount except by effecting the sale in dispute, the fact that the vendor was able to obtain from the purchaser something over and above the amount binding on the estate is not a sufficient ground for setting aside the deed. The case in this Court [Buniyad Husain v Mata Din (9)] was the case of a Hindu widow who executed a sale-deed for Rs. 4,CCC. of which Rs. 3,782 4-9 was found to be for valid necessity. The whole deed was upheld on the authority of Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (3) and of Deputy Commissioner of Kheri v. Khanjan Singh (10). Bal Krishna Das v. Hira Lal (11) is a still more striking case. A house was sold by a Hindu daughter for Rs. 19,500, of which Rs. 7,775 was paid to a creditor of her father. The Court found that the debt could not have been paid off except by sale of the house, that the house could not be sold piecemeal, and that the price paid was a fair one, and upheld the whole transaction. These were cases of alienations by a Hindu female, but the same principle applies. At the time of the transaction in dispute in this case also there was a heavy and increasing debt capable of being ultimately realised from the family property.

For the reasons already given we allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs in both Courts.

No special sympathy need be felt for the plaintiff over this result. The plaintiff is a minor and there is very little doubt that the suit has really been brought at the instance of Behari Lal and Gauri Shankar in order to avoid the effect of the decree for specific performance passed against the former.

Appeal allowed.

The presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to the case of a tenant who has been recorded in the Record of Rights as an occupancy raiyat under section 102, clause (b), of the Act and not as a raiyat holding at fixed rates. [p. 81, col. 1.]

From the mere forbearance on the part of the landlord to claim enhancement of rent for a long period it does not follow as a matter of course that the original contract of tenancy was for payment of rent by the tenant at a fixed rate for ever. [p 82, col. 1.]

Section 35 of the Bengal Tenancy Act relates to the amount of assessment and does not refer to the grounds upon which a Court has to determine whether enhancement should be allowed or not. [p. 82, cols. 1 & 2.]

IN No. 2131 OF 1917.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Tipperah, dated the 16th of July 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, Comilla, dated the 24th July 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Upendra Nath Roy, for the Appellants in Appeal No. 2129 of 1917.—The lower Courts have erred in law in not allowing enhancement of rent as claimed by the plaintiffs. In this case there was a Record of Rights and the particulars mentioned in section 102, clause (b), Bengal Tenancy Act, were recorded and so according to section 115, Bengal Tenancy Act, the defendants cannot claim the benefit of any presumption under section 50, Bengal Tenancy Act. The case of Maharaja Radha Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Umed Ali (1) is no longer good law and is not binding on your Lordships. It has been overruled by the case of Pirthi Chand Lal Chowdhury v. Basarat Ali (2). Moreover, the wording of the section itself is clear on the point. The Courts below thought a presumption would arise.

Babu Gunoda Charan Sen, for the Respondent in Appeal No. 2129.—It has been proved in this case by the defendants that they have been holding at a uniform rent which has not been changed during the twenty years immediately preceding the suit, so it shall be presumed, under section 50, Bengal Tenancy Act, that they have held at that rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement. So section 115, Bengal Tenancy Act, does not affect the facts and circumstances of the present case.

Babu Upendra Nath Roy, in reply, referred to Harihar Persad v. Ajub Misir (3) and the decision of Justices Woodroffe and Huda in Muralidhar Aditya v. Radha Mohan Hazra (4) decided on 9th April 1919.

Babu Upendra Kumar Roy, for the Appellants in Appeal No. 2131 of 1917.—The lower Courts erroneously relied on natural presumption and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit for enhancement of rent. There was a Record of Rights fourteen years before the institution of the suit. No presumption can arise for the period subsequent to the publication of the Record of Rights and it is clear that uniform payment of rent has been proved for only nine years prior to the publication of the record. Refers to Pirthi Chand Lal Chowdhury v. Basarat Ali (2).

The presumption is barred according to the provisions of section 115, Bengal Tenancy Act. Nineteen years before the suit the tenants were recorded only as occupancy raiyats.

Babu Ram Dayal Dey, for the Respondents in Appeal No. 2131.—The presumption in this case arises from the fact of uniform payment of rent for a long period. Fixed rent has been paid for a long period and there has no enhancement by the plaintiffs. The defendants have proved payment of a uniform rate of rent for 28 years. So section 50 (b), Bengal Tenancy Act, is clearly applicable to the facts and circumstances of this case. The plaintiff has not claimed any enhancement for about 40 years. It shows that the tenancy was at a fixed rate of rent in perpetuity.

Regard being had to the situation and condition of the lands, it is inequitable to grant any enhancement. Refers to section 35, Bengal Tenancy Act.

Babu Upendra Kumar Roy replied.

JUDGMENT.

SECOND APPEAL No. 2129 OF 1917.

This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of arrears of rent and also for enhancement of rent.

The defendant was entered in the Record of Rights as an occupancy raiyat and not as a raiyat holding at fixed rates.

The Courts below have disallowed enhancement on the ground that the defendants have been holding at a fixed rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement.

It appears, however, that there was a Record of Rights in 1899, that is, 17 years before the institution of the present suit. A period of 35 years during which the defendant proved uniform payment of rent covers a period of 18 years before the final publication of the Record of Rights and another period of 17 years subsequent to such Record of Rights.

Section 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act lays down that when the particulars mentioned in section 102, clause (b), have been recorded under this chapter in respect of any tenancy, the

(1) 12 C. W. N. 904.

(2) 3 Ind. Cas. 449 (F. B.); 37 C. 30; 13 C. W. N. 1149; 10 C. L. J. 343.

(3) 22 Ind. Cas. 604; 45 C. 930.

(4) 51 Ind. Cas. 552.

presumption under section 50 shall not thereafter apply to that tenancy.

In the present case the defendant was recorded in the Record of Rights as an occupancy raiyat under section 102, clause (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the presumption, therefore, under section 50 cannot apply to the case.

In the case of Maharaja Radha Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Umed Ali (1), it was held by Mr. Justice Doss that notwithstanding the provisions of section 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the tenant was entitled, upon proof of uniform payment of rent for 20 years before the Record of Rights were framed, to the benefit of the presumption under sub section (2) of section 50, and that the word "thereafter" in section 115 refers to a period subsequent to the publication of the Record of Rights. This latter proposition was not accepted in the case of Pirthi Chand Lal Chowdhury v. Basarat Ali (2) See also the case of Harihar Persad v. Ajub Misir (3) and the recent unreported decision in Second Appeals Nos. 2008 and 2483 of 1917, decided by Woodroffe and Huda, JJ., on the 9th April 1919 [Muralidhar Aditya v. Radh Mohan Haera (4)]. It is, however, unnecessary for us to consider whether any presumption arises with reference to uniform payment of rent before the final publication of the Record of Rights, because in the present case the period for which uniform payment of rent has been proved extends only to 18 years and no presumption under section 50 could, therefore, arise. So far as the period subsequent to the publication of the Record of Rights is concerned, no presumption arises under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, having regard to the provisions of section 115 of the Act. The period, moreover, is less than 20 years. The judgments of the Courts below, which proceeded entirely upon the presumption, which, in their opinion, arose in the case from the uniform payment of rent, must, therefore, be set aside on this point.

The decree of the lower Court, in so far as it relates to arrears of rent, is affirmed and the case must be sent back to the Court of first instance in order that the question of enhancement of rent may be tried out. Costs will abide the result.

S. A. No. 2131 of 1917.

In this case also, the plaintiff sued for enhancement of rent and the claim for enhancement has been disallowed on the ground that there was a "natural presumption" that the tenant was holding at a rent fixed in perpetuity.

In this case it is found by both the Courts below that the tenancy came into existence only 40 years ago and that the defendant had proved payment of rent at a uniform rate for 28 years. In this case, also, there was a Record of Rights 14 years before the institution of the suit. No presumption can arise for the period subsequent to the publication of the Record of Rights. There remains, therefore, only a period of nine years prior to the publication of the Record of Rights, for which uniform payment of rent has been proved.

It is said that apart from the presumption under section 50, a "natural presumption" as to the fixity of the rent arises from the fact of uniform payment of rent for a long period. As we have already stated, the tenancy came into existence only 40 years ago long after the Permanent Settlement; uniform payment has been proved only for 28 years and 19 years before the suit the tenants were recorded only as occupancy raiyats. We do not think, in these circumstances, that any presumption could possibly arise as to the rent being fixed.

With reference to the observations made by the learned Subordinate Judge as to the natural presumption arising from uniform payment of rent for 28 years, we may refer to the case of Jagabandhu Saha v. Magnamoyi Dassi (5) where the learned Judges observed (with reference to two plots of agricultural land held by occupancy raiyats whose rent had not been altered for 40 years) as follows: "Can we hold, as a matter of law, that the only inference legitimately deducible from the facts is that at the inception of the tenancies, the rent was, by agreement of parties, fixed in perpetuity? It is plain that the inference as to the terms of the original contract is drawn from the conduct of the parties. The only conduct of the plaintiff or his predecessor whereupon reliance is placed by the defendant is his omission to claim enhancement of rent for a period of 40 years. Does such forbearance on the part of the landlord necessarily justify the inference that the contract of tenancy in its inception was for payment of rent fixed in perpetuity? The answer must, obviously, be in the negative. The conduct of the landlord, though consistent with the hypothesis that the rent was fixed in perpetuity, is equally consistent with a very different hypothesis. The landlord might not have sued for enhancement of rent, because, in view of the amount of rent already fixed, as well as the character of the land comprised in the tenancies, no further rent could be legitimately claimed. We have no information about the history of the holding or the condition of the land included therein. We do not know what would be the fair rent at the present time or would have been the fair rent during the years past. In these circumstances, from the mere forbearance on the part of the landlord to claim enhancement of rent even for 40 years, the inference does not follow as a matter of course that the original contract was for payment of rent by the tenant at a fixed rate for ever. If we were to accede to the contention of the defendant-appellant, we would be driven to hold, in substance, that every landlord who refrains from the institution of a suit for enhancement of rent of an occupancy holding, does so at his peril and that his forbearance, however just, will raise a presumption against him that the tenant held at a rent fixed in perpetuity." We entirely agree with these observations.

Much stress was laid by the learned Pleader for the respondent on the concluding portion of the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, where he says that the plaintiffs are not entitled equitably to enhancement of rent. The only ground upon which the learned Subordinate Judge so held is the position of the land by the side of a river and there being no crops grown on it. We do not think that that is what is contemplated by section 35 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That section, we think, relates to the amount of assessment and does not refer to the grounds upon which a Court has to determine whether enhancement should be allowed or not.

The decree of the lower Court, in so far as it relates to arrears of rent, will stand and the case must be sent back to the Court of first instance for a decision of the question of enhancement of rent.

Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

A decree for foreclosure passed ex parte against a person joined as defendant on the sole ground that he is in possession of the mortgaged property does not operate as res judicata so as to prevent him or his transferee from setting up a title paramount in a subsequent suit, where there has been no express adjudication on the question of title, though the final decree orders delivery of possession and possession has been accordingly delivered. Appeal from the remand order, dated the 5th October 1917, passed by the District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, in First Appeal No. 79 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the following Order of Reference made by

MITTRA, A. J. C.—(June 25th, 1918).—The plaintiff sues for possession of a half share in Survey No. 38 on the basis of a sale deed executed by the defendant Malai on the 14th April 1914. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 obtained in Suit No. 56 of 1913 an ex parte conditional decree for foreclosure on the 28th April 1913. To this suit Malai was made a party defendant, apparently on the allegation that she was in possession of the mortgaged property, and a decree passed against her. A final decree for foreclosure was passed on the 17th October 1914, which directed delivery of possession of the property against all the defendants. Possession was delivered on the 26th November 1914. The suit was dismissed by the Munsif on the ground that the former suit operated as res judicata. This decree has been reversed by the District Judge, East Berar, following the decision of this Court in Hanumansingh v. Mannulal (1). This decision is questioned before me, and it is urged that Mr. Skinner's ruling is inconsistent with the later Privy Council ruling in Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh (2). On the other hand the case of Hanumansingh v. Mannulal (1) has been recently followed by Sir Henry Stanyon in Second Appeal No. 375 B of 1915 [Kundanmal v. Karniram]. I think it is necessary to refer to a Bench the following question:—

Whether a decree for foreclosure passed ex parte against a person who is impleaded on the sole ground that he is in possession of the mortgaged property operates as res judicata so as to prevent him or his transferee from setting up a title paramount in a subsequent suit.

The record is submitted to the Judicial Commissioner for orders.

The Judicial Commissioner ordered as follows:—

"The reference made by Mr. Mittra, A. J. C., will be heard and decided by a Bench composed of the Judicial Commissioner, Batten, A. J. C., and the referring Judge himself"

Messrs. M. V. Joshi and V. V. Chitale, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour and Mr S. Y. Deshmukh, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

OPINION OF THE FULL BENCH.

DRAKE-BROCKMAN, J. C.—(February 26th, 1919).—The question referred to the Full Bench as stated in the opinion of Mittra, A. J. C., requires to be narrowed down in view of the particular facts which have to be considered and may be thus stated:—

"Whether a decree for foreclosure passed ex parte against a person joined as defendant on the sole ground that he is in possession of the mortgaged property operates as res judicata, so as to prevent him or his transferee from setting up a title paramount in a subsequent suit where there has been no express adjudication on the question of title, though the final decree orders delivery of possession and possession has been delivered thereunder."

The facts are fully stated in the opinion of Batten, A. J. C., which I have had the advantage of reading. What has to be determined is whether Musammat Malai both might and ought to have advanced in the previous suit the plea that she had a title paramount to the mortgage on the foot of which the suit was brought That she must be dealt with on the same footing as if she had appeared in answer to a summons is conceded That if she had appeared and set up that title as a defence to the suit she would have obtained a decision as to its validity, is more than doubtful in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Nilakant Banerji v. Suresh Chandra Mullick (3) and of the views taken in Jaggeswar Dutt v. Bhuban Mohan Mitra (4) and Gobardhan v. Manna Lal (5). On this ground alone, I think it may safely be held that we should not declare it to have been the duty of the woman to have raised the question of her paramount title. In Henderson v. Henderson (6) the Vice-Chancellor stated the rule in questions of the present kind to be as follows:—

"Where a given matter becomes the subject of litigation in, and of adjudication by, a Court of competent jurisdiction, the Court requires the parties to that litigation to bring forward their whole case, and will not (except under special circumstances) permit the same parties to open the same subject of litigation in respect of a matter which might have been brought forward as part of the subject in context, but which was not brought forward, only because they have, from negligence, inadvertence, or even accident, omitted part of their case. The plea of res judicata applies, except in special cases, not only to points upon which the Court was actually required by the parties to form an opinion and pronounce a judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation, and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time."

It being settled law owing to the decision of the Privy Council in Kameswar Pershad v. Rajkumari Ruttan Koer (7) that it depends upon the particular facts of each case whether a matter ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in a previous suit, can we safely hold that Malai, if she had appeared in 1913, ought to have set up the title relied on in the present litigation, when it is at least highly improbable that any inquiry into that plea would have been undertaken? It may be said that the Court might have improperly gone into the question and come to a decision that the title alleged was unproved. This, however, does not seem to me to be a good reason for laying down that Malai was bound to invite an adjudication by setting up her title, and much less for laying down that she must now be treated as having had a decision adverse to that title recorded against her.

The decision of the Privy Council in Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh (2) is not really apposite. There a point which might have been raised by a prior mortgagee joined as defendant in previous suits brought on foot of later mortgages was held to be res judicata by reason of his failure to raise it in those suits. Section 85, Transfer of Property Act, was in force when all the suits were instituted, and under that section the prevailing view was that a prior mortgagee was a necessary party to a suit for sale or foreclosure by a puisne mortgagee: see Lakhmichand v. Ganpati (8) and Chulaji v. Fakir Shah (9). I agree with Batten, A. J. C., that in the peculiar circumstances of this case Malai cannot be regarded as having lost by reason of the final decree in the suit of 1913 any possession other than such as she would have had under a title affected by the mortgage on which that decree was based. I would accordingly answer the question referred to us in the negative.

BATTEN, A. J. C.—(February 22nd, 1919).—The question referred for decision to the Full Bench has been put in the following terms:—

"Whether a decree for foreclosure passed ex parte against a person who is impleaded on the sole ground that he is in possession of the mortgaged property operates as res judicata so as to prevent him or his transferee from setting up a title paramount in a subsequent suit."

An answer in the affirmative to the above question would involve a disagreement with the decision of Skinner, A. J. C., in Hanumansingh v. Mannulal (1), which has been followed by Stanyon, A. J. C., in Kundanmal v. Karniram (Second Appeal No. 375-B of 1916). The following is the headnote of the reported case :—"If a person joined as defendant in a mortgage suit has a title paramount to that of the mortgagor, he is not bound to set up such a title by way of defence to the mortgage suit and his omission to do so will not, therefore, render the question of his title res judicata against him." It is desirable to consider the question with regard to the facts of the present case. The plaintiff sues for possession of a half share in survey No. 38 on the basis of a sale-deed executed by the 1st defendant, Musammat Malai, on the 14th April 1914. In Suit No. 56 of 1913 the 2nd and 3rd defendants obtained an ex parte conditional decree for foreclosure on the 28th April 1913. According to the allegations of the plaintiffs in that suit the then 1st defendant Ranu executed a mortgage deed in their favour and the plaintiffs sued for foreclosure of the mortgage. Paragraph 4 of the plaint ran as follows :—

"Defendant No. 3 (Akya) has taken on lease from defendant No. 2 (Musammat Malai) one of the mortgaged fields, namely, Survey No. 38, subsequently to the plaintiffs' mortgage and as this field is in possession of defendant No. 3, they have been impleaded as defendants in this suit."

The prayer was for a foreclosure decree in the ordinary terms and for possession. None of the defendants appeared and an ex parte preliminary decree for foreclosure was passed against all of them, which was followed in due course by an ex parte final decree against all of them. The final decree contains a direction that the defendants shall put the plaintiffs in possession of the property.

In the present suit the plaintiff's case is that the field was originally the property of Malai's husband Ramji, and that on his death it became the property of Malai. The first Court held that the plaintiff was estopped by the principle of res judicata from contesting the validity against Malai of the foreclosure decree obtained by the 2nd and 3rd defendants against Malai, because Malai ought to have raised the plea that she was not a necessary party to the foreclosure suit. On appeal the District Judge reversed the decision of the lower Court and remanded the suit for decision on its merits. The learned District Judge followed the reported case cited above.

In appeal it is urged that it was decided in the former suit that Malai was liable to be foreclosed merely because she was in possession through her tenant and a decree for foreclosure and possession was passed accordingly: the decision may be incorrect, but it is binding on Malai for the Court which passed the decree had jurisdiction to pass it. It is conceded by the learned Counsel for the respondents that the fact that the decree was ex parte makes no difference.

The question whether Malai had a paramount title which was not in any way affected by the mortgage was not put in issue in the former suit and was not decided. If the question is res judicata against Malai and her transferee, it can only be because of explanation IV to section 11, Civil Procedure Code. This explanation runs as follows:—

"Any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit."

I do not think it necessary to express an opinion whether the Court in a mortgage suit has jurisdiction to decide a question of adverse title set up in such a suit. I will assume for the purposes of this case that the Court may go into such a question. It is undoubtedly the law that the Court need not go into a question of the paramount title of a party claiming adversely to the mortgagor, unless one of the parties to the suit invites such an enquiry. To decide whether Malai ought to have set up a paramount title as a defence within the meaning of explanation IV, we have to see what was the nature of the suit. The plaintiffs did not expressly allege that Malai was joined because she set up a paramount title; they merely said that she was in possession through her tenant and was, therefore, entitled to redeem the mortgage sued upon and was liable to be foreclosed. The suit was brought in the form of an ordinary mortgage suit for foreclosure and we must not read into the plaint more than what is found there. We must assume, in my opinion, that the then plaintiffs believed Malai to be in possession in consequence of some interest in the mortgaged property liable to be affected by the mortgage given by Ranu. We cannot assume, that the plaintiffs meant that in spite of having an interest not liable to be so affected she was nevertheless liable to be foreclosed. To such a claim it cannot, in my opinion, be said that Malai ought to have pleaded her paramount title which was not alluded to by the plaintiffs. I consider that the foreclosure decree was not a decree to the effect that because she held a paramount title she was liable to be foreclosed. The decree would be res judicata against her as far as it goes. She would be estopped by the rule of res judicata from setting up any title which could possibly be affected by the mortgage. She has lost any right to possession which she might have had under a title in any way connected with the mortgage. But she is not estopped from setting up any paramount title or her right to possession under such title, since in the former suit as brought by the then plaintiffs her rights under any paramount title were not brought before the Court.

The question referred for decision to the Full Bench should, with reference to the circumstances of the case before us, be amplified so as to read as follows:—

"Whether a decree for foreclosure passed ex parte against a person who is impleaded on the sole ground that he is in possession of the mortgaged property operates as res judicata, so as to prevent him or his transferee from setting up a title paramount in a subsequent suit, where there has been no express adjudication on the question of title, though the final decree orders delivery of possession and possession has been accordingly delivered."

For the reasons given above I would answer the question in the negative.

MITTRA, A. J. C.—The question referred for decision to the Full Bench has been formulated in the following terms: whether a decree for foreclosure passed ex parte against a person who is impleaded on the sole ground that he is in possession of the mortgaged property operates as res judicata, so as to prevent him or his transferee from setting up a title paramount in a subsequent suit. The point which calls for a decision in the case is, however, somewhat narrower, and the question referred may be modified by the addition of the following words: "where there has been no express adjudication on the question of title, though the final decree orders delivery of possession and possession has been accordingly delivered."

This reference has been made in consequence of the decision of Skinner, A. J. C., in Hanumansingh v. Mannulal (1), which has been recently followed by Sir Henry Stanyon in Kundanmal v. Karniram (Second Appeal No. 375 B of 1916). The headnote in the reported case is to the following effect:—

"If a person joined as defendant in a mortgage suit has a title paramount to that of the mortgagor, he is not bound to set up such a title by way of defence to the mortgage suit and his omission to to do so will not, therefore, render the question of his title res judicata against him."

The defendant there was a purchaser from three brothers, one of whom had executed the mortgage deed sued upon. After the foreclosure decree he was allowed to set up his paramount title to a two third share in a subsequent suit, though neither the decree nor the proceedings had made any reservation in favour of such title.

The foreclosure decree in the present case was passed ex parte against the present plaintiff's predecessor in interest, Musammat Malai, and notwithstanding this the plaintiff sues for possession of one of the fields foreclosed. It is not contended that summons was not duly served on her. As possession in execution of the decree was delivered to the mortgagees long before the present suit, the time for setting aside the ex parte decree has expired, and the decree may now be regarded as final. It is not suggested in the argument at the Bar that the fact of the decree being ex parte makes any difference to the decision of the case.

On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent it is contended that there was really no decree against his predecessor. This argument is based upon the fact that in the printed form of the decree the word "defendant" appears in the singular number in some places, but on reading the judgment and the proceedings, it is perfectly obvious that the decree was passed against all the defendants in that suit. Moreover, this is a question not referred to the Full Bench.

It is urged that Malai was not a proper party to the previous suit for foreclosure, that the mere allegation that she was in possession of the mortgaged property did not disclose a cause of action against her, and that her paramount title was outside the scope of the suit. It cannot, however, be denied that the Subordinate Judge who decided the case had jurisdiction to do so. It was for him to decide who is a proper party, whether a cause of action has been disclosed and whether a decree, and what decree, should be passed. Whether he has decided rightly or wrongly does not affect the case. It is conceded that an erroneous decision will operate as res judicata. It is not open to the Court in a subsequent suit to review such findings as are expressly recorded or which follow by necessary implication from the decree. Therefore, the previous decree must be deemed to have held that Malai on the ground of her possession of the mortgaged property was a necessary party, that she had a right to redeem and was liable to foreclosure and to dispossession upon foreclosure.

It is, however, clear that Malai's paramount title was not expressly within the scope of the suit as framed, nor was there an express decision on it. Now the question is whether, in view of the fact that she must be deemed to have been properly made a party and the further fact that the relief asked for included delivery of the property mortgaged, she was or was not bound to set up her title. In other words, whether explanation IV to section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code applies to the case.

When I made the reference my attention was mainly directed to a consideration of the questions whether the Court was competent to go into the matter of title and whether the Court ought to have decided it if raised by a defendant. There can be no doubt that the Court in a mortgage suit has jurisdiction to decide a question of adverse title set up in such a suit. Joggeswar Dutt v. Bhuban Mohan Mitra (4) is a clear authority in favour of this view. In a recent Allahabad case, Gobardhan v. Manna Lal (5), Banerji and Abdul Raoof, JJ., are reported to have said that a puisne mortgagee claiming to be owner of part of the mortgaged property could not set up his paramount title in the mortgage suit. If this is taken literally, it is opposed to the Calcutta case cited there as an authority in support of their Lordships' view. But I think the learned Judges meant no more than this, that the defendant could not insist upon a final decision on such a question of title.

Whether a Court ought to decide such a question when raised by a defendant who is a proper party to the mortgage suit, is a matter on which there may be difference of opinion. But it cannot be denied that ever since the decision of the Privy Council in Nilakant Banerji v. Suresh Chandra Mullick (3), our Courts have placed a restricted construction as to the scope of the inquiry in a mortgage suit. The Privy Council decision was with reference to a defendant who did not seek to redeem the mortgaged property. Although there is no statutory bar to the determination of a question of title raised by a defendant who is properly made a party to a suit, and although there is no authoritative decision laying down what should be done in such a case, the practice of the Court has been to regard such question as foreign to the mortgage suit. The two local judgments cited before impliedly recognise this practice. Whether that practice should in future be supported is a question not before us now, and if I had fully appreciated the importance of this, I would not have made the reference. The proper occasion for deciding that point will be when it arises in the mortgage suit itself.

The practice being as I have stated, the question now for decision is whether the fact that the defendant did not set up her paramount title in the mortgage suit brings the case within explanation IV to section 11. In deciding whether a ground of attack or defence ought to have been raised, regard must be had to the practice of the Court which probably influenced the conduct of the parties and their Pleaders. If such a title had been set up and Malai had not claimed to redeem the mortgage, she would have been discharged from the suit. If she had been interested in a part of the mortgaged property as the representative of the mortgagor and claimed title to another part of it, the Court might have either finally decided the question of title or left it open for future adjudication. This being in the discretion of the Court in view of the practice above stated, the Court was not bound to decide the question finally. There is no certainty that "the necessity for the present suit would have been avoided." This is the test which Mookerjee, J., interpreting the Privy Council decision in Sri Gopal v. Pirthi Singh (10) lays down in Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Persad (11). To hold a matter as finally decided when it has not been actually decided and when it need not have been so decided in view of our practice, is to unduly extend the doctrine of constructive res judicata beyond its proper limits.

The plaintiff did, no doubt, ask for possession in the previous suit, but it was only as consequential relief upon the relief by way of foreclosure. There was no prayer for possession upon the determination of a question of an adverse title. Under Order XXXIV, rule 3, there was an order for delivery of possession. The effect of the decree was that the defendant was debarred of all right to redeem the mortgage, and the right of the mortgagor, as it existed at the date of the mortgage, passed to the mortgagee free of all claims for further redemption by all persons made parties to the suit. It did not affect the title of the defendant so far as it was not derived from the mortgagor and so far as it was adverse to both mortgagor and mortgagee. If a person is properly made a party and a question of title to the mortgaged property is left undetermined, then the proper order, no doubt, is to leave the person in possession undisturbed until the question of title is finally decided. In such a case, if the mortgagee had asked for possession upon foreclosure and such possession was disallowed, it could not be held that the case came within explanation IV to section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, so as to bar him from raising the question of title afterwards, for the relief that was refused was a relief consequential upon foreclosure and not consequential upon the determination of the question of title. But the Court had to pass some summary and provisional order with regard to possession and if it erroneously passed an order against the defendant as in this case, such order cannot be regarded as a final determination of the question of title. Whether this summary order shifts the burden of proof upon the party against whom it is passed need not be decided now.

For these reasons my answer is that the suit is not barred by res judicata.

On the 26th February 1919 the record was sent back to the referring Judge with the following remarks:—

"The Judges constituting the Full Bench having been unanimously of opinion that the question referred to for their decision should be answered in the negative, the case with the opinions recorded is remitted to the referring Judge for disposal."

FINAL JUDGMENT.

MITTRA, A. J. C.—(February 27th, 1919).—In accordance with the unanimous opinion of the Full Bench, I hold that the suit is not barred by res judicata. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Principal and surety—Surety, liability of, extent of—Principal contract found to be void, effect of.

The liability of a surety is co-extensive with that of the principal debtor, except in so far as the contract may otherwise provide. In other words, the quantum of the obligation of a surety is the same as that of the principal debtor, whether he signs the document executed by the latter as a surety or as a co-executant, unless there is a contract to the contrary. It does not, however, follow that a surety can never be liable where the principal debtor cannot be held liable. The creditor can fall back on the contract of indemnity and enforce the liability of the surety, if the contract entered into by the principal debtor is found for any reason to be void or voidable. JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for the recovery of money due on a deed of mortgage purporting to have been executed by Musahib Ali and Hayat Mohammad. The property mortgaged by each of these mortgagors was separate and distinct, but there was a condition in the mortgage deed that the property mortgaged by Hayat Mohammad would not be liable till for any reason the mortgage money was found to be not recoverable from the property mortgaged by Musahib Ali. As a matter of fact the money, for which the mortgage was made, was borrowed by Musahib Ali, and though Hayat Mohammad was a co-executant, he was in substance a surety, who had hypothecated his property in order to indemnify the plaintiff in case he was unable to recover the mortgage money for any reason from the property mortgaged by Musahib Ali.

The Courts below dismissed the claim. Their finding is that Musahib Ali was of unsound mind on the date when the above mortgage was made and that no relief could be granted against Hayat Mohammad, because under the terms of the mortgage, he was to be made liable if the property mortgaged by Musahib Ali was found to be insufficient to satisfy the money due on the mortgage.

On behalf of the heirs of Musahib Ali the genuineness of the mortgage-deed was disputed. The Court of first instance found that its due execution was not proved but the finding of the lower Appellate Court is to the contrary. Hayat Mohammad, moreover, admitted having executed the mortgage-deed. The refusal of the Court below to enforce the mortgage against the property hypothecated by him rests on a very weak basis. The mortgage deed does not say that the property mortgaged by Hayat Mohammad was to be liable only in case the property mortgaged by Musahib Ali proved insufficient to satisfy the mortgage-money. The liability of Hayat Mohammad was contingent on anything happening which might prevent the realization of the mortgage-money from the property hypothecated by Musahib Ali. The contingency is not confined to the circumstances referred to by the Court below. The medical evidence adduced in the case shows that from before the date of the execution of the mortgage, the mental condition of Musahib Ali was more or less precarious. The Sub-Registrar, who registered the document, thought that he was of sound mind. The plaintiff had probably some apprehensions on the point, for he got a surety to mortgage his property as a co-executant with Musahib Ali before he lent money to the latter. The concurrent findings of the Courts below, the correctness of which cannot be challenged here, go to show that those apprehensions were justified.

A contract made by a person of unsound mind is legally void, but that fact does not discharge a surety. The liability of a surety is co extensive with that of the principal debtor, except in so far as the contract may otherwise provide. In other words, the quantum of the obligation of a surety is the same as that of the principal debtor, whether he signs the document executed by the latter as a surety or as a co executant, unless there is a contract to the contrary. It does not, however, follow that a surety can never be liable, where the principal debtor cannot be held liable. The creditor can fall back on the contract of indemnity and enforce the liability of the surety, if the contract entered into by the principal debtor is found for any reason to be void or voidable. In Kashiba v. Shripat Narshia (1) it was accordingly held that a surety to a bond passed by a minor for moneys borrowed for purposes of litigation not found to be necessary was liable to be sued on it, whether the contract of the minor was considered to be void or voidable. In Debendra Nath Dutt v. Administrator-General of Bengal (2) a person who stood surety for anadministrator to whom Letters of Administration had been granted was held liable, though the Letters of Administration granted to him were subsequently revoked on the ground that they had been obtained by fraudulent misrepresentations. The surety in that case was found to have been unaware of the fraud committed by the person for whom he stood surety; but their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the surety-bond did not become void, when the Letters of Administration were cancelled and the surety continued to be liable for the acts and defaults of the administrator, so long as the Letters of Administration were in force. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to enforce the mortgage made by Hayat Mohammad.

The appeal is allowed and the claim of the plaintiff decreed with costs and future interest at 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of the suit till six months from this date, after which further interest shall cease. The decree will be passed against the property mortgaged by Hayat Mohammad and will be framed in terms of Order XXXIV, rule 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Six months' time will be allowed for payment. The suit will

Section 9 of Bengal Regulation VII of 1822 does not authorize the settlement authorities to enhance the rent payable by raiyats Consequently a landlord cannot claim rent at the rate recorded by the Settlement Officer as the fair rent payable by cultivators. [p. 91, col. 2.]

It is well settled that a Settlement Officer under Regulation VII of 1822 does not settle rent but records rates of rent existing in the village. [p. 91, col. 1.]

Where a suit for recovery of enhanced rent, instituted on the theory that the rent payable by the defendants had been lawfully enhanced as a result of proceedings under Regulation VII of 1822, is found to be unfounded and is successfully contested by the tenant defendants, the suit cannot be treated as one for enhancement of rent, inasmuch as to do so would be to entirely alter the scope of the suit. JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent. The case for the plaintiff is that the defendants are occupancy raiyats in respect of a large tract of land within his estate which was last settled with him by Government for a period of 10 years from 1st April 1909. The plaintiff alleges that the rent payable by the defendants has been fixed at Rs. 1,659-13 0 in the settlement proceedings, and he claims to recover arrears at that rate. The defendants contend that the rent was payable at the annual rate of Rs. 1,239 9 12 gds. that such rate has not been affected by the proceedings of the settlement authorities and that whatever was due has been paid to the landlord. The Courts below have concurrently dismissed the suit.

On the present appeal it has been argued that under section 9 of Regulation VII of 1822, the rent payable by the defendants was, as a result of the settlement proceedings, enhanced to Rs. 1,659-13 0 per annum. In our opinion there is no foundation whatever for this contention. Section 9 of the Regulation prescribes the mode of investigation by Collectors who are called upon to make a revised settlement. The first paragraph of the first clause of that section is in these terms: "It shall be the duty of Collectors and other officers exercising the powers of Collectors, on the occasion of making or revising settlements of the land revenue, to unite, with the adjustment of the assessment and the investigation of the extent and produce of the lands, the object of ascertaining and recording the fullest possible information in regard to landed tenures, the rights, interests and privileges of the various classes of the agricultural community." The second paragraph then provides that the proceedings shall embrace the formation of as accurate a record as possible of all local usages connected with landed tenures and of various other matters specified therein. The last paragraph of the first clause upon which reliance is specially placed provides that "the information collected on the points previously mentioned shall be so arranged and recorded as to admit of an immediate reference hereafter by the Courts of Judicature, it being understood and declared that all decisions on the demands of the Zemindars shall hereafter be regulated by the rates of rent and modes of payment avowed and ascertained at the settlement and recorded in the Collector's proceedings, until distinctly altered by mutual agreement or after full investigation in a regular suit and all cesses for collections not avowed and sanctioned nor taken into account in fixing the Government jama shall be held illegal and unauthorised, unless now or hereafter specially sanctioned by Government." Stress is laid on the words "all decisions on the demands of Zemindars shall be regulated by the rates of rent and modes of payment avowed and ascertained at the settlement," and it is argued that this supports the view that the effect of an entry by the settlement authorities as to the fair rent payable by the cultivator has the effect of enhancement of his rent. In our opinion, the words, upon which reliance is placed, do not support the contention of the appellants. It is well settled that a Settlement Officer under Regulation VII of 1822 does not settle rent, but records rates of rent existing in the village. This view has been taken in a long series of cases, Nawab Nazim of Bengal v. Ram Lal Ghose (1), D'Silva v. Raj Coomar Dutt (2), Enayetoollah Meah v. Nubo Coomar Sircar (3), Ledlie v. Sreemutty Doorga Monee Dossee (4), Reazooddeen Mahomed v. McAlpine (5), Akshoya Kumar Dutt v. Shama Charan (6), Watson & Co. v Mohendro Nath Paul (7) and Zamir Mandal v. Shama Charan Singh (8). Reference, however, has been made to the provisions of section 195 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to show that nothing in the Bengal Tenancy Act, specially section 23, which provides that where an occupancy raiyat pays his rent in money his rent shall not be enhanced, except as provided by that Act, can affect the powers and duties of a Settlement Officer as defined by any law not expressly repealed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. This clause is of no assistance to the appellant, because section 9 of Regulation VII of 1822 does not authorise the settlement authorities to enhance the rent payable by raiyats.

It has finally been argued that the Act III of 1878 B. C. lends some support to the interpretation of section 9 of Regulation VII of 1822 put forward on behalf of the appellant. We are of opinion that the provisions of that Act justify precisely the opposite inference; it only shows that the settlement authorities had, in some instances, erroneously undertaken to settle fair rents and had thereby enhanced the rents payable by tenants, in contravention of the provisions of the Bengal Rent Acts of 1859 and 1868.

As a last resource, it has been argued on behalf of the appellant that the present suit may be treated as a suit for enhancement of rent and that the question of the fair rent payable by the defendants may be investigated herein. But it would be obviously unfair to the defendants to allow the plaintiff to treat this suit for rent as a suit for enhancement of rent. The suit was instituted on the theory that the rent payable by the defendants had been lawfully enhanced as a result of the proceedings under Regulation VII of 1822. That claim is unfounded and has been successfully contested. It is too late for the plaintiff now to turn round and ask that the scope of the suit may be entirely altered.

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is confirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. K. Ghose, holding brief of Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage effected by Lalta Singh, the father of Manna Singh, defendant No. 1, in favour of Bhau Singh and Rohan Singh, the ancestors of defendants Nos. 5 to 10, in lieu of Rs. 1,500, on the 25th September 1874. Lalta Singh died leaving three sons, Manna Singh, Kesri Singh and Baldeo Singh.

On the 27th October 1903, Manna Singh made a mortgage of his one-third share in the property previously mortgaged by his father in lieu of Rs. 500, leaving the entire consideration with Ganga Prasad, his mortgagee, for payment to the prior mortgagees aforesaid in satisfaction of his liability under the mortgage of the 26th September 1874. The mortgage-deed authorised him to take possession of that share on redemption. The prior mortgage-deed was not, however, redeemable till the expiry of 40 years from the date of the mortgage or in any month other than Jeth. The plaintiffs are the sons of Ganga Prasad.

On the 21st June 1915, Banke Behari Lal and Sitla Bakhsh, who had purchased the share of Kesri Singh and a portion of the interest of Manna Singh in the mortgaged property, tendered Rs. 1,500 to the defendants Nos. 5 and 6, the legal representatives of the prior mortgagees, under section 83 of Act IV of 1882, and obtained possession of the entire property mortgaged. The plaintiffs now seek to redeem the one-third share of Manna Singh mortgaged with them from the defendants Banke Behari Lal and Sitla Bakhsh, offering to pay to the latter Rs. 500 on account of their one-third share of what they had paid to the defendants Nos. 5 to 10. The Court of first instance decreed the claim but the lower Appellate Court dismissed it. The ground upon which the latter Court dismissed the suit was that the mortgage held by the plaintiffs was without consideration, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled in equity to enforce the mortgage by reason of their having failed to carry out their part of the contract so long.

The consideration for a mortgage may be money paid or promised to be paid afterwards. In this case there was a promise to pay, in so far as the consideration money was left for payment to the prior mortgagees; and so long as the plaintiffs are willing to keep up that promise and have not disqualified themselves by reason of any conduct of theirs to carry it out, the deed of mortgage, they held, cannot be deemed to be devoid of consideration. It is not contended that the mortgage executed by Manna Singh in favour of Ganga Prasad was fictitious or collusive. The only question for consideration is whether by reason of their failure to pay Rs. 500 to the prior mortgagees or their representatives-in-interest on account of the share of Manna Singh in the mortgaged property before the defendants Banke Behari Lal and Silta Bakhsh redeemed the same, the plaintiffs are estopped from redeeming that share from the persons last mentioned. The first opportunity for redeeming the prior mortgage arose in June 1915. The contesting defendants, Banke Behari Lal and Sitla Bakhsh, tendered the money due to the prior mortgagees in that very month. The present suit was filed on the 14th November 1916. The money due to the prior mortgagees was Rs. 1,500, but only Rs. 500 had been left with the plaintiffs by Manna Singh. It is stated that the plaintiffs had also purchased the one-third share of Baldeo Singh in the mortgaged property, but even if that was so, they could not have redeemed the mortgage without paying Rs. 1,500, unless the mortgagees were willing to allow redemption piecemeal. No default or delay can, therefore, be attributed to the plaintiffs.

The mortgage made by Manna Singh in favour of Ganga Prasad fixed no time for the payment of Rs. 500 to the prior mortgagees. In fact it was recognised that the prior mortgage would not be redeemable till the expiry of 40 years from its date, and that the money left with Ganga Prasad was to be paid after it became redeemable. Before the plaintiffs could take any steps to offer Rs. 500 to the prior mortgagees and to ask them whether they would allow piecemeal redemption, the defendants, Banke Behari Lal and Sitla Bakhsh, tendered Rs. 1,500 and redeemed the entire mortgage. In the application tendering the money, they described themselves as the purchasers of the one-third share of Kesri Singh, and they sought to redeem the entire mortgage in that capacity. The plaintiffs were not entitled to claim any interest under their mortgage. They were only entitled to take possession and appropriate the profits from the date on which they obtained redemption from the prior mortgagees. The exact time when redemption could be effected was thus a matter of subordinate interest to the mortgagor, for his burden was not enlarged, and as explained in Jamshed Khodaram Irani v. Burjorji Dhunjibhai (1) an inference that time was of the essence of the contract would not be justified in the circumstances.

The decision in Husaini v. Ram Charan (2) does not apply, because in that case the mortgagee with whom money was left for payment to the prior mortgagees took no steps for 20 years to redeem the prior mortgage, being evidently contented with the position that he would get interest at the rate stipulated in the mortgage-deed on the portion of the consideration money actually advanced by him and be liable to account for the profits of only such portion of the mortgaged property over which he got possession. When the mortgagors redeemed the prior mortgages, he turned round and sought possession over the remainder of the mortgaged property, offering to pay what the mortgagors had to pay to obtain redemption but the Court refused to allow him to enforce the contract made by the mortgagors to deliver possession, because he had not performed his part of the contract within a reasonable time. In Partab Singh v. Balwant Singh (3) a mortgagor was held entitled to recover from the mortgagee damages sustained by him in consequence of the failure of the latter to pay the money left with him for the redemption of the prior mortgage within a reasonable time. Here such delay as occurred was due to the fact that the amount left with the plaintiffs was insufficient to redeem the entire mortgage, and before the plaintiffs could ascertain from the prior mortgagees whether they would allow redemption piecemeal, the entire mortgage-money was offered by the contesting defendants-respondents.

It is next urged that a suit for redemption was not maintainable, because no tender was made by the plaintiffs in Jeth as required by the terms of the mortgage. The contesting defendants-respondents occupy the position of co-mortgagors, who had redeemed a joint mortgage and in view of section 95 of Act IV of 1882, which holds them entitled to a charge, they are not entitled to set up in defence a covenant which was only enforceable as between the mortgagors and the mortgagees. It is unnecessary to consider whether the contesting defendants-respondents had, at the time of their purchase, an actual notice of the mortgage made by Manna Singh in favour of the father of the plaintiffs. That mortgage was registered.

The appeals are, therefore, allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs here and of the appeal below, the contesting defendants-respondents bearing their own costs therein.

There is no presumption that in all cases where gifts are made to Hindu females the donors intend to give them only estates for life. No difference should be made between a male and a female, provided the words of gift are sufficiently clear to convey the property. Unless there is an expressed or implied qualification to the contrary, the donor must be deemed to have conveyed all that he was possessed of in the property granted. If the language of the instrument is capable of conferring an estate of inheritance, considerations regarding the sex of the donee should be discarded. Where, however, the language is ambiguous recourse can be had to ordinary notions of Hindus, as a rule of construction in finding out what the intention of the donor was. Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 23 of 1917 (Original Suit No. 35 of 1916 on the file of the Tanjore Sub-Court).

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Ayyar and T. S. Narayana Ayyar, for the Appellant.—

There is no hard and fast rule that every deed of gift conveys only a limited or life-estate to the donee. It is a question of the construction of the instrument of gift in each particular case. Where the language is clear and unambiguous, and there are no restrictions on alienation, an absolute estate passes, whether the donee is a male or a female. That is the rule of construction laid down by the Privy Council in Moulvie Mohamed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (1).

Sex is no determining factor nor a disqualification.

In the present case half of the donor's estate is given to the adopted son and the other half to his two widows. The widows must be deemed to have taken a full estate equally with the adopted son. It is not necessary that the donor should expressly empower alienation. The same language covers the gift to the adopted son: see Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Oha (2). The word 'Inam,' which occurs in the deed, shows that a grant was made in perpetuity.

The widow, who took an absolute estate under the gift by her husband, was certainly competent to dispose of it by Will. See Fateh Chand v. Rup Chand (3).

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar (Advocate-General), for the Respondents.—Ordinarily the rule is that a Hindu widow takes a limited estate under an instrument of gift unless the donor expressly gives a larger estate: see Moulvie Mohamed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (1).

Here there are no words giving an absolute power to the widows to make alienation: see Moulvie Mohamed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (1) and Radha Prasad Mullick v. Ranee Mani Dassee (4) where the Privy Council lay down the rule in a restricted form. Also Hirabai v. Lakshmibai (5).

The personal law of the donee should be considered in construing a deed of gift and the instrument should be construed with reference to the rules of inheritance applicable to the donees.

Assuming that the widow Tulja Boyee acquired an absolute estate under the gift deed, it was certainly not competent for her to dispose of the property by Will. The defendant gets nothing under the Will of Tulja Boyee: see Bhujanga Rau v. Ramayamma (6) and Nunnu Meah v. Krishnasami (7).

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—Construing this very deed in Appeal Suit No. 74 of 1896, Collins, C. J., and Shephard, J., observed: "There being no indication of intention to give a larger estate we must assume that the husband intended that a widow's estate only should pass." The trend of the later decisions in this Court beginning with Sambasiva Ayyar v. Venkataswara Ayyar (8) is against making any such assumption, and they appear to be supported by the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2), which cites with approval a ruling of Mitter, J., in Musammat Kollany Kooer v. Luchmee Pershad (9) that there is no presumption that a gift to a widow means a limited gift.

We must, I think, take it to be now settled, at any rate so far as this Court is concerned and until the decisions to which I have referred are overruled by higher authority, that the rule laid down by the Judicial Committee in Moulvi Mohamed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (1) is a rule of construction to be applied only when there is some uncertainty or ambiguity in the language of the instrument before the Court.

The question then is, is there anything in the terms of Exhibit III which warrants the application of the rule. The opening recital is to the effect that the settler made "the following gifts (Inams)" of the properties belonging to him on the occasion of his adopting as his son a boy of ten years of age. There is, first, a gift of chattels and money to a maternal nephew, then directions that certain allowances of paddy should continue to be paid to two descendants of his maternal uncles, that six Brahmins should be fed daily from the income of certain lands, and that a saffron allowance of Rs. 25 should continue to be paid to his sister. Then comes the disposition in favour of the widows. Of the remaining property the adopted boy "is to be entitled to and enjoy one-half." "Of the remaining half these two persons, my senior wife Sowbagiavati Kamatchi and my junior wife Sowbagiavati Tulja shall each take a half." On the language of this instrument I have come to the conclusion that there is no sufficient reason for cutting down the disposition in favour of the widows. Hirabai v. Lakshmibai (5) was decided on the view that there is a general presumption that a gift to a woman is only of a woman's estate, though, on the language of that document which was different from the language here, the rule of construction laid down in Moulvie Mohamed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (1) may have been applicable, as was held, though with a different result, in Seshayya v. Narasamma (10). Sir Charles Sargent, however, in the course of his judgment spoke of "the extreme improbability that, having adopted a son, the testator should have intended to give more than a life-estate, or, at the utmost, a widow's estate to his wife." As I stated at the hearing, my very general impression derived from the cases which have come before me is, that there is no such extreme improbability in this Presidency and my learned brother, whose opinion on such a point is entitled to much greater weight, is of the same opinion. I concur in the order proposed.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree. The suit is to recover possession of properties which were last in the enjoyment of one Tulja Boyee. Tulja Boyee's husband Ramojee Bavajee adopted plaintiff's father Bavajee. He executed Exhibit III on the 6th of August 1858, by which he settled one half of his properties upon his adopted son and gave the other half to his two wives. Tulja Boyee, the junior wife, took possession of a fourth share under that settlement. The defendant claims under her Will.

(10) 22 M. 357; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 255.

The points for consideration are whether Tulja Boyee took an absolute estate under Exhibit III and whether she was competent to dispose of the property by a Will.

I shall first deal with a few decisions of the Judicial Committee which were quoted as indicating the principles on which an instrument like the present should be construed. The learned Advocate General relied upon Moulvie Mohamed Shamsool Hooda v. Shewukram (1) and Radha Prasad Mullick v. Ranee Mani Dassee (4) Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar quoted Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2). In the first two cases the facts were almost identical. In both of them the father gave properties to his daughter or daughters and their children. In both the Judicial Committee held that the daughter or daughters took only a limited estate and pointed out that, in construing Wills of Hindus, their ordinary notions as to the devolution of property may be taken into account. In these cases it was clear that the daughters and their children could not have been regarded as tenants-in-common, because the children were not mentioned by name and it was as a class that they were referred to. The question, therefore, was whether the words "and their children" should be regarded as mere surplusage or whether they should be referred to to ascertain the intention of the donor. Their Lordships held that, ordinarily, a Hindu would desire that his properties should remain in possession of his descendants, and that consequently the donor could not have intended to give absolute powers of disposition to the daughters. I do not think that these judgments are authorities for the proposition that in all cases where gifts are made to females, a Hindu must be deemed to have given them only an estate for life. On the other hand the decision in Surajamani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2) relied upon for the appellant shows that, in the opinion of their Lordships, no difference should be made between a male and a female, provided the words of gifts are sufficiently clear to convey property. They quoted with approval the dictum of Mitter, J., in Musammat Kollany Kooer v. Luchmee Pershad (9), wherein the learned Judge stated: "We must hold that the gift in question was an absolute gift, unless it can be shown that, by the Hindu Law, a gift to a female means a limited gift or carries with it the effect of creating an estate similar to the 'widow's estate' under the law of inheritance. I am not aware of any such provision in the Hindu Law nor have we been referred to any authority in support of it." There can be no doubt that the Hindu Law does not enunciate that women as donees can only take an estate for life. The Judicial Committee say at the end of page 89*: "Nothing has been found in the context here or the surrounding circumstances or is relied upon by the respondents, but the fact that the donee is a woman and a widow, which was expressly decided in the last mentioned case not to suffice." The case referred to is Lalit Mohun Singh Roy v. Ohunkun Lal Roy (11). If we remember that Mr. Justice Mitter's decision in Musammat Kollany Kooer v. Luchmee Pershad (9) was given after examining at some length the dictum of the Judicial Committee in Moulvie Mohamed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (1), it is clear that their Lordships advisedly approved the principle enunciated by Mitter, J. In recent years there has been practical unanimity in Madras as to the construction to be placed upon similar documents. The first decision was in Sambasiva Ayyar v. Venkataswara Ayyar (8), which was contemporaneous with Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2), Gudimetla Vencatarazu v. Bottozu Kottaya (12), Bodi Muttayya v. Kavoori Kodandaramayya (13), Ratna Chettiar v. Narayanaswami Chettiar (14), Gomattam Ramanuja Aiyangar v. Satagopachar (15) and Nimasivayam Pillai v. Kuthalalingam Pillai (16) have decided that the sex of the donee is not a ground for cutting down an otherwise full estate.

The learned Advocate-General relied upon some decisions of the other High Courts. Most of them were earlier than Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2) and I do not think it necessary to examine them at any length. I would only say with reference to the observations of Sir Charles Sargent in Hirabai v. Lakshmibai (5) that at any rate so far as the Southern Presidency is concerned, there is nothing improbable in a Hindu giving an absolute estate to his wife when he directs an adoption to be made to him. Cases have not infrequently come before us in which, in order to avoid possible conflicts between an adopted son and his widow, a Hindu has been found to give a portion of his property absolutely to his widow and the other portion to his adopted son.

In deducing a rule of construction, a few considerations should be borne in mind. Section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down: "Unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied, a transfer of property passes forthwith to the transferee all the interest which the transferor is capable of passing in the property or in the legal incidents thereof." Therefore, unless there is an expressed or implied qualification to the contrary, the donor must be deemed to have conveyed all that he was possessed of in the property granted. The Judicial Committee in the Supplemental Volume of Indian Appeals at page 47 Jotendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore (17)] recognised this principle. Consequently, if the words employed are clear and unambiguous, no matter who the donee is, whether a male or a female, the language of the gift must be given effect to. This is what was laid down in Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2). But there may be cases in which it may be necessary, owing to the language employed not being clear and precise or being superfluous, to find out the intention of the donor. In such cases, as the learned Advocate General contended, the personal law of the donee may be taken into account. That is to say, the ordinary rule of inheritance applicable to him or her may be called in aid. This is not a rule of presumption so much as it is one for gathering the intention of the donor. Broadly speaking, it may be said that if the language of the instrument is capable of conferring an estate of inheritance, considerations regarding the sex of the donee should be discarded. Where the language is ambiguous, then recourse can be had to ordinary notions of Hindus as a rule of construction in finding out what the intention of the donor was.

Now I shall turn to Exhibit III and see whether, in the light of the above discussion, the document confers only a life estate upon Tulja Boyee. It was not seriously argued that there is any material difference between the words employed in the case of the adopted son and the words employed in the case of the two wives. Nor was it argued that the words employed in the case of the adopted son were not capable of conveying to him absolute rights in the property. I, therefore, fail to see why a distinction should be made between the two classes of donations. Further the preamble of the deed says: "I am giving these properties as Inam." The donor was a Maharatta Brahmin who lived in Tanjore and the document was written in Maharatti. Wilson in his glossary says about the word inam: "In India and especially in the south and amongst the Maharattas, the term was especially applied to grants of land rent-free, and in hereditary and perpetual occupation." In another dictionary by a Maharatta scholar the word inam is defined as meaning "a grant in perpetuity without conditions." These definitions support the conclusions at which I have arrived. In my opinion the gift to Tulja Boyee was an absolute one. There are certain legacies which have been directed to be paid out of the estate. As they are in terms only for life, the main dispositions are not affected by these life grants.

It was next argued by the learned Advocate General that even supposing that it was an absolute grant to Tulja Boyee, she was not competent to dispose of the property by Will. He relied upon Bhujanga Rau v. Ramayamma (6) and Nunnu Meah v. Krishnasami (7). At the same time, he frankly admitted that the two decisions are inconsistent with the conclusions of the Judicial Committee in Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2), where one of the widows who had acquired her property under a deed of gift from her husband disposed of it by a testamentary instrument. Their Lordships upheld the Will of the Hindu widow. Reference may also be made to Fateh Chand v. Rup Chand (3), where it was held that a widow could dispose by Will property which had come to her under a deed of gift. I am unable to find any valid reason for the view that properties in which a Hindu widow has an absolute estate cannot be disposed of by her by a testamentary instrument. These two Madras decisions must be deemed to have been overruled by Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2) and Fateh Chand v. Rup Chand (3). A portion of the property in suit is governed by the decision of this Court (vide Exhibit A). To that extent the defendants' claim is barred by res judicata. The decree of the Subordinate Judge must be reversed and the suit should be dismissed with costs, except in respect of the property which was the subject-matter of the suit under Exhibit A. The memorandum of objections is also dismissed with costs.

Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Suit decided by Revenue Court—Submission of parties to decree—Civil suit to set aside decree, maintainability of—Remedy, proper.

Where a Revenue Court decides a suit brought before it, holding that it has jurisdiction, and the parties submit to the decree and it becomes final, it is not open to one of them subsequently to ask a Civil Court to set aside the decree of the Revenue Court on the ground that it had wrongly decided the question of jurisdiction. If the suit has been decided wrongly, the remedy is by way of appeal. [p. 98, col. 2; p. 99, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 27th July 1918, upholding that of the Munsif, Purwa, dated the 26th March 1918.

Messrs. Basdeo Lal, Ram Bharose Lal and Raja Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In these two connected appeals the plaintiffs asked for a decree cancelling a decree of the Rent Court and awarding them the amount which by that decree has been made payable by them to the defendant-respondent Ram Bakhsh Singh. The latter is Lambardar of the Mahals in suit. He sued the present plaintiffs for the value of fish taken by them, treating it as siwai income and, therefore, rent. The plaint stated that the tank and the income from fish was treated as shamilat and was realised by the Lambardar alone.

The defendants filed written statements, in which among other pleas they challenged the jurisdiction of the Court on the ground that the sum sued for was not rent. Thereafter they failed to appear and the suits were decreed against them in part under section 108 (2) of the Oudh Rent Act. They did not appeal from these decrees, but they have now brought the present suits in the terms stated above. The lower Courts, both the Munsif as Court of first instance and the Subordinate Judge as Court of first appeal, have dismissed the suits on the ground that they are not entertainable. This and the question whether the Revenue Court had jurisdiction in the former suit have been the points argued in this Court.

It would certainly be somewhat startling to hold that when the Revenue Court has decided a suit brought before it and has decided, as it must by implication at least be held to have done, that it had jurisdiction and when the parties have submitted to that decree and it has become final, it should be open to one of them to come to the Civil Court and ask the Civil Court to set it aside. No parallel case has been shown to me. The appellants rely on those numerous cases in which after the Revenue Courts have ejected a man as a tenant he comes to the Civil Court for a declaration of his proprietary or under proprietary right. This is not quite a parallel case, as the question of proprietary right is one which the Revenue Courts have in this Province no jurisdiction to finally decide. It can only be settled in the Civil Court. In this case where a sum is alleged to be payable as rent and was apparently, as appears from a reference to the Revenue Court's judgment, treated as such in the wajib ul-arz, it was fully within the competence of the Revenue Court to decide whether the sum was rent or not, and if it decided it wrongly the law allows a remedy by way of appeal. The unsuccessful party ought not, in my opinion, be allowed to come to a Court not of appellate but of co ordinate jurisdiction and ask it to cancel a decree properly passed by the Revenue Court in the exercise of its functions, on the ground that that Court had wrongly decided a question of jurisdiction.

I am not prepared to say that a fishing right might not in some circumstances come within the definition of rent. It may amount to a right in land covered by water, because the only occasion in which water is referred to in the definition of rent is water for irrigation. The reason for specifying this separately is, however, that water for irrigation may sometimes be supplied independently of any right in land and, therefore, would not come within the definition unless separately specified. The question had to be decided on the case put forward by the plaintiff in the Revenue Court and not on the allegations now made by the plaintiffs in this suit. Agreeing with the decision of the Courts below, I dismiss both appeals with costs.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 47, 72, 74, 75, 85—Denial of execution—Compulsory registration—Enquiry delegated by Registrar to another officer, effect of—Registration, validity of—Priority.

A executed a sale-deed of certain land in B's favour on 5th December 1916 but the deed was not registered. On 6th December 1916, A executed another sale-deed of the same land in C's favour and the deed was followed by registration the same day. A refused to have the sale-deed in B's favour registered. B thereupon applied to the Registrar for compulsory registration under section 73 of the Registration Act, who referred the matter for inquiry to the Sub-Divisional Officer and on receipt of the latter's report directed the deed to be registered in B's favour under section 75 of the Registration Act:

Held, (1) that the registration of B's deed was not rendered invalid by reason of the Registrar delegating the holding of the inquiry to another person; [p. 10', col. 1.]

(2) that the sale-deed in B's favour took effect under section 47 of the Registration Act from the date of its execution and must prevail against the sale-deed in C's favour, notwithstanding the latter's earlier registration. [p. 100, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 31st January 1918, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Rohtak, dated the 18th October 1917.

Lala Rama Nand, for the Appellants.

Lala Moti Sagar, R S, and Lala Shamir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Musammat Ilahi Begam sold the land in suit to the plaintiffs for Rs. 250 on the 5th December 1916. On the following day she sold it to the defendants for Rs. 300 and the sale-deed being registered the same day, she refused to have the sale-deed in favour of the plaintiffs registered; so they applied for compulsory registration to the Registrar, who after having an inquiry made by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Sonepat ordered the deed to be registered, and in pursuance of his order it was registered under section 75 of the Registration Act.

The plaintiffs sue to establish their right to the land. The first Court passed a decree in their favour, but on appeal the learned District Judge has dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiffs' deed was not validly registered because the Registrar had no power to order the Sub-Divisional Officer of Sonepat to make the inquiry prescribed by section 74 of the Registration Act, but should have made it himself. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

It may be that section 74 of the Act contemplates an inquiry being made by the Registrar himself, but the ruling relied upon by the lower Appellate Court, Mata Dayal v. Queen Empress (1), does not lay down that the registration of the deed would be invalid by reason of the Registrar delegating the holding of the inquiry to another person. That was a criminal case and the question as to the validity of the deed did not arise, the only question being whether an offence had been committed under section 82.

The lower Appellate Court has overlooked section 85, which lays down that nothing done in good faith pursuant to the Act by any registering officer shall be deemed invalid merely by reason of any defect in his appointment or procedure. The delegation of the inquiry to the Sub-Divisional Officer of Sonepat was purely a defect in procedure. Counsel for the respondent has referred to Jambu Parshad v. Muhammad Nawab Aftab Ali (2), but that was a case of a document being presented for registration by an agent who was not authorized by his power-of-attorney to present it, and is not in point.

I hold that the registration of the plaintiffs' deed is not rendered invalid by the defect in the procedure followed by the Registrar, and, therefore, that deed operates from 5th December 1916 under section 47 of the Registration Act and has priority over the defendants' deed, which was executed a day later. I accept the appeal, set aside the lower Appellate Court's decree, and remand the case to that Court under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for disposal, after a finding has been given in regard to the 4th ground of the appeal to that Court, which has not yet been dealt with. The stamp on the appeal in this Court will be refunded. Other costs will follow the event.

I may note that the learned District Judge's order, expunging for reasons given by him, certain remarks made by the first Court in its judgment will stand.

Landlord and tenant—Maurusi tenancy, whether transferable—Occupancy holding, transfer of—Estoppel, whether can validate void transfer.

A maurusi tenancy which is transferable is unknown to the law.

A transfer of an occupancy holding which is void cannot be validated by estoppel.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Benares Division, dated the 16th August 1916, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal relates to certain occupancy land attached to an indigo factory, which has been transferred to successive holders together with the factory. The appellant, the latest transferee, resists ejectment on two grounds: (1) that the land, though recorded as maurusi, is in fact transferable, (2) that the respondent-landholder is estopped by the acquiescence in the long series of transfers from now denying the appellant's occupancy right.

As regards (1) there is no tenancy known to the law, so far as I am aware, of the kind indicated and there is nothing on the record to show that the land is other than occupancy land.

As regards (2) the transfer being void, no estoppel could validate it [cf. Ram Sarup v. Kishan Lal (1)].

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 9, rules framed by Punjab Chief Court under, r. 1 (1)—Restitution of conjugal rights, suit for, valuation of—Injunction, prayer for, effect of—Value, whether enhanced.

Where a plaintiff sues for restitution of conjugal rights and for an injunction restraining certain persons from preventing the union of the plaintiff with the lady whom he claims to be his wife, the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction is Rs 1,000. The prayer for an injunction, being merely a relief ancillary and incidental to the main relief claimed, does not affect that value.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gujrat, at Sargodha, dated 4th February 1918, reversing that of the Munsiff, 1st Class, Jhang, dated the 1st October 1917, decreeing the claim with costs.

Malak Muhammad Husain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights brought by the plaintiff against Musammat Chuhri and also for an injunction restraining two persons from preventing the union of the plaintiff and the lady whom he claimed to be his wife. The sole contention for the appellant is that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the claim, inasmuch as the value of the first relief alone could not be less than Rs. 1,000 and that the value of both the reliefs must, therefore, exceed Rs. 1,000. I am unable to accede to this contention. The rule framed by this Court under the Suits Valuation Act provides that the value for the purpose of jurisdiction of a suit instituted by the plaintiff for a decree against the other party to the alleged marriage, either alone or with other defendants, for restitution of conjugal rights is Rs. 1,000. This rule it seems to me covers the present suit; the prayer for an injunction is merely a relief ancillary and incidental to the main relief claimed and does not affect the value for the purpose of jurisdiction. The judgment of a single Bench in Civil Appeal No. 1681 of 1915 [Musammat Bhani v. Bansi (1)] is directly to the point and I see no reason to dissent from the view taken therein.

Accordingly I hold that the Munsif had jurisdiction to entertain the suit and upon the finding of fact arrived at by the learned District Judge, there is no ground for a second appeal. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Fraud—Decree, suit to set aside, on ground of fraud—Proof—Plaint, allegations in, whether must be adhered to—Failure to prove specific fraud alleged, effect of.

Where a decree is sought to be set aside on the ground of fraud, it must be shown that the plaintiff was prevented from putting his case before the Court or that some trickery or deceit was practised in connection with the proceedings. [p. 103, col. 1.]

Where the plaintiff fails to establish the fraud alleged in his plaint, he cannot be allowed to adduce evidence to show that the claim decreed against him was otherwise wrongly decreed. [p. 102, col. 2; p 103, col 1.]

A Court's decision cannot be called in question by a mere allegation offfraud in the pleadings or evidence, when the Judge after giving full opportunity to the parties to produce their evidence has decided rightly or wrongly in favour of one set of facts. [p. 104, col. 2.]

When the parties have had the opportunity of putting their respective cases before the Court and the Court after weighing the evidence has come to a decision the rule of res judicata comes into operation, and subject to the law as to appeal and review the decision is final between the parties. It is not open to the defeated party to re-open the matter merely by alleging that the evidence and the averments which the Court believed were untrue. [p. 103, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 28th May 1917.

The Hon'ble Mr. Wazir Hasan and Mr. B. N. Chakbast, for the Appellants, AJUDBIA PRASAD v. GUR DAYAL.

Messrs. Mumtaz Husain and Haidar Husain, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit to set aside a mortgage decree on the ground of fraud. The answering respondents Gur Dayal and Thakur Prasad are creditors who have ob tained a mortgage decree against the plaintiff-appellant Ajudbia Prasad and his brothers, the defendants Nos. 3 to 5. The mortgage was executed while the plaintiff was still a minor by the plaintiff's brothers, the eldest of them Baldeo purporting to act as his guardian, on 24th May 1911. The decree nisi was obtained on 24th April 1913 and was made absolute on the 23rd August 1913. The first plaintiff was admittedly of age at the time of the suit and was a party to it. The second and third appellants are persons to whom the first plaintiff has sold a portion of his rights for the purpose of carrying on the litigation.

The facts set forth in the plaint are that after the death of the father of Ajudbia Prasad and his brothers, the brothers were men of loose character and of spend-thrift ways and being in need of money they executed a mortgage-deed which included the plaintiff's share, although the plaintiff was under no necessity of borrowing money and was not benefited by the transaction. The plaintiffs in paragraph 6 and in the succeeding paragraphs of the plaint make the following specific allegations of fraud:—

(1) that the defendants Nos. 3 to 5 undertook to defend the suit on behalf of the first plaintiff and got his signature to a written statement, alleging that the mortgage was not binding on him on account of his minority and his having received no benefit from it, but that the defendants colluding with the creditors never filed this written statement;

(2) thereafter they informed the plaintiff that the mortgage suit had been decreed against them but that his share had been exempted.

On receipt of a notice, dated 2nd August 1913, when proceedings to obtain a final decree were pending, he first got an inkling that what he had previously been told was untrue and that his share also was being put to sale.

On these pleas they asked for a declaration that the decree absolute and the sale proceedings held thereunder were null and of no effect against them, by reason of the decree having been procured by fraud, and for possession of the mortgaged property.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found, largely on the admission of the plaintiff himself and of his brother Sundar Lal, that the allegations of fraud set forth above were utterly and absolutely false, and this finding is now accepted by the appellants. It was challenged in the grounds of appeal, but at the hearing the appellants' learned Advocate intimated that he was not prepared to challenge the lower Court's findings of fact. The learned Judge, having disbelieved the alleged fraud by which the decree was said to have been procured, went on to hold that the mortgage was not binding on the minor and that out of Rs. 18,000, its alleged consideration, only Rs. 6,000 were genuine and that the deed was executed for the larger sum in order to save the family property from another creditor named Mewa Lal, who had obtained a previous decree against the brothers. This, it would be noted, is an allegation nowhere set up in the plaint and the fraud, if true, was one which was not directed against the first plaintiff but was intended to benefit him in common with his brothers. It was indeed alleged in the plaint that the deed was not binding on the first plaintiff, but this was on the ground that he was not a party to it and derived no benefit from it. It was nowhere alleged that the consideration was fictitious and there is no suggestion of its having been executed in order to defraud another creditor.

The respondents in supporting the judgment attacked the above finding and urged further that when the fraud set up by the plaintiff was found to be untrue, the lower Court should not have gone into any other question and should not have allowed the plaintiff to set up a case not raised by the pleadings.

It is contended for the appellants—and this is the only plea pressed on their behalf—that even on the findings of fact arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge the suit should have been decreed. They contend that they are entitled, though they have failed to prove the case of fraud which they set up and though that case has been found to have been false and perjured, to adduce evidence to show that the claim which was decreed against them was wrongly decreed and to succeed on the ground of fraud on this basis. This is, in my opinion, not the law. If it were, the rule of res judicata would cease to have any value. There is not five per cent. of cases depending on disputed issues of fact in which allegations of perjury are not made by one party against the other, and any litigant whose evidence has been disbelieved would on the plaintiffs' contention be at liberty to re-open the whole case under cover of an allegation of fraud. Something more than this is necessary. It must be shown that the plaintiff was prevented from putting his case before the Court or that some trickery or deceit was practised in connection with the proceedings. When the parties have had the opportunity of putting their respective cases before the Court and the Court after weighing the evidence has come to a decision the rule of res judicata comes into operation, and subject to the law as to appeal and review the decision is final between the parties. It is not open to the defeated party to re-open the matter merely by alleging that the evidence and the averments which the Court believed were untrue. The law has been fully considered and (apart from a decision to which reference will be made) may be regarded as definitely settled by important decisions of the Allahabad, Madras and Calcutta High Courts mentioned below:—

Chinnayya v. Ramanna (1), Kadervelu Nainar v. Kuppuswami Naicker (2), Chhattar Singh v. Amir Singh (3), Nanda Kumar Howladar v. Ram Jiban Howladar (4), Janki Kuar v. Lachmi Narain (5), Kusadhaj Bhakta v. Broja Mohan Bhakta (6).

The judgments in Chinnayya v. Ramanna (1) and in Ramratan Lal v. Bhuri Begam (7) are particularly deserving of perusal.

(7) 20 Ind. Cas. 792; 38 A. 7; 13 A. L. J. 901.

This rule, as was pointed in Ramratan Lal v. Bhuri Begam (7), holds good equally whether a case has been decided ex parte or after contest. In an ex parte case the defendant is informed of the claim and the law requires that he shall receive a copy of the plaint with the summons served on him. He has, therefore, a full opportunity of deciding whether to contest the claim or not, and if he deliberately elects not to do so the decree is just as binding on him as if he had put in a defence. If, on the other hand, he could show that owing to some trick practised by the plaintiff the summons never reached him, the matter would stand on a different footing and a genuine case of fraud sufficient to invalidate the decree will be made out. The matter was discussed by the Allahabad High Court in the following passage:—

"Some attempt has been made to distinguish between what is called an ex parte decree or order after contest. I do not think there is any just ground for such a distinction. Assuming a party to have been duly served with notice, if he neglects to come forward and avail himself of the opportunity of preventing a wrong order being made against him, I cannot conceive upon what possible ground he should be placed in a better position than the party who comes forward and informs the Court (in the manner provided by law) of his rights and prevents (so far as he can) a wrong order being made. In my judgment the party who after due notice allows the decree or order to be made without opposition is in the same position as a person who had a decree or order made against him after contest."

Though there have been some earlier Calcutta cases which have laid down a contrary law, they may now be taken to have been overruled. The only case in conflict with the above view of the law which it is necessary to notice is the case of Sarup Narain v. Sheo Shankar Lal (8) decided by the Judicial Commissioner in 1917. This case has not been included in the authorized reports but it is printed on page 522 of Vol. IV of the Oudh Law Journal. This was a case in which the plaintiff attempted to claim certain property as a reversionary heir of the husband of one Musammat Gulaba, on an allegation that this lady had not been heard of for over seven years and might, therefore, be presumed to be dead. He obtained a decree on this allegation. In a later suit to set aside that decree on grounds of fraud, evidence was given which satisfied the Court that he knew her to be alive and had himself seen her alive shortly before the suit was filed. The learned Judicial Commissioner held that whether or not a decree could be set aside on the ground that it was obtained by perjured evidence—a question which he considered did not arise—a false averment in the plaint was a fraud sufficient to enable a decree to be set aside. It is perhaps possible to distinguish that case on the ground that it was based on a definite averment in the plaint, whereas in this case the plaint has not been put in evidence and all that the appellant can allege is that from the nature of the suit the plaint must have contained averments which were false to the knowledge of the plaintiffs. That case is also distinguishable on the ground that the fraud found by the Subordinate Judge in the judgment under appeal was never alleged in the pleadings. No rule is more firmly established in cases of this nature than that the fraud alleged must be specifically pleaded in the plaint: Gunga Narain Gupta v. Tiluckram Chowdhry (9), Nanda Kumar Howlador v. Ram Jiban Howlador (4). If, however, it were necessary to do so, I should respectfully but strongly dissent from the view taken in the case just cited. It is difficult to draw any real distinction between a decree obtained by perjured evidence and a decree passed on false averments in the pleadings, since perjured evidence, which results in an erroneous decree being passed, is from the very nature of the case in the great majority of cases produced in support of false allegations in the pleadings. In every case the averments in the pleadings have to be solemnly verified by the parties, and in at least ninety-five per cent. of cases in which there are contested issues of fact, some at least of these averments on each side are alleged by the opposite party to be wilfully untrue. Several of the cases which are cited above are illustrations of this.

The English cases have been considered at length in the ruling in 38 Madras [Chinnayya v. Ramanna (1)] and I do not propose to review them here. Even if a different rule should ultimately prevail in England, this ought not, in my opinion, to affect the law in this country as now settled by the consensus of three High Courts. The circumstances of India are different in many respects from those of England and we have in this country a statutory rule of res judicata which would be to a large extent nullified by the adoption of the view of the law suggested by the appellant in this case. There is, as has been pointed out, no real contradiction between the rule of res judicata embodied in section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the rule that a judgment may be avoided on the ground of fraud, provided that the fraud in question is understood as meaning a fraud which prevents a party from putting his case before the Court—such fraud in fact as was set up by the appellant in paragraphs 6 to 10 of his plaint in this case. Where, owing to the fraud of a party, there has been no proper adjudication, the rule of res judicata cannot apply. Where, on the other hand, the parties have or had the opportunity of putting their respective cases fully before the Court and the Judge rightly or wrongly has decided that one set of alleged facts is true and another set false, the parties cannot go behind that decision by merely alleging fraud either in the averments in the pleadings or in the evidence produced.

It may be added that the learned Subordinate Judge appears to have arrived on inadequate grounds at the finding of fact on which the appellant relies. That finding rests on the evidence of the first plaintiff's brother Sundar Lal, who is, on the findings of the Subordinate Judge himself, a hardened and shameless liar. The Subordinate Judge believes this part of his statement mainly on two grounds:—

(1) that the surviving mortgagee did not go into the witness box, and

(2) that the defendants did not produce their accounts.

To this the appellant adds as additional grounds;—

(9) 15 C. 533 (P. C.); 15 I. A. 119; 12 Ind. Jur. 254; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 168; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 939.

(3) that the pro-notes in lieu of which the deed was executed had been mainly executed within one year, and

(4) that Mewa Lal had applied for attachment before judgment and had obtained an order for it two days after the mortgage was executed.

The plaintiffs tendered certain documents in proof of the last fact on the date on which the evidence commenced and the learned Subordinate Judge rejected them on the ground that they were produced late. I see no reason to interfere with the learned Subordinate Judge's discretion in this matter, but I am quite willing for the purposes of this appeal to accept the fact alleged as correct. The fact is not conclusive. It might form a motive for executing a false and fictitious deed; it might also constitute a reason why the respondents should wish to convert their pro-notes into a more solid form of security. It has been admitted by the plaintiff or his brother that they were carrying on very large contracts at this time and it is also admitted that they did borrow considerable sums of money on other occasions and that all these borrowings, except the one now in dispute, were genuine. The very witness relied on to prove the fictitious nature of the debt has admitted its genuineness on two occasions, namely, in partition proceedings and in insolvency proceedings. As to the defendant not going into the witness-box, I do not think that he or his advisers can reasonably have anticipated that the Court would attach any weight whatever to the evidence of Sundar Lal. As to the accounts not being produced they were never called for by the plaintiffs, nor did the plaintiffs put in any accounts on their own side. It is urged that the respondents have not proved affirmatively in this suit that the deed was binding on the plaintiff. It was not necessary for them to do so. This point is concluded by the decision in the mortgage suit to which the plaintiff was a party.

For the reasons already given I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

RAJMON MISSER—PLAINTIFF AND NANDAN PANDEY—DEFENDANT No. 1—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 99, O. XXIII, r. 3, O. XXXIV, r. 1—Compromise, fraudulent —Court, whether bound to recognise compromise—Mortgage—Redemption, suit for—Tenant holding under mortgagee, whether necessary party to suit—Misjoinder of parties, effect of—Irregularity.

Every interest created by a mortgagee sought to be redeemed puisne to his own is an interest which in a redemption suit should be represented before the Court in order to enable it effectively to give relief between the parties to the mortgage-deed. Thus a tenant introduced by the mortgagee upon the mortgaged land subsequent to his mortgage is a necessary party to a suit for redemption of the mortgage. Even if he is not a necessary party, the joinder of such tenant as a party to the suit would not be a sufficient cause for dismissal of the suit on the ground of misjoinder of parties: his joinder in the suit would amount merely to an irregularity not prejudicing the trial of the merits of the case, within the ambit of section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 107, col. 1.]

A Court is not bound to pass a decree in accordance with a compromise which is shown to be fraudulent. [p. 108, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Champaran, dated the 20th August 1917.

Mr. Jalgobind Prosad Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rajendra Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal comes before me from the decision of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Champaran, dated the 20th August 1917.

The plaintiff institutes this suit claiming to exercise his right of redemption of a sarpeshgi mortgage-bond, dated the 18th March 1882. The mortgage-bond was for a term of 38 years subject to the annual rent of Rs. 10 8-0. The defendant No. 1 was the original mortgagee and entered into possession of the mortgaged premises; and the defendant No. 2 claims to be a tenant on the mortgaged property. Defendant No. 1 does not contest this suit.

The action proceeded to trial upon the defence filed by defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 2 put forward two defences; One, that he was not a necessary party to the suit, and two, that the mortgaged property had been settled with him by the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title as tenant prior to the creation of the mortgage security dated the 18th March 1882.

The learned Munsif decided both these issues in favour of the respondent, and granted a decree for redemption coupled with a direction that on the payment of the mortgage money or the balance thereof due by the plaintiff, he should be entitled to khas possession of all the land which formed the subject-matter of the mortgage security discharged from the claim of defendant No. 2 in respect thereof.

From this decision defendant No. 2 appealed, and in appeal the Additional Subordinate Judge arrived at the conclusion that no settlement was ever in fact made with defendant No. 2 by the plaintiff or his predecessor-in-title prior to the date of the mortgage bond. The learned Subordinate Judge in my opinion gives very cogent reasons for concurring in the findings of fact arrived at by the learned Munsif.

In second appeal three objections have been urged against the validity and legal propriety of the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge.

It is contended, first of all, that the judgment of the learned lower Appellate Court is not a judgment in accordance with law.

I utterly fail to appreciate this contention, because, in my opinion, the learned Judge clearly shows by his judgment that he has carefully considered the material parts of the evidence dealing with the issue as to whether any letting had been created by the plaintiff or the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title with the defendant No. 2 prior to the date of the mortgage security.

The learned Judge, to my mind, satisfactorily shows that the defendant No 2 became tenant of the mortgaged premises subsequent to the date of the mortgage security and that the defendant No. 2 was then joint with the original mortgagee in mess and estate, and that collusively in the year 1898 the mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property got defendant No. 2 recorded as tenant in respect thereof for a period of 7 years. The subsequent Record of Rights only carries this collusive entry one step further. The learned Subordinate Judge rightly laid great stress upon the fact that the defendant No. 2 dare not pledge himself on oath to the defence which he pleaded in his written statement relative to the alleged creation of a letting made to him by the plaintiff prior to the 18th March 1882.

I see no reason for holding that the learned Additional Subordinate Judge's judgment is unsatisfactory in any sense whatsoever. In my opinion, being a judgment of affirmance, it satisfies all the requirements of the law.

Secondly, it is contended before me that defendant No. 2 was not a necessary party to the suit, and that, therefore, the suit is bad for a misjoinder of parties and that the plaintiff's claim should have been dismissed.

I gather from the judgments of the lower Courts that this point was not pressed or urged before either the Munsif or the Additional Subordinate Judge. Before me, however, the matter has been strenuously argued and the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of defendant No. 2 contends that even assuming that defendant No. 2 was a tenant on the lands, under and by virtue of a letting made to him by the mortgagees in possession subsequent to the date of the mortgage security, that nevertheless he is not a person having an interest in the mortgage security which would justify his being made a party under the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code. In addition it is asserted that where a tenancy is created by a mortgagee in possession in favour of a tenant on the mortgage property, such tenant is not a person having an interest in the mortgage security whom in a suit for redemption it would be necessary to add as a party.

Now it must be remembered that this suit is not a suit by way of ejectment; but a suit by a mortgagor claiming to redeem his property from the mortgage-debt which was created in this particular case on the 18th March 1882. As I understand the law, the foundation of the right of a mortgagor to redeem is that upon payment to the mortgagee of the debt due by the mortgagor, the mortgagor shall be then restored by way of redemption to the lands which he pledged as security for the mortgage-debt, free and unfettered from the creation of any rights by the mortgagee puisne to such mortgage, save such obligations and rights as a mortgagee by Statute may create.

No authority has been cited in support of the contention addressed to me on behalf of the appellants. But in Mr. Ghose's book on Mortgages, 4th Edition, at page 586, there is a passage which rather tends to support the view pressed by the respondents, viz., that all persons having an interest of any kind in the mortgage property sought to be redeemed are necessary parties in a redemption suit.

This certainly conforms with my own view of what the law is. In my opinion the case of Hood v. Easton (1) tends to show that every interest created by a mortgagee sought to be redeemed puisne to his own is an interest which in a redemption suit should be represented before the Court in order to effectively give relief in a redemption suit between the parties to the mortgage-deed.

But even if the addition of defendant No. 2 as a party to the suit was unnecessary, and in that sense there was a misjoinder of parties, it would merely mean that the provisions of section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code apply to the facts of this case.

Section 99 provides that: "No decree shall be reversed or substantially varied, nor shall any case be remanded in appeal on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action or any error, defect or irregularity in any proceedings in the suit, not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court."

In my opinion the provisions of that section of the Code apply with great force and effect to the facts of this particular case, because even if defendant No. 2 was not a necessary party, in my opinion his representation as a party in no way prejudiced the trial of the merits of the suit in so far as the suit has been decreed in favour of the plaintiff respondent.

These were the two issues arising for decision in this second appeal as originally presented to this Court.

Pending the hearing of the appeal, the plaintiff and the defendant No. 2 entered into the terms of a compromise embodied in a petition dated the 3rd of April 1919. By this petition of compromise the parties agreed that the plaintiff should recognise the defendant No. 2 as tenant of the premises originally offered as security by the mortgage deed of the 18th March 1882; and that defendant No. 2 should pay to the plaintiff the annual yearly rent of Rs. 10-8-0, being the rent recorded in respect thereof as being payable in the Record of Rights.

The date of this compromise is of vital importance, viz., the 3rd of April 1919.

It is contended before me that the parties to the suit having entered into a compromise that this Court is, by virtue of the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, bound to accept the compromise and to pronounce a decree in accordance therewith.

This case originally came before Mr. Justice Das and upon the defendant No. 2 applying to have a decree pronounced in accordance with the terms of the compromise one Baldeo appeared and protested, claiming that the original plaintiff to the suit had no right to enter into the compromise which he did with defendant No. 2, inasmuch as the plaintiff had in the month of August 1918 sold all his estate and interest in the properties in suit to one Ramphal Pandey.

Baldeo purchased from Ramphal Pandey on the 8th November 1918 his interest in the premises which he had purchased from the plaintiff, and the sale-deed between Ramphal Pandey and Baldeo was effected by a registered deed of conveyance; and consequently it was contended by Baldeo that the compromise between the original plaintiff in the suit and the defendant No. 2 was clearly fraudulent in its design, inasmuch as the plaintiff had no right, title or interest whatsoever in the property in respect of which he sought to confirm and ratify a letting already made to the defendant No. 2.

Baldeo applied to this Court for leave to be substituted as a party on the record.

Mr. Justice Das conceived that Baldeo had an interest, and a very vital interest in contesting the validity of the compromise dated the 3rd April 1919 and he permitted Baldeo to apply to the Registrar to be substituted as a party.

The learned Registrar declined to add Baldeo as a party, upon the ground that Baldeo had been guilty of laches in not proceeding at an earlier date to have himself substituted as a party upon the record.

From the order of the learned Registrar there was an appeal to a Division Bench of this Court, and my learned brothers Mr. Justice Roe and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad conceived that Baldeo was entitled to be added as a party and by their order dated the 15th April 1919 they so directed, although they admitted that he had been guilty of some remissness, but that under the circumstances they considered he was entitled to assume that the original plaintiff would bona fide conduct the litigation then pending in this Court in an honest, open and fair-handed manner, but now that Baldeo had discovered that the plaintiff was acting fraudulently in defeasance of Baldeo's legal rights, that, therefore, he was a proper party to be substituted on the record.

The question which I have to consider now is, whether the compromise of the 3rd April 1919 ought to be made a decree of this Court. Under the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of defendant No. 2 contends that his client dealt with the original plaintiff in the suit believing he had title; believing him to be an honest man, and that under the provisions of Order XLI, the rights which had accrued to him under the compromise ought not to be taken from him.

One might be inclined to attach some weight to that argument if it was founded upon any substratum of truth or fact; but it appears in this case that early in the present year a contest arose between Baldeo on the one hand and defendant No. 2 on the other, in which or out of which a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code was instituted, and in which proceeding Baldeo claimed possession of the land in suit as a purchaser from Ramphal Pandey, who was the purchaser from the plaintiff in the original suit, and the defendant was the opposite party in the proceeding under section 145. Therefore, I hold that defendant No. 2 had notice of Baldeo's prior title, and that he must be deemed to have known that on the 3rd April 1919, when the compromise was entered into between the original plaintiff on the one hand and himself on the other, that the original plaintiff in the suit had no right, title or interest whatsoever in himself whereby he could make or enter into a valid, lawful and binding contract creating a tenancy in respect of the lands in suit.

I hold that the compromise of the 3rd of April 1919 did not sanction or create a lawful and binding contract between the parties thereto. It was a contract designed and conceived in fraud; and it is not such a contract as this Court under the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, is bound to accept and pronounce a decree in the terms thereof. Accordingly I hold that the three contentions submitted to me on behalf of defendant No. 2 as appellant in this case are unsustainable in point of law and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Under the Hindu Law in order to constitute an antecedent debt binding on the sons, it is not necessary that the prior and the subsequent creditors should be different persons or that the father should be dead at the time the subsequent creditor claims his debt which the father incurred to satisfy the prior debt, but it is necessary that such debt should not have been secured by a mortgage of the joint family property and that the prior and the subsequent debts should not be contemporaneous in fact. Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 23rd March 1918.

Babu Ishwari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for Respondents Nos. 2 to 4.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff-appellant appeals from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur dismissing his claim as against defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 for the recovery of Rs. 11,000 odd by sale of the 4 annas share of the defendants in the village of Binoura. The suit was decreed against defendant No. 1. The claim was based on a mortgage-deed dated the 23rd March 1910, said to have been executed to secure a previous debt of Rs. 7,000, and on a deed of further charge dated the 31st May 1915, said to have been executed to secure a loan of Rs. 2,000 borrowed for the purpose of opening a cloth shop. Both deeds are alleged to have been executed by the defendant No. 1, against whom the suit was originally brought. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are the sons and defendant No. 4 the grandson of defendant No. 1 and they were impleaded on their own application, as they said that the property alleged to have been mortgaged was the joint ancestral property of defendant No 1 and themselves. Defendant No. 1 did not put in an appearance and the case was decided ex parte against him and he has not appealed. The lower Court dismissed the claim as against defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 inter alia on the following grounds:—

(a) that there was no proof that the Rs. 7,000 to secure which the first mortgege was executed were in fact due,

(b) that in any case the debt of Rs. 7,000 to secure which the first mortgage was executed could not be said to have been incurred for legal necessity,

(c) that the second mortgage was likewise not executed to secure a loan incurred for legal necessity,

(d) that although defendant No. 2 was proved to have attested the second mortgage-deed, the attestation did not prove his concurrence in the mortgage or estop him from impugning the mortgage,

(e) that, as regards the plea that the first mortgage for Rs. 7,000 was binding on the family on the ground that it was to secure an antecedent debt, the arrears due under the theka could not be held to be an antecedent debt because they had already been secured by a mortgage of the family property dated the 15th February 1907, Exhibit 4.

All these findings of the lower Court are called in question in appeal. There is little difficulty about the facts in this appeal, but the findings of law have been strenuously contested.

As to finding (a) it is urged in the first place by the appellant that the pleadings of the defendants-respondents did not put him to the necessity of proving the existence of the debt of Rs. 7,000 to secure which the first mortgage was executed, and that no issue was framed on this point. We are of the opinion that this contention must prevail. The respondents' Counsel, when asked where they had denied the existence of this debt, could only point to paragraph 2 (c) of the written statement of defendant No. 2 which was his reply to paragraph 2 of the plaint. Now paragraph 2 of the plaint only purported to set forth the particulars of the mortgage in the manner prescribed by form No. 45 of the pleadings in Appendix A of the Code of Civil Procedure. A denial of the amount of the mortgage in such a paragraph only amounted to a denial that the mortgage purported to be to secure a debt of Rs. 7,000 The denial cannot be construed to mean that the respondents put the appellant to proof of the existence, at the date of the execution of the mortgage, of the debt. That the mortgage purported to be to secure the sum mentioned is not now denied by the respondents. Alternatively the respondents urge that at the date of the filing of the written statement they were under no necessity of denying the existence of the consideration. They argue that the plaint is based on the allegation that the debt was incurred for family necessity and not on the allegation that the debt was an antecedent one. The plea based on the doctrine of antecedency, they say, was only raised by the appellant after the issues had been struck, apparently in argument after the recording of evidence. They, therefore, maintain that, although the plea that there was never any debt due of Rs. 7,000 had not been raised earlier, it could be raised by them as soon as the first mortgage was defended by the plaintiff-appellant on the ground of its being to secure an antecedent debt. In our opinion there is no force in this argument. If the defendants had pleaded that no debt existed which it was necessary to secure, this would have been a complete answer to the appellant's claim that the debt was incurred for family necessity. A debt that does not exist cannot be for family necessity. The respondents' failure, therefore, to put forward this plea in their written statement, in our opinion, justified the appellant in considering that he was not put to proof of the existence of the debt. Again, the respondents urge that the non existence of the debt was impliedly pleaded in paragraph 3 of the written statement of defendant No. 2 Now paragraph 3 merely states that the cause of action is not admitted. This cannot be construed to be a denial of the existence of the debt at the time of the execution of the mortgage. Lastly, it is urged that in the written statement of the respondents Nos. 3 and 4 the appellant was put to proof of the "validity" of the deed, and it is urged that this would involve his being put to the proof of the existence of this debt at the time of the execution of the mortgage. Having regard to the pleadings, however, it is clear that by putting the appellant to proof of the validity of the deed the respondents at that time really meant that they put him to proof that the deed was properly attested. We are unable to find either in the written statement of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 any specific denial, or denial by necessary implication, of the allegation that the debt of Rs. 7,000 existed at the time of execution of the first mortgage. Consequently under Order VIII, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code the allegation of the fact of this debt must be taken to have been admitted.

As to finding (b), we are of the opinion that the finding is correct. The debt is said to have consisted of arrears for three years due on a theka taken by the defendant No. 1 under a kabuliyat dated the 3rd December 1906, Exhibit 3. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the theka could not be said to have been executed for the family benefit or necessity and consequently no money due under it could be a debt incurred for family necessity. The rental under the theka was Rs. 6,000. The gross rental due in respect of the leased villages, half of which were cash-rented and half of which were grain-rented, was Rs. 6,028. The lower Court has rightly pointed out that it is seldom possible to realise the rental demand in full. Paragraph 4 of the kabuliyat, Exhibit 3, excludes from the income leased all miscellaneous dues. In the four years preceding the execution of the lease or kabuliyat the average amount realised in respect of the two villages was only Rs. 4,159 a year. The appellant, on whom (as will be subsequently shown) rested the burden of proving that the lease was taken for the family benefit, is thus unable to prove that the defendant No. 1 had any reasonable expectation of making any profit. What the defendant No. 1 may have expected is also to a certain extent to be judged by results. Looking at results we find from the mortgage, Exhibit 1, that in three years out of the four years for which the theka was taken, the arrears of theka money amounted to Rs. 8,290. It is urged by the appellant that the jamabandis for the years of theka have not been produced. Whether, however, the theka could be expected to be a profitable enterprise, would depend rather on the collections previous to the time it was taken than on the collections subsequent. In any case the appellant could himself have produced the jamabandis and he cannot, therefore, plead their non-production by the respondents. It was for the appellant to prove that the lease was for the benefit of the family. Again the fact that in the mortgage sued upon the appellant gave up his claim to a portion of the arrears cannot be pleaded by way of showing that the demand for theka money was less than that entered in the lease. The appellant at the time of executing the lease could not anticipate any remission. There is more force in the appellant's contention that the high amount of arrears actually incurred by him was partly due to 1922 Fasli being a year of frost, in which the rabi crop was spoilt and remission of rent was imposed. There is no proof, however, of this and, even if it were proved, it would not explain away the large loss incurred on the theka by defendant No. 1.

As to finding (c), the burden of proving that the second bond for Rs. 2,000 was to secure a loan for the family necessity was on the appellant. He has produced as a witness one Kirpa Dayal (P. W. No. 2) a clerk of the manager of his estate. This witness states that the money was borrowed to open a cloth shop and that the purpose of opening the cloth shop was represented to be the earning of profits wherewith to pay up the prior deed of Rs. 7,000 discussed above. It has not been proved that this admission was untrue, nor is it possible to say that it was untrue. Although, therefore, if the money had been borrowed merely to open a cloth shop, we might have been disposed to hold that it was a legitimate form of enterprise to increase the family income, it does not seem possible to discard the plaintiff's evidence that the shop was opened for the express purpose of earning money to pay up a previous bond executed to cover a debt not binding on the family. It scarcely appears necessary to go into the question whether the income of the family required supplementing. On this point we have divergent evidence. The appellant's witness No. 5, Gulzarilal, states that the family income was Rs. 600 or 700 a year, whereas defendant-respondent No. 2 states that the income of the family was between Rs. 1,000 and 1,200 a year and the average family expenditure only Rs. 30 or 40 a month. In either case, however, we should have been disposed to hold that the manager was entitled to open a cloth shop on behalf of the family if his experience justified him in anticipating this shop being a success. It appears that the shop was opened in May 1915 and was only closed when this litigation began in July 1917. The shop would, therefore, not appear to have been a failure. It follows, however, from the admission which I find binding on the appellant, that the shop was opened to defray a debt not due on the family, that the second mortgage was executed to procure funds for opening the shop, and that consequently this second mortgage cannot have been deemed to have been incurred to secure a loan necessary for the family.

As to finding (d), we are of the opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong. The defendant No. 2 himself in cross-examination had to admit that the shop was opened in his name and that he was fined by the Municipal Board for not giving information to that authority of its being opened. In examination-in-chief he admitted that he used to sit at the shop. There is, therefore, no reason to disbelieve the appellant's witness Kirpa Dayal (P. W. No. 2), when he says that not only was the deed executed with the knowledge and consent of defendant No. 2 but that he actually negotiated the transaction.

As to finding (e), this is the finding which the appellant has most strenuously contested. His Counsel admits that after execution of the lease by the defendant No. 1 but before it came into operation the defendant No. 1 executed a security bond (never acted upon), Exhibit 4, for Rs. 6,000 and agreed that this sum would be payable if in the course of the theka period the payment of any year's instalment fell into arrears. He, however, urges that this hypothecation would not prevent the appellant pleading that the arrears subsequently incurred were an antecedent debt and relies on a ruling of a Bench of this Court in Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (1). The learned Subordinate Judge held that the arrears could not be called an antecedent debt, inasmuch as it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) that the debt must be incurred irrespective of the credit obtained from immoveable assets which did not belong personally to the manager but were joint family property. In the case of the Bench of this Court it was held as follows:—

"What their Lordships seem to lay down is that an antecedent debt secured by a mortgage might be open to the same objection as a subsequent mortgage effected to pay the debt. They nowhere say that the personal obligation compromised in every simple mortgage cannot be separated from the mortgage-debt, and that.....the personal obligation to repay the money may not amount to an antecedent debt which the son may be under an obligation to pay if it was incurred for purposes neither illegal nor immoral." This ruling was followed by another Bench of this Court in First Civil Appeal No. 93 of 1917 decided on 14th April 1919 [Gur Sahai v. Girdhari Lal (3)], and in the judgment in that case it is stated that the principle laid down in Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (1) had been followed in a number of subsequent cases in this Court and that on the principle of stare decisis it appeared desirable to follow it unless and until it was pronounced erroneous by higher authority. One of us was a member of that Bench, but the respondents have asked us in this case to dissent from the ruling in Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (1). They further contend that that ruling may be distinguished on the ground that it applied to a case where the mortgage was executed to secure a debt incurred in favour of a person other than the mortgagee, whereas in this case the debt was incurred in favour of the mortgagee. A certain passage is relied on in the Privy Council case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) mentioned above for the proposition that the mortgagee cannot plead that a debt incurred in favour of himself and secured subsequently by a mortgage is an antecedent debt. It is further maintained by the respondents that the Privy Council ruling should also be interpreted to mean that no mortgage can be binding on the sons under the doctrine of antecedency, unless it is proved that the father who executed the mortgage is dead. Their Counsel admits that this contention was rejected by the Bench of this Court in the judgment already mentioned of the 14th April 1919, where it was held that the validity of the transaction on the ground of its being to secure an antecedent debt has to be determined quite apart from any question of pious obligation, but he asks us not to follow this finding. These arguments raise several distinct questions as to the interpretation of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) and these questions can only be decided by a consideration of their judgment as a whole. We attribute to the failure to read the judgment as a whole all difficulty in interpreting it and all dissension as to its meaning. Isolated passages have been quoted apart from their context and thereby the meaning of this judgment in its logical cohesion has been missed.

The case was one where a father hypothecated family property to secure a loan of Rs. 200 in cash. The mortgagee's interest was subsequently acquired by the plaintiff in the suit, that plaintiff having had nothing to do with the execution of the original mortgage. The plaintiff sued on the mortgage and the dismissal of the suit was upheld by the Privy Council, on the grounds that the loan by the father to secure which the mortgage was executed was not for necessary purposes or for the family benefit, that the loan could not be considered as an antecedent debt, and that the doctrine of pious obligation could not be invoked to sustain the mortgage. The judgment contains an exposition generally of the law applicable to cases where the validity of a transfer by the father alone is called in question by the sons. This exposition is arranged in five separate parts dealing successively with the general principle against alienation by one of several co-parceners, the effect on this main principle of a second principle that sons are bound to discharge non-immoral debts of their father, the exceptions to discharge antecedent debts, the law as to the burden of proof in such cases, and lastly the definition and test of a legally antecedent debt. Each of these five parts may be summarised as follows:—

1. A sale, gift or mortgage of the joint family property cannot be effected by one co parcener alone without the consent, express or implied, of the other co-parceners.

Explanation. The consent of the other co sharers is implied where the transfer is by the manager or head of the family for necessary purposes.

2. A transfer by a father, although originally invalid under the principles stated in paragraph 1, is given effect to against the sons on the death of the father, provided that the transfer was to discharge or secure a debt not for immoral purposes, owing to the pious obligation of the sons to discharge such a debt of their father.

3. To the principle stated in paragraph 1 there is an exception (which as an exception from a general and sound principle must not be extended and should be very carefully guarded), namely, a sale or mortgage made by a father to discharge or secure an antecedent debt is valid, even though the transfer was not for the benefit of the estate.

4. The necessity of protecting the right of third parties, who have taken their title for onerous consideration and in good faith, has given rise to much of the law on the subject of the antecedent debt and is at the bottom of the doctrine of onus, but the onus of proof is nevertheless not capable of a general and inflexible answer.

Illustration (a). The actual mortgagee with whom the transaction took place is setting up a charge in his favour made by the father of a minor with the alleged object of obtaining an advance for family needs or for the repayment of a precedent loan. He may be reasonably expected to allege and prove facts presumably better known to him than to the infant heir, such as facts embodying the representations made to him of the needs of the estate and the motives influencing his own advance.

Illustration (b). The sons are seeking to defeat an alienation made by their father to discharge or pay off an antecedent debt or an alienation effected by a Court in execution of a decree for the father's debt. It is for the sons to show that the debt was contracted for an immoral purpose and that the purchaser had notice of the fact, that is to say, legal notice if a private transferee and actual notice if an auction-purchaser, the latter not being required to make an inquiry beyond what appears on the face of the proceedings.

5 (i). An alienation for an antecedent debt means that the sale or charge has been made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate, that is to say, a father's debt will not be regarded as antecedent, unless incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immoveable assets which do not personally belong to him but are joint family property.

(ii). The doctrine of antecedency in time implies a long real dissociation in fact between the debt and the transfer, as otherwise the doctrine could be evaded.

It will be noted that we have treated that part of the judgment which deals with the main principle against alienation by a single co-parcener and the second principle arising from pious obligation as concluded before the question of the exception based on the doctrine of antecedency commences. That this is correct may be seen from their Lordships' sentence, "The whole of this part of the case is accordingly at an end." It will also be noted that we have treated the passage in the judgment beginning with the sentence, "They desire, in the first place, to make it clear that much if not all of the law upon this subject has arisen from the necessity of protecting the right of third persons," down to the words with reference to the pronouncement of Sir John Stanley, "In their Lordships' opinion this is a correct and useful statement of the law," as confined to an exposition of the law in respect of the burden of proof. It is to be regretted that this part of the judgment is not commenced by a new paragraph in the published reports. In our opinion not a single expression of their Lordships in this passage can be read as intended to apply to anything but the matter of the burden of proof, a matter considered in the light of English principles of equity and not of Hindu Law proper. It is equally clear that the rest of the judgment following on this exposition of the law as to the burden of proof deals solely with the doctrine of antecedency. It follows that the statement of their Lordships that in order to make the sons liable the father must have died, is made solely with reference to the question of pious obligation of the sons to pay their father's debts and is not made with reference to antecedent debts.

We, therefore, concur in the judgment referred to above of this Court dated the 14th April 1919 where it states, "In our opinion the Privy Council did not intend to lay down in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) that a conveyance in consideration of antecedent debts can in no case be enforced during the father's lifetime." It also follows that we cannot accept the suggestion that their Lordships' judgment is to be interpreted as meaning that a mortgagee can only take advantage of a prior debt when the debt was incurred in favour of some one else than himself. This suggestion is based on their Lordships' statement that "much of the law upon this subject has arisen from the necessity of protecting the right of third persons." This passage occurs in that portion of the judgment dealing only with the burden of proof and cannot be read into the portion of the judgment dealing with the doctrine of antecedent debts. The rejection of this suggestion involves our not accepting the contention of the respondents' Counsel that the case of Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (1) can be distinguished from the present case on the ground that in the present case the mortgagee was identical with the original creditor whereas this was not so in the case mentioned. No such suggestion or distinction, we hold, has been made by their Lordships of the Privy Council. They apply the test of dissociation in fact and time, and this implies that a transferee may plead that the transfer in his favour was to discharge a prior debt in his favour wholly dissociated in fact from the transfer. It has been argued, however, that the exception to the general principle against alienation by a single co-parcener made in favour of alienation to secure an antecedent debt must find its genesis either in the pious obligation of sons to discharge or secure their father's non immoral debts after his death or in the necessity of protecting third parties, purchasers of property for consideration and in good faith, which necessity their Lordships in the discussion in their judgment on the burden of proof have stated to be responsible for much of the law on this subject. In the former case it is urged that it would be natural to impose the condition that a debt shall not be regarded as antecedent until the father is dead, and in the latter case the condition that a person cannot defend a transfer in his favour, where it was to discharge or secure a debt in his own favour, however much dissociated in time and fact from the transfer. This argument may be permissible for suggesting what the law should be: it fails to show what the law is. Legal history contains numerous instances where the reason for a doctrine coming nto existence has been lost sight of during the course of its growth. Indeed conceding that the antecedent debt doctrine is an offshoot of the doctrine of the pious obligation of the sons to defray their father's debts, as appears unavoidable from the fact that the question of morality of the debt is a matter for consideration in the application of either doctrine, it is nevertheless clear from their Lordships' judgment that, while the fact of the debt being an immoral one is a complete defence by the sons against the invocation of the doctrine of pious obligation, in the case of an antecedent debt the sons have further to prove as against an alienee that the alienee had notice of the debt being an immoral one. (See the second line of page 444 in I. L. R. 39 Allahabad and the first passage quoted on page 446.) Hence it would appear that, under the impact of English equitable principles for the protection of third parties, the antecedent debt doctrine has developed on its own lines and independently of the doctrine of pious obligation. Had their Lordships felt justified on the materials before them in embodying these further restrictions in their definition of a legally antecedent debt, it may be presumed that they would have done so, anxious as they were not to extend the exception from a general and sound principle. In the case before them the father was still alive, but their Lordships did not invoke this fact for the purpose of rejecting the claim that the debt was an antecedent one, though they had already invoked it to defeat the plea of pious obligation.

It only remains for us now to deal with the contention that the personal obligation inherent in every simple mortgage may constitute an antecedent debt, although the simple mortgage is itself invalid because it was for the purpose of securing a debt contemporaneous with the mortgage. In support of this contention the decision of a Bench of this Court in Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (1) has been cited. This view, although followed on the principle of stare decisis by a Bench of this Court, on which one of us was sitting in the case decided on the 14th April 1919, does not seem consistent with the clear emphatic statement of their Lordships of the Privy Council set forth in paragraph 5 of the precis of their judgment given above. Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (1) was decided soon after the Privy Council ruling and apparently there were no decisions on the point by any other Court, and the view in question has since been rejected by the Allahabad High Court in Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad (4). We do not, therefore, feel bound in this case to follow the view adopted in Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (1).

We find then that the arrears of rent due under the lease are not prevented from being regarded as an antecedent debt binding on the sons by the fact that the creditor was himself the mortgagee, nor again by the fact that the father is still alive, but they are prevented from being so regarded by the fact that they were secured in advance, at least partially, by the security-bond of the 5th February 1907, Exhibit 4, which hypothecated the joint family property.

Accordingly we dismiss this appeal except so far as a personal decree is claimed against defendant No. 2, on the ground that he attested Exhibit 2 creating a further charge of Rs. 2,000 on the mortgaged property in Exhibit 1 with full knowledge of the contents of Exhibit 2. We allow this appeal so far as to give against defendant No. 2 (as well as against Hazari Lal), jointly and severally, a decree for Rs. 2,000 with compound interest at six per cent. per annum from the 31st May 1915 to the date when the decree is drawn up and simple interest at the same rate from that date to the date of realisation. The plaintiff appellant will get costs in all Courts on this part of his claim against defendant No. 2. The appeal otherwise is dismissed with costs to the defendants-respondents.

Appeal partly allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Revision—Material irregularity—Court taking erroneous view of law or omitting to decide question of fact.

Where a Court takes an erroneous view of the law, or omits to decide a question of fact, e. g., whether or not a balance was struck, it commits a material irregularity, and its decision is open to revision by the High Court. [p. 116, col. 1.]

Petition under section 41 of Act III of 1914, for revision of the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gurgaon, dated the 27th June 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Gurgaon, dated the 5th April 1918, decreeing plaintiff's claim.

Lala Shamair Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case instituted a suit against the defendants claiming to recover from them Rs. 400, being principal and interest due on a bahi account. The account is a very ancient one and had been commenced in Sambat 1919, the defendants having dealings with Bansi Dhar father of the plaintiff. This Bansi Dhar died in Sambat 1956 (1899 A. D.) and at that time the plaintiff is said to have been aged two and a half years. His mother, who acted as his guardian, appointed one Laiq Ram as manager of the business and it is said that in Sambat 1957 (1900 A. D.) the defendants struck a balance acknowledging the correctness of the account in the books. The suit was brought on the 1st October 1917 and was decreed by the trial Court. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge, however, dismissed the suit on appeal on the ground that the claim was barred by limitation. In coming to this decision the learned Subordinate Judge directed his mind solely to the correctness or otherwise of an allegation to the effect that between Sambat 1956 1957 the defendants had taken a buffaloe valued at Rs. 35 from the plaintiff's shop. He held that this particular transaction had not been proved and came to the conclusion that it had only been brought forward with a view to bringing the suit within time. The question as to whether any balance had been struck by the defendants in 1957 was completely lost sight of, and before me it has been contended by Mr. Shamair Chand on behalf of the plaintiff petitioner that if this balance be found to have been struck, then the suit must be regarded as within time. My attention was drawn to sections 19 and 6 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908; and it is urged that the striking of a balance or an acknowledgment within the purview of section 19 of the Act results in the commencement of a fresh period of limitation to be computed from the time when the acknowledgment was signed, and that inasmuch as in Sambat 1957 the plaintiff was a minor, section 6 of the Act was applicable and the time from which the period of limitation was to be computed was postponed to the date when the plaintiff became a major. It was, therefore, contended that the suit was within time, and my attention was drawn to Venkataramayyar v. Kothandaramayyar (1), Sarat Chandra Singh v. Sudhan Hari Mukerjea (2) and Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XIX, page 6, Mr. Sundar Das on behalf of the defendants-respondents admitted the contention but urged that there was really no proof of the striking of any balance by the defendants, and further that there was no proof that the debt was really due. It seems to me, however, that it is not for me sitting as a Court of Revision to go into the merits of the case. The learned Subordinate Judge has taken an erroneous view of the law and has acted with material irregularity in totally ignoring the alleged acknowledgment of Sambat 1957.

I, therefore, accept this petition and return the case to the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, who will hear the parties with regard to the striking of the balance and come to a decision whether or not as a matter of fact the balance was struck and whether the striking of such balance is sufficient to prove the case for the plaintiff. Costs will follow the event.

Revision accepted.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 15, Sch I, Arts. 181, 182 Execution of decree—Stay of execution, effect of—Subsequent application, nature of Time during which order remains in force, exclusion of—Oral application to proceed with sale, whether step-in-aid of execution.

Where an execution proceeding is stayed by an order of Court, a subsequent application for execution must be treated as virtually an application to continue the previous execution proceeding or to revive or carry through a pending execution suspended by no act or default of the decree-holder, and the limitation applicable to such an applicati n is that contained in Article 181 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 117, col. 2.]

Where an execution proceeding is stayed by an order of Court, the decree-holder is entitled under section 15 of the Limitation Act to exclude the period from the date on which the order is made up to the date on which it is cancelled [p 1 , col. 2.]

An application made by a decree-holder, whether orally or in writing, to the Court charged with the execution of his decree for the issue of a proclamation of sale is an application to take a step-in-aid of execution within clause (5) of Article 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and forms a fresh starting point of limitation. From the mere fact of payment of process-fees, however, an application to take a step-in-aid of execution cannot be inferred; there must be an actual application to the Court, oral or in writing, to proceed with the sale. JUDGMENT.

KANHAIYA LAL, A. J. C.—The question for consideration in this appeal is whether the application for execution made by the decree holder appellant is barred by time. The decree was for the sale of a certain house and was made absolute on the 26th August 1911. The first application for execution was made on the 11th July 1914 and asked for the realization of the decretal money by the sale of the mortgaged property. On that application a notice was issued to the judgment-debtors under Order XXI, rule 22, of the Code of Civil Procedure, requiring them to show cause why the decree should not be executed. The judgment-debtors did not appear and the Court granted time till the 29th August 1914 to the decree-holder to produce evidence about the market-value of the property sought to be sold. On the 2 th August 1914 the patwari was produced and examined. The judgment debtors were absent on that day but the general agent of the decree-holder was present. It was found that the property had no encumbrances. The decree-holder requested that the sale might be proceeded with (digridar ki istidua hai ke nilam jari kiya jawe). The Court ordered a sale proclamation to issue, fixing the 23rd October 1914 for the auction, and asked the decree-holder to deposit the necessary process-fee. On the same date the decree holder filed the process-fee. No sale could, however, be held on the 23rd October 19 4 because there was no bidder. A suit had meanwhile been filed by certain persons, claiming a title to the property sought to be sold and denying that the judgment-debtor had any interest therein which could be brought to sale; and in that suit they obtained an order for the stay of the sale, pending the decision of the suit. On the 25th October 1914, the date fixed for the receipt of the report of the sale officer, the parties were absent and in consideration of the fact that an order for the stay of the sale had been made in the suit above referred to, the execution case was struck off for default.

The suit, in which the order for stay was made, was decreed against the present decree-holder in accordance with a compromise, to which he was an assenting party, on the 4th January 1915: Musammat Chhoti, the only judgment-debtor who was a party to that suit, having been exempted. The present application for execution has been made on the 18th August 1917 and seeks for the sale of the mortgaged property. It is within three years from the date when the decree holder orally applied to the Court to proceed with the sale and filed the necessary process-fee to enable the Court to issue the proclamation of sale and also within three years from the date when the preceding application for execution was struck off after the sale was stayed.

The order staying the sale of the mortgaged property prevented the decree-holder from taking any further steps in that execution proceeding against the mortgaged property; and as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Qamar-ud-din Ahmad v. Jawahir Lal (1) and by this Court in Girdhari Lall v. Damodar Das (2), the present application for execution must be treated as virtually an application to continue the previous execution proceeding or to revive or carry through a pending execution, suspended by no act or default of the decree holder. Article 181 of the Indian Limitation Act applies to such an application and in that view of the matter, this application is within time.

The Court of first instance treated the declaratory decree above referred to, to which neither of the judgment-debtors was a party, as no impediment to the present application for execution. If that view be correct, the decree-holder is entitled under section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act to exclude the period from the 23rd October 1914, when the order staying the sale was made, to the date up to which it lasted. In that view too the present application for execution would be within time.

A third view, pressed on behalf of the decree-holder, is that the oral application made by the decree-holder on the 29th August 1914, asking the Court to proceed with the sale, saves limitation. On behalf of the judgment-debtor respondent, who is a subsequent mortgagee of the mortgaged property, it is suggested that the order of the Court of that date merely recites what the decree-holder had asked for in his original application for execution. But as no previous order contained any such recital as a preliminary to what was to be done, it is reasonable to presume that the general agent of the decree-holder, who was present, had made such a request and offered his readiness to pay the necessary process-fee to enable the proclamation of sale to be issued. In Ambica Pershad Singh v. Surdhari Lal (3) Garth, C. J., pointed out that notwithstanding the relief claimed in the application for execution, the proceedings for enforcing the sale have from time to time, as a matter of practice, always to be initiated by the decree-holder, who has to pay the necessary costs at each step in execution. An application made by him, whether orally or in writing, to the Court charged with the execution of his decree for the issue of a proclamation of sale is, therefore, an application to take some step in-aid of execution and forms a fresh starting point of limitation. The decisions in Chowdhry Paroosh Ram Das v. Kali Puddo Banerjee (4) and Vijiaraghavalu Naidu v. Srinivasalu Naidu (5) enforce the same view. In Maneklal Jagjivan v. Nasi Raddha (6) and Abdul Kadir Rowther v. Krishna Malamal Nair (7) it was held that an application to take a step-in-aid of execution need not be in writing.

The learned Counsel for the judgment debtor-respondent relies on the decision in Juggi Lal v. Ganga Prasad (8), which was followed in Manna Lal v. Sardar Singh (9). But in those cases there was no direct application, oral or in writing, to take a step-in-aid of execution. In the former case the agent of the decree-holder had asked the Court to issue a warrant of arrest at once instead of attempting to serve the judgment-debtor with a notice to show cause why he should not be arrested; in other words, the Court was requested to dispense with the issue of a notice preliminary to the arrest and the Court held that such a request did not amount to an application to take a step-in-aid of execution. In the latter case, all that was held was that the mere payment of process-fee by the decree-holder could not be treated as an application to take some step-in aid of execution, a view which the decisions in Malukchand Ratanchand v. Bechar Natha (10) and Sheo Prasad v Indar Bohadur Singh (11) also emphasise. The reason is obvious. From the mere fact of payment of the process-fee an application to take a step-in aid of execution cannot necessarily be inferred: at most it may amount to an application to receive the money and the payment by itself might mean nothing more than the performance of a condition essential to the order for execution. Here there was something more than a mere tender of the process-fee. It was preceded by an application made orally to the Court to proceed with the sale, and that application saves time.

The question of the saleability of the mortgaged property as affected by the declaratory decree obtained by Bhagwan Din and others against the present decree-holder has not, however, been decided by the lower Appellate Court. The order for stay has merged in the decree. The judgment-debtor-respondent is a subsequent mortgagee and the property sought to be sold is still the same.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the execution case sent back to the Court below with a direction to re-admit the execution appeal under its original number and to dispose of it, after determining the remaining points involved in the appeal in the manner required by law. In view of the circumstances of the case the parties will bear their own costs of this appeal.

DANIELS, A. J. C.—I concur in the order proposed by my learned colleague, on the ground that if the property is otherwise liable to sale—a point which still remains to be determined—limitation is saved by section 15 of the Limitation Act. This was a point not taken by the appellant in his memorandum of appeal but was apparent on an examination of the record. The appeal is not, in my opinion, sustainable on the ground urged by the appellant. That ground was that certain proceedings which took place on 29th August 1914 constituted an application in accordance with law to the Court to take some step-in aid of execution within the meaning of Article 182 (5) of the Limitation Act. The execution application which is now in question was presented on 18th August 1917. The last previous application was made on 11th July 1914, more than three years earlier. If, however, the proceedings of 29th August 1914, give a new starting point for limitation, the present application is within time. The plea pressed by the appellant is that an oral application to the Court to issue a sale proclamation is within the term of Article 182 (5). There is authority for this contention in Ambica Pershad Singh v. Surdhari Lal (3). A reference to the order-sheet of the case does not, however, in my opinion, show that any such oral application was presented. On 11th July 1914 the decree-holder applied that notice under Order XXI, rule 22, might be sent to the judgment-debtor, more than one year having elapsed since the date of the decree, and further asked that after issue of notice the decretal amount might be realised by sale of the mortgaged property. Notice was issued and was duly served, but on the date fixed, the 29th August 1914, the judgment-debtor did not appear. The order sheet of that date recites the fact that the decree-holder's agent was present and that the judgment-debtor was absent, and then proceeds: "The prayer of the decree-holder is that sale may be proceeded with," and an order was thereupon passed that sale proclamation should be issued and that the decree-holder should pay the necessary process-fee. The words relied on, digridar ki istidua hai ke nilam jari ho, merely, in my opinion, refer back to the prayer contained in the petition of 11th July that after notice to the judgment-debtor sale proceedings should be taken, and do not indicate that any fresh application was made on 29th August. It is well settled by the rulings of this Court in Juggi Lal v. Ganga Prasad (8) and Malukchand Ratanchand v. Bechar Natha (10) that the mere deposit of process-fees is not enough to give a fresh starting point for limitation under Article 182 (5).

The point raised by my learned colleague at the hearing of the appeal results in a very curious circumstance. But for the order staying the sale the present application would, in my opinion, be undoubtedly beyond limitation. The proceedings in which that order was passed resulted in a decree declaring the property not liable to sale. The decree holder now seeks to sell the property in spite of that decree. The respondent Ram Bhajan Lal is apparently a subsequent mortgagee from Musammat Chhoti, the mother and heir of the original judgment-debtor Hardwari Lal, or her husband. I express, however, no opinion on this question at present, as it has not yet been gone into by the lower Court.

Appeal allowed.

PATNA HIGH COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 156 OF 1918.
June 23, 1919.
Present:—Mr. Justice Das.
Thakur RUDRESHWARI PRASAD SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
DHANA MAHTO AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 74—Landlord and tenant—Abwab, meaning of—Rent, what is—Construction of document—Appeal, second, whether maintainable.

A question of the construction of a document, if it is a document of title and not merely a piece of evidence in the case, is a question of law, and the High Court will interfere in second appeal where the lower Appellate Court has misconstrued the document or has made no attempt to construe it. [p. 120, col. 2.]

The defendant executed a kabuliyat in favour of the plaintiff covenanting to pay Rs. 167-7-5 as mal jama, the amount being made up as follows:—Mal jama Rs. 156-9-0; dasahra salami Re. 1, dasahra patta, Rs 3, price of ghee Re. 1; price of dahi, Re. 1; tahrir of patwari Rs 4-14-5; total Rs. 167-7-5. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that Rs. 156-9-0 formed the rent, and that all the other items were illegal impositions not forming part of the rent:

Held, that, on a proper construction of the document, it was clear that the consideration for the use and occupation of the land was a certain amount of rent in cash and the price of certain other articles, and that the total of these items was to constitute one whole rent or jama which was payable by the defendant, and that there being no indication whatever that the price of the articles mentioned was in any case intended to be an imposition independent of the rent of the land which the defendant was leasing from the landlord, the amount claimed must be held to be part of the total rent payable for the land. [p. 121, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Bhagalpur.

Mr Purnendu Narayan Sinha, for the Appellant,

RUDRESHWARI PRASAD SINGH v. DHANA MAHTO.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Ghosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit by the appellant for the recovery of arrears of rent for the years 1322 and 1323 F. S., and for four-annas kist of 1321 F. S., and the only question which I have to determine is whether certain items called Hak Patwari, Salami, etc., should be disallowed as illegal cesses or Abwabs. The lower Appellate Court is of opinion that they are not part of the rent but are illegal impositions by the landlord and has accordingly disallowed those items. The whole judgment of the lower Appellate Court consists of two sentences and is as follows:—"It is difficult to define exactly when items like these are really part of the rent and in the present case I am not inclined to hold so. I prefer to follow the Record of Rights, and do not agree with the Munsif holding it to be incorrect." Why the learned District Judge does not agree with the learned Munsif he does not say, but apparently he relies on the Record of Rights because the subject of investigation is difficult and somewhat tedious. It is greatly to be regretted that a judgment of reversal, such as the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is, should be so perfunctory in its character, and I am not prepared to accept this judgment as a judgment in accordance with law. Under ordinary circumstances I would have felt compelled to return the records to the lower Appellate Court in order to enable it to write out a proper judgment, but as the question involved in the appeal is a question of law and depends on the construction of a single document, I have thought it unnecessary to remand the case to the lower Appellate Court.

A preliminary question arises whether the finding of the lower Appellate Court is a finding of fact and, therefore, binding on this Court. "The question whether any particular item is, or is not, an Abwab, must depend upon the construction of the contract of lease in each case, and the question in each case is whether the sum claimed in each case is really part of the rent agreed upon to be paid as consideration for the lease;" Upendra Lal Gupta v. Ataulla (1). In this case there is a written contract of lease between the parties, and the rights and liabilities of the parties must depend on the construction of the document which constitutes the contract between the parties. It is well settled that a question of construction of a document, if it is a document of title and not merely a piece of evidence in the case, is a question of law, and the High Court will interfere in second appeal if the lower Appellate Court has misconstrued such a document. In this case, of course, the lower Appellate Court has not attempted to construe the document. It thought that it was a matter of some difficulty and, therefore, it threw the whole responsibility on the Revenue authorities. In my opinion, this is clearly a case entertainable by the High Court in second appeal.

As I have said before, the tenancy in this case commenced with a document dated the 15th Aghan 1310. This is a Kabuliyat executed by the respondents in favour of the appellant. By this document the tenants covenanted to pay mal jama, amounting to Rs. 167 7-5, annually together with Zemindari rasum year after year as per details given. The details are as follows:—Mal Jama, Rs. 156-9-9. Dasahra Salami, Re. 1. Dasahra Patta, 3 heads, price Rs. 3. Price of Ghee for Shami Puja, 1½ seer, Re. 1. Price of Dahi for Dasahra, Re. 1. Tehrir of Patwari, Rs. 4-14 5. It will be noticed that if all the items are added up, the total comes up to Rs. 167-7-5 which is described as the mal jama and which the tenants covenanted to pay "as per instalment year by year."

It is argued on behalf of the appellant that the document shows that the sums claimed are really part of the rent agreed to be paid as consideration for the lease and, therefore, no portion of it should have been disallowed by the lower Appellate Court. The respondent, however, argues that the details show clearly that Rs. 156-9-0 is the rent, and that all the other items are illegal impositions not forming part of the rent but forming part of the "Zemindari rasum" and that they were rightly disallowed by the lower Appellate Court.

The question was debated in the case of Kalanand Singh v. Eastern Mortgage Agency

(1) 36 Ind. Cas. 404; 21 C. W. N. 108.

Company, Ltd. (2). In that case the lease provided that the lessee shall pay to the lessor year by year a fixed sum of Rs. 4,310, of which the sum of Rs. 4,300 was described as jama, Rs. 5 as Salami Touzi and Rs. 5 as "Tehwari Dasahra." It was argued on behalf of the lessee that the imposition of Salami Touzi and Tehwari Dasahra was illegal and could not be recovered by the lessor. The learned Judges in the course of their judgment said: "Now, no doubt, if the lease had provided for an annual payment of only Rs. 4,300 and the landlord had at some subsequent date demanded from his tenant a further sum or sums by way of Salami and Tehwari, such additional demands, even if for sometime acquiesced in, would still be regarded as Abwabs or illegal cesses not recoverable in law. But where (as in the present case) the payment of these specific sums is provided for and agreed upon in the lease creating the tenancy, the stipulation for such payment is not, in our opinion, a stipulation or reservation for the payment of arbitrary and indefinite cesses but in the language of section 3 of Regulation V of 1812 is 'a definite clause in the engagement contracted between the parties,' which should be 'maintained and given effect to.'" The learned Judges proceeded to say: "In fact the two sums now in question, though not described in the lease as rent, are in reality part of the consideration for which the tenancy was created and part of the rent agreed to be paid." In the case of Radha Charan Ray Chowdhry v. Golak Chandra Ghose (3) Maclean, C.J., said that "a fixed sum mentioned in a lease as payable annually for collection charges, in addition to rent, the total being described as the jama and forming the consideration for the lease, is not to be regarded as an Abwab, but is in reality a part of the rent and recoverable as such."

The two cases above cited were considered and followed in this Court by Mullick and Atkinson JJ., in the case of Sadanand Tewari v. Deb Nath Manjhi (4). The learned Judges laid down that where upon the contract entered into by the defendants it was clear that the consideration for the use and occupation of the land was a certain amount of rent in cash and the price of certain quantities of paddy or ghee or both, as the case might be, and that the total of these two items was to constitute one whole rent or jama which was payable by the defendants, and there was no indication whatever that the price of paddy and ghee was in any case intended to be an imposition independent of the rent of the land which the defendant was leasing from the landlord, the amounts claimed for ghee and paddy must be held to be part of the total rent payable for the land and the objection on the ground that the Zemindar was claiming as Abwab would not be tenable.

I entertain no doubt whatever that, if the test laid down in these cases be the correct test for ascertaining whether particular items claimed as rent are or are not Abwabs, the items in the case before me which are objected to by the tenants must be held to be part of the rent agreed to be paid by the tenants to the Zemindar and must accordingly be allowed. As I read the agreement between the parties, the items in respect of Dasahra Salami, Dasahra Patta, price of ghee and price of Dahi are in substitution of a portion of rent and not in addition thereto. The total rent agreed to be paid by the tenants is clearly and definitely stated to be Rs. 167-7-5, and, in my opinion, it does not matter that he takes Rs. 10-14-6 out of the total rent, and not in addition thereto, under other heads, the charges being definite and certain in their nature and forming part of the consideration for the lease.

But it has been argued on behalf of the respondents that those cases were wrongly decided and that the learned Judges who heard those cases did not pay sufficient attention to two Full Bench decisions of the Calcutta High Court and a decision of the Judicial Committee in appeal from one of the Full Bench decisions. The learned Vakil insists that if the principle laid down in those cases be adopted, I am bound to hold that the items claimed in this appeal are illegal impositions and cannot be allowed. Having regard to the confident manner in which the case has been argued by the learned Vakil on behalf of the respondents,

(2) 19 Ind. Cas. 701; 18 C. L. J. 83.
(3) 31 C. 834; 8 C. W. N. 529.
(4) 37 Ind. Cas. 980; (1917) Pat. 287; 3 P. L. W. 270.

I have thought it necessary to deal with these cases very shortly in order to show that they were decided on their own facts and do not support the contention of the respondents.

The first case relied upon by the respondent is that of Chultan Mahton v. Tilukdari Singh (5). In that case the plaintiff himself claimed the disputed items as Abwabs, but he insisted that he was entitled to them as they were "old usual Abwabs" and had been paid by the tenants for many years. In other words, he admitted that the items claimed by him were Abwabs, but he relied upon custom as sanctioning his demand. It was admitted in the case that the contract of tenancy did not provide for the payment of these disputed items and that these Abwabs were not consolidated with the assal rent, the only question before the Full Bench being whether, assuming that the Abwabs in question had by the custom of the estate of which the lands formed part, been paid by the defendant and his ancestors for a good many years, they were legally recoverable by the plaintiffs although they were not actually proved to have been paid or payable before the time of the Permanent Settlement. And the Full Bench had no difficulty in answering the question in the negative. It will be noticed that Sir Richard Garth presided over the Full Bench and, in the course of his judgment, said as follows:—"They are called Abwabs by the plaintiff himself, and they are Abwabs, as it seems to me, to all intents and purposes, and I consider that the Regulation VIII of 1793, as well as the Rent Law of 1859, intended to put an end to the Abwab system, and to render them illegal." The same learned Chief Justice in the case of Mahommed Fayez Chowdhry v. Jamoo Gazee (6) laid down that "a condition in a lease that a tenant will pay to the landlord collection charges can be enforced, if the condition is definite and certain in its nature and forms part of the consideration for the lease." I cannot think that the late Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court intended, in the Full Bench case, to go back on his opinion expressed three years previously and to hold that even if the conditions for payment were definite and certain in their nature and formed part of the consideration for the lease, they could not be insisted upon in a suit between the landlord and the tenant if they were not called rent by the landlord. The decision of the Full Bench was affirmed by the Judicial Committee in the case of Tilukhdari Singh v. Chulhan Mahton (7). Some of the Judges in a subsequent Full Bench case thought that the Judicial Committee went further than the Full Bench, but I cannot agree that it did. The Judicial Committee said: "If they were payable at the time of the Permanent Settlement, they ought to have been consolidated with the rent under section 54 of Regulation VIII of 1793. Not being so consolidated, they cannot now be recovered under section 61 of that Regulation. If they were not payable at the time of the Permanent Settlement, they would come under the description of new Abwabs in section 55." It seems to me that the decision of the Judicial Committee is an authority only for the proposition that if there are impositions on the tenant subsequent to the contract of tenancy, they cannot be enforced because it is impossible to say that they form part of the consideration for the lease.

The next case relied upon by the respondent is that of Radha Prosad Singh v. Bal Kowar Koeri (8). In that case the plaintiff alleged that the yearly rent of the tenant was Rs. 22-2-0. The defence was that the yearly rent was Rs. 18-10-6 and that the difference was made up of illegal cesses which were not recoverable. The lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that the yearly rent was Rs. 18-10-6, although for years the tenant had paid Rs. 22-2-0 as rent. In coming to this conclusion the lower Appellate Court relied upon the jamabandi of 1286, which showed that the rent in 1286 was Rs. 18-10-6 and that the difference was made up of various impositions and charges. So far as facts are concerned it was established, therefore, that the original consideration for the letting was Rs. 18-10-6 and that the difference was made up of cesses which must have been subsequently imposed by the landlord. Ghose, J., in the course of his judgment said: "There is nothing to show that these items ever formed any part of the consideration for which the land was leased to the defendant; for if they did, they would, I think, be really rent, though described in the Zemindari papers under other denominations. They were apparently Abwabs imposed subsequent to the rent being fixed at Rs. 18-10-6; and it is not proved that the ryot at any time agreed to pay an enhanced rent including the said items as part of the rent." It is difficult to see how the actual decision of the Full Bench is or can be any authority in favour of the respondents' contention, though it must be freely admitted that certain observations of O'Kinealy, J., went further than the actual decision of the case demanded.

All the cases relied upon by the respondents were fully considered by the learned Judges in the case of Kalanand Singh v. Eastern Mortgage Agency Co., Ltd. (2). With reference to these cases, the learned Judges said as follows:—"In these cases there were no written engagements and the sums claimed represented impositions or demands made upon the ryot defendants at various times subsequently to the creation of their tenancies and settlement of their rents. It was, therefore, held, and no doubt properly held, that though in accordance with practice or custom the tenants had paid these impositions for a long period, yet by virtue of the provisions of sections 54, 55 and 61 of Regulation VIII of 1793, they were not legally recoverable." In my opinion the cases relied upon by the respondent do not support the broad contention advanced by him and I entertain no doubt whatever that every item is recoverable as rent if it did form part of the consideration for the letting, though it might not have been described in the lease as rent. If that test is applied in this case, then, in my opinion, all the items are recoverable as rent, as I have no doubt that the rent agreed to be paid by the tenant is Rs. 167-7-5 annually.

It was next contended by the learned Vakil on behalf of the respondent that, in any event, the item of Rs. 3 for Dasahra Patta (goats for Dasahra festival) must be disallowed, as goats can never stand for rent, and he relied on the case of Gayratulla Sardar v. Girish Chandra Bhaumik (9). It is true that that case supports the contention of the respondent, but, as no reasons are given for that decision, I cannot see on what principle that case was decided. The true test is to see, not whether any particular item is or can be rent, but whether it is in substitution of any portion of rent. If I were to disallow this item, the total rent payable by the defendant would be Rs. 164-7-5, although he agreed to pay Rs. 167-7-5 as rent. If Salami Touzi, Tehwari Dasahra and collection charges may be said to form part of rent, I cannot see on what principle it can be said that an item for Dasahra Patta is not recoverable as rent. Certainly the definition of rent in the Bengal Tenancy Act does not support the contention of the respondent. Having given the subject my most anxious consideration, I have come to the conclusion that the appellant is entitled to recover every item which the respondent agreed to pay or deliver to the appellant by his Kabuliyat, dated the 15th Aghan 1310. I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the jndgment and decree of the Court of first instance. The appellant must have his costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

PATESHWAR v. AJODHIA.

Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 3—Guardian ad litem, appointment of—Provisions, whether applicable to partition proceedings.

Where in imperfect partition proceedings under the U P Land Revenue Act a minor is represented by a guardian and no question of title is raised on his behalf, it is not open to him to challenge those proceedings subsequently by suit.

The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code regarding the appointment of a guardian ad litem for a minor defendant do not apply to partition proceedings under the U. P. Land Revenue Act.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 24th May 1917, confirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 2nd April 1917.

Mr. Ram Bharose Lal, holding brief of Mr. Aditya Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. N. Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to a number of villages which belonged to Dharamraj. Dharamraj had by one wife a son named Pateshwar and by another wife two sons named Ajudhia and Biddam. On the death of Dharamraj mutation of names was effected in favour of these sons. On the death of Biddam a question arose as to who should get his share. He had left a widow Musammat Gujrati. The Revenue Court allowed mutation of names to be effected in favour of Pateshwar and Ajudhia in equal shares. In the present suit Ajudhia claims to recover a half share out of the property of Biddam, alleging that mutation of names was improperly allowed in respect of that half share in favour of Pateshwar. In other words, he claims the entire property of Biddam, alleging that he was his full brother and lived jointly with him. He also claims mesne profits. The Courts below decreed the claim for possession but disallowed the claim for mesne profits, holding that no proof was given in regard to the latter.

The only points raised for consideration in this appeal are whether the plaintiff had any right to sue in face of the fact that the widow of Biddam was alive, and secondly, whether the claim of the plaintiff in regard to the villages Pipra Buzurg and Parsa Udekar was barred by section 2[illegible]3, clause (k) of the U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 190).

In regard to the first matter, it appears that Pateshwar admitted that Ajudhia was living jointly with Biddam. Pateshwar himself was found to have separated from him in his lifetime. Ajudhia and Biddam having been joint, Gujrati could only claim maintenance.

In regard to the second point, the partition proceedings of the villages in question show that by virtue of an imperfect partition, separate pattis were formed and the land allotted to the share of Pateshwar was separated from that allotted to the share of Ajudhia. No question of title was then raised on behalf of Ajudhia by his certificated guardian. There is nothing to show that the Code of Civil Procedure was applicable to the partition proceeding. The U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901) expressly mentions the portion of the Code of Civil Procedure which applies to proceedings under that Act.

The procedure regarding the appointment of the guardian ad litem provided by the Code of Civil Procedure is not one of them. The minor was properly represented by his mother and certificated guardian. The decisions in Har Charan Singh v. Har Shankar Singh (1) and Aisha Begam v. Abdullah Khan (2) are hardly applicable in view of the provisions of section 106 of the present U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), which lays down that the procedure prescribed for imperfect and perfect partitions shall be the same except where it is otherwise expressly declared. It is not open to the plaintiff, therefore, to go behind the partition proceeding

The appeal is allowed in so far that the claim of the plaintiff in regard to the disputed share in the villages Pipra Buzurg and Parsa Udekar, forming items Nos. 1, 4, 5 and 6 of List A appended to the plaint, shall be dismissed. In other respects the decree of the Court below will be confirmed. The parties will bear their own costs of this appeal.

Appeal partly allowed.

The landlord of a holding sued the recorded tenants thereof for rent and obtained an ex parte decree in execution of which he brought the holding to sale, the purchaser being defendant No 1 in whose favour the sale was confirmed. The plaintiffs instituted the present suit to set aside the sale, claiming to be private purchasers of a portion of the holding and alleging that defendant No. 2 was a private purchaser of the remainder. The trial Court decided all the material issues in favour of the plaintiff but dismissed the suit on the ground that it was not maintainable because the plaintiff had not applied under Order XXI, rule 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure to set aside the sale. The plaintiff appealed and the lower Appellate Court, disagreeing on the point of maintainability, set aside the whole decree and remanded the suit for trial, adding two new issues. The trial Court found that defendant No. 1 was benamidar for defendant No. 2 and decreed the suit, which decree was upheld on appeal. The defendant No. 1 appealed to the High Court and contended that the suit was not maintainable under Order XXI, rule 92 of the Code, and that the order of remand was not an order under Order XLI, rule 23, because the suit was not disposed of on a preliminary point, the trial Court having determined and recorded findings upon all the issues in the suit:

Held, that as the sole reason for dismissing the suit was that it was not maintainable, the suit was disposed of on a preliminary point and the fact that the Court decided the other issues in the suit made no difference, and that the defendant not having appealed from the order remanding the case, that order was now final. [p 2', col 2.]

It was also contended that the suit was barred by limitation under Article 2 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act, there being an admission in the plaint that the plaintiff came to know of the sale more than a year before instituting the suit:

Held, that as this plea was not taken in either of the Courts below and as the determination of the point required a finding of fact after taking additional evidence, it could not be entertained in second appeal. [p. 127, col. 1.]

It was urged on behalf of the respondent that the sale was a nullity, inasmuch as after the decree one of the two judgment-debtors had died, and the sale was held without the issue of any process to his heirs:

Held, that as the point was not taken at any stage of the suit and no opportunity had been given of showing that the surviving judgment-debtor was entitled to represent the heirs of the deceased, it was impossible, upon the facts as found, to say that the sale was a nullity. [p. 128, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Purneah.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—This is a litigation which has lasted six years. It appears that on the 25th September 1913 the plaintiffs brought a suit against three sets of defendants to set aside the sale of a non-transferable occupancy holding held by the defendants second party, namely, defendants Nos. 3 and 4.

The facts appear to be that defendant third party, Mr. Forbes, who is the landlord of the holding, brought a suit against the recorded tenants defendants Nos. 3 and 4 for rent, obtained an ex parte decree, and in execution brought the holding to sale. The purchaser at the auction was defendant No. 1 Bhadai. The sale was confirmed in November 1910.

The plaintiffs claim to be private purchasers of about four acres out of the holding and allege that the defendant No. 2 is a private purchaser of the rest of the holding.

They attacked the sale on the ground that there was fraud between the decree-holder and the defendant No. 2 in the matter of the suit, the decree and the sale. The Munsif who tried the suit in the first instance decided all the material issues in favour of the plaintiffs, but he came to the conclusion that the suit was not maintainable because the plaintiffs had not made an application under Order XXI, rule 90 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside the sale, and that they could not be permitted to institute a separate suit for that purpose after confirmation.

The plaintiffs thereupon appealed, and the Subordinate Judge, disagreeing with the finding of the Munsif upon the point of maintainability, set aside the whole decree and remanded the suit for trial. At the same time he added two new issues, which ran as follows:—

(1) Whether the defendant No. 1 is a benamidar of the defendant No. 2: if not whether he is privy to the fraud by which the sale was brought about? and

(2) On what terms the sale should be set aside, if it be set aside at all?

The case then went back to the Munsif, who came to the conclusion that the defendant No. 1 was in fact the benamidar of the defendant No. 2. He held that in consequence of this finding it was not necessary to consider whether the defendant No. 1 was privy to the fraud by which the sale was brought about. The Munsif in the result decreed the suit against the defendants.

There was again an appeal and the Subordinate Judge affirmed the finding of the Munsif on the point of benami and dismissed the appeal.

The defendant No. 1 now comes on second appeal to us. The first point taken by the learned Vakil for the appellant is that under Order XXI, rule 92, of the Civil Procedure Code, no suit is maintainable after confirmation.

Now this point would perhaps have been a good point if the previous proceedings in this suit had not stood in the way of the appellant.

It appears that the order of remand made by the Subordinate Judge on the 28th April 1915 was made under Order XLI, rule 23, and also under rule 25 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is said that the order could not have been an order under rule 23, because the suit was not disposed of upon a preliminary point and because the Munsif had in fact determined and recorded findings upon all the issues in the suit.

In my opinion this argument is not well founded. The findings upon all the other issues except the issue as to maintainability were in favour of the plaintiffs, and the sole reason for dismissing the suit was that in the opinion of the Court the suit was not maintainable by reason of the provisions of Order XXI, rule 92.

It is quite clear in these circumstances that the suit was disposed of upon a preliminary point. The contention that a Court cannot be said to dispose of a suit upon a preliminary point if it takes the trouble to decide the other issues framed in the suit, cannot be entertained. Then it is said that inasmuch as there was an order framing two new issues and remanding the suit for trial of those issues, there was an order under rule 25, and the addition of such an order makes the whole order of remand one under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. The argument is that as it is not an order wholly and exclusively under rule 23 or rule 25 and is a composite order under the provisions of both rules, it must be an order made under the inherent powers of the Court. This argument too is one with which I have no sympathy. There is no reason why there cannot at one and the same time be an order under rules 23 and 25. The two orders, although made upon the same piece of paper, are in effect quite separate, and the party affected is competent to pursue the remedy by way of appeal provided by the Code in respect of each.

With regard to the order under rule 23, it is open to him either to appeal against the whole decree or to appeal against the order of remand only under Order XLIII.

With regard to the order under rule 25, he has no right of appeal against the order itself but he can attack the remand in second appeal against the final decree in the case: so that I see no difficulty in regarding the order of the Subordinate Judge in this case, so far as the preliminary point is concerned, as an order under rule 23.

Now it was open to the defendants to appeal against that order, or against the decree. They did neither. They might also, if they had succeeded in defeating the plaintiffs upon the preliminary point, have got the Court to set aside the order so far as it related to the trial of the two additional issues: but that is not the immediate point before us. The point immediately before us is whether the omission to appeal against the decision upon the preliminary point now renders the defendants incompetent to attack the decision of the Subordinate Judge regarding that point in second appeal. In my opinion clearly it does. The decision of the Subordinate Judge, therefore, holding that a suit was maintainable is, in my opinion, now final.

The next point raised by the learned Vakil is that the suit is barred by limitation,

It is pointed out that in the plaint there is an admission by the plaintiffs that they came to know of the sale more than a year before the suit was actually instituted.

Therefore, it is said that under Article 12 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act the suit is barred by time.

Now the difficulty in the way of the defendants on this point is, that the plea as to limitation was never taken in this form either in the Court of the Munsif or in the Court of the two Subordinate Judges who have dealt with the case. It is now taken for the first time in second appeal.

Now our rule is that if a point of law requires a finding of fact for its determination, we cannot allow it to be entertained in second appeal in this Court.

The admission relied upon in the plaint has to be construed and is always subject to be rebutted by evidence in the suit itself. There is no finding on any evidence adduced at the trial which would go to show affirmatively that all the plaintiffs did come to know of the sale more than twelve months before the institution of the suit.

I do not think in these circumstances that we should remand the suit for the taking of additional evidence upon this point. It is to be noticed that the only ground of limitation upon which the suit was resisted was that it came under the special limitation provided by the Bengal Tenancy Act.

With regard to this point the finding of fact in the Courts below was that the dispossession was not made by the landlord. It is now attempted to show that the defendant No. 1 was put into possession in furtherance of a conspiracy by the landlord and that, therefore, the dispossession was by the landlord himself.

The rule in this Court is that a Court will not favour these allegations of constructive dispossession, and it must be shown on clear evidence that the landlord himself was the party who dispossessed the tenant.

The decisions which have proceeded on what has been called the landlords having a hand in the ouster cannot, in my opinion, be followed in the present case.

Therefore, the point of limitation also fails. But the third ground taken by the learned Vakil for the appellant seems to me one which should succeed. There is no finding by any Court that the defendant No. 2 had any connection with the fraud by the decree-holder. The last Court of fact has indeed found that the decree was a valid decree but that the sale was irregular and fraudulent, but I cannot discover a single sentence in any of the judgments to the effect that the defendant No. 2 had anything to do with the decree-holder in bringing the properties to sale.

The learned Vakil for the respondents contends that it was accepted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, who first dealt with the case and who framed the additional issues, that the defendant No. 2 was in conspiracy with the decree-holder and, therefore, all that it was necessary to determine for the ultimate decision of the suit was whether or not the defendant No. 1 was entitled to set up the plea of being a bona fide purchaser for value.

I am unable to see upon what evidence such a contention can be supported. There is nothing to show that there was any admission by the defendants that the defendant No. 2 was in conspiracy and concert with the decree-holder. The omission of the defendant No. 2 to enter appearance in the original suit does not dispose of the matter. It was incumbent upon the plaintiffs to establish an affirmative case that notwithstanding the benami purchase by the defendant No. 1 on behalf of the defendant No. 2, the sale could be set aside against the defendant No. 2. The defendant No. 1 was throughout contending that the sale could not be set aside and, therefore, the finding that he was a benamidar did not dispose of the substantial question whether or not the principal and the real purchaser was a bona fide purchaser for value.

We must assume, therefore, in the absence of evidence that there was no fraud on the part of the defendant No. 2.

The learned Vakil for the respondents, however, takes another ground for the purpose of attacking the sale. He contends that after the decree one of the two judgment-debtors died and the sale was held without any issue of process upon his heirs. It is contended that the sale is, therefore, a nullity.

Now the sale can only be a nullity if it is held without jurisdiction. Reliance is placed upon the case of Khiarajmal v. Daim (1). But that case does not really assist the respondents. In that case the property of two persons who were not represented in the trial was sold in execution; and it was held that the omission to implead them as defendants rendered the decree void and without jurisdiction and that the subsequent sale was bad because the decree itself was bad.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council distinguished the case of Malkarjun v. Narhari (2), on the ground that in the latter case the decree was a perfectly good decree and the omission to bring upon the record the true heir of the deceased judgment-debtor was only an irregularity which could not vitiate the sale held with jurisdiction.

The principle of Khiarajmal's case (1) above referred to has been followed in this Court in the case of Syed Muhammad Rafi v. Syed Muhammad Askari (3).

It is impossible, therefore, to say that the sale in the case now before us was a nullity. The point, moreover, was never taken at any stage, and it is possible that if it had been taken, the defendants might have been able to show that the sole judgment-debtor against whom the execution proceedings were continued was entitled to represent the heirs of the deceased.

The result, therefore, is that the appeal succeeds and the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside with costs in all Courts. The suit of the plaintiffs will be dismissed.

MUNNA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Easement, natural—Water, flow of, from higher to lower level—Higher and lower owners, rights of.

Where there is a competition between the rights of the owner of land on a higher level to let his water pass in its natural flow without obstruction and the right of the owner of the lower land to deal with it as he likes, the latter right must give way to the former specially where its free exercise would obstruct the passage of water and would cause damage to the abadi. In such a case the owner of the lower land has no right to erect a bund and thus to obstruct the flow of water. [p. 129, cols. 1 & 2]

Appeals against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 10th June 1918, modifying that of the Munsif, Fatehpur, Bara Banki, dated the 28th February 1918.

JUDGMENT.—These cases relate to the overflow of the water of the tank No. 216/1 in years of heavy rainfall. It appears that in such years the overflow of this tank passes, as the lower Court has found, through a plot No. 218/1 belonging to the appellant Kanhaiya Lal, in which he has planted fruit trees. In the year 1917 he had built a high bank or bund to prevent the water passing on to his plot. The result was to force the water over the inhabited site of the village with risk of very serious consequences to the houses of the inhabitants. The latter applied to the Sub-Divisional Officer, who ordered the demolition of the bund. As a result two suits were launched which have resulted in the connected appeals now before me. The appellant Kanhaiya Lal asked for a declaration that there was no passage of rain water across his land and for an injunction preventing the opposite party from doing anything to cause the water so to flow. The respondents asked for a perpetual injunction debarring the appellant from preventing the flow of water across the land.

KANHAIYA LAL v. MUNNA.

The parties in their pleadings set up two totally divergent routes by which they alleged the water ordinarily flowed. The Munsif appointed a Commissioner, who, after a careful inquiry on the spot, came to the conclusion that the course alleged by the respondents was the only possible course in which the water could flow in a season of heavy rain.

Exception is taken to this finding on the ground that the Commissioner (not being an engineer or surveyor) did not take levels and that owing to the respondents not being able to state definitely whether they claimed the right as an easement or as a natural right, they were prejudiced and did not adduce evidence on the subject which they might, possibly otherwise have adduced. On this point I am not prepared to interfere. The report of the Commissioner and the finding of the lower Appellate Court are very clear and are decisive in favour of the respondents. The question of pleadings I shall have to refer to later, but so far as this point is concerned, it certainly is not the case that the appellant was prevented from producing any evidence. The respondents stated the facts fully both in their plaint in their own suit, and in their written statement in the cross suit, and left the Court to decide as to the nature of the right to which they were entitled on those facts.

The lower Appellate Court has decided the appeal on the basis of the rulings in Ambica Saran Singh v. Debi Saran Singh (1) and Kaseswar Mukerjee v. Annoda Prosad Patra (2), on the ground that the natural flow of the water is across the appellant's land and that there is a natural right in favour of the respondents not to have that natural flow interfered with. The appellant in reply relies strongly on the case of Mahamahopadhyaya Ringachariar v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (3). In that case it was held that where there is a competition between two natural rights the right of the owner of higher land that the owner of the lower land shall allow the water to flow over his land from the higher land and the natural right of the owner of lower land to deal with it as he likes and to build on it as he wishes to, the former right is the weaker and must give way to the latter. This decision may be all right with reference to its own circumstances. It was concerned with a plot of land in a Municipality, where the right of building is of supreme importance and where it is easy to arrange for the drainage of the surface water. This case has been distinguished by the same High Court in Sankarappa (Ramasawmy) Naicker v. Pari (Rasi) Naicker (4), where the right of the owner of the upper agricultural land to let his water flow in its natural flow without obstruction by the owner of the lower land has been specifically affirmed and where it was held that the owner of the lower land was not entitled to raise a bund which would have the effect of seriously interfering with the upper owner's cultivation. Certainly where the question is, as in this case, between possible damage to the appellant's fruit trees (which he can avoid by making a definite channel for the escape of the water) and the probable washing away of a considerable portion of the abadi, there can be no question that the right to the natural passage of water is the more important right.

The appellant has further attempted to distinguish this case on the ground that the question arises only in exceptional years. As to this, years of heavy rainfall may occur irregularly but they do occur with sufficient frequency to make some provision for the disposal of the flood water necessary, specially in view of very serious consequences which may ensue for failure to do so.

Cross-objections have been filed by the respondents in both appeals and have been pressed on the question of costs only. The lower Appellate Court disallowed costs of the original Court, on the ground that the failure of the respondents to state definitely whether they based their claim on easement or on natural right had necessitated the introduction of a considerable amount of unnecessary evidence and thereby involved unnecessary expense to the opposite party. This is a very reasonable view to take and I see no reason to interfere with the order passed in this respect.

The result is that the appeals and the cross-objections are both dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

SIND JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CIVIL REVISION APPLICATION No. 2 OF 1915.

February 19, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Pratt, J. C., and Mr. Hayward, A. J. C.

MESSRS. KHILLOORAM LOKURAM—APPLICANTS

versus

MESSRS. LOUIS DREYFUS & Co. AND OTHERS—OPPONENTS.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), ss. 4 (a), 19—Arbitration, reference to—Suit by one party—Stay of suit, order for—Court competent to pass order—Award, validity of.

K., a Shroff at Multan, entered into an agreement with L. D. and Co., a firm at Karachi, to finance their Multan Agents. The agreement contained a clause for submission of differences to arbitration. K. made a demand on L. D. and Co. in connection with an advance made by him. L. D. and Co., on 11th May, refused to meet the demand, claimed arbitration, appointed an arbitrator and called on K. to appoint his arbitrator within 7 days. K. made no reply and L. D. and Co. appointed a second arbitrator on behalf of K., and on 21st May informed K. On 23rd May K. repudiated the arbitration and filed a suit in the Court of the Sub-Judge at Multan. L. D. and Co. proceeded to arbitration in Karachi and on 17th June an award was made and L. D. and Co. made an application for the award to be filed under the Arbitration Act. On 4th August the Sub-Judge stayed the suit. It was contended that the case was not one to which the provisions of the Arbitration Act applied, that the award was invalid by reason of a concurrent suit in the Court of the Sub-Judge of Multan, the arbitrators having no jurisdiction to proceed after the suit was filed; that the stay order made by the Sub-Judge of Multan was incompetent as no such order could be made after a reference to arbitration and the order did not validate the arbitration proceedings, and that such order could only be made by a District Court:

Held, (1) that the Arbitration Act applied to the case and the fact that K. resided in an area where that Act was not applicable did not affect the matter, as his suit could have been instituted at Karachi where the firm on whom he made the demand carried on business and where that Act was applicable; [p. 131, col. 1; p 135, col. 1.]

(2) that the mere fact of a suit being filed did not invalidate arbitration proceedings, and as the Court made a stay order, the effect of which was to decline jurisdiction in favour of the arbitrators, the award was a valid award and the Court had jurisdiction to allow it to be filed; [p. 133, cols. 1 & 2; p. 135, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Pratt, J. C., (1) that the stay order made by the Sub-Judge was an order which he was competent to make either before or after reference and award; [p. 135, col. 1.]

(2) that upon a proper construction of section 4 (a), read with section 19, of the Arbitration Act, the Court which could make the stay order was the Court in which the suit was pending and that, therefore, the Sub-Judge was competent to make the order. [p. 135, col. 1.]

Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, for the Applicants.

Mr. Gulabrai Nihalchand, for the Opponents.

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J. C.—This is an application for revision of an order allowing an award to be filed under the Indian Arbitration Act.

The application proceeds on two main grounds; (1) that the case is not one to which the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act apply; and (2) that the award is invalid by reason of a concurrent suit in the Court of the Sub-Judge of Multan. Other objections raised in the application are not fit grounds for revision and these are the only two which we shall consider.

The applicant Khillooram is a Shroff in Multan who used to finance the Multan Agents of Messrs. Louis Dreyfus and Co. under an agreement which contained a clause for submission of differences to arbitration. He made a demand on Louis Dreyfus in connection with an advance made by him to that firm's Multan Agents. Messrs. Louis Dreyfus replied on the 11th May refusing to meet the demand, claiming arbitration and appointing an arbitrator and requesting Khillooram to appoint his arbitrator within 7 days. Khillooram, made no reply and Messrs. Louis Dreyfus wrote again on the 21st May appointing a second arbitrator on behalf of Khillooram, which they were empowered to do by the arbitration clause in the agreement.

On the 23rd May, Khillooram telegraphed repudiating arbitration and on that day filed a suit in the Court of the Sub-Judge of Multan.

Louis Dreyfus, however, proceeded with arbitration in Karachi and on the 17th June an award was made by the arbitrators.

On the 4th August, an order was made by the Sub-Judge of Multan staying the suit.

It is contended that as the money was payable in Multan, and Seth Khillooram lived in Multan, the suit would have had to be instituted in Multan where the Act is not applied and so arbitration in Karachi was incompetent. But this was a demand by Seth Khillooram on Louis Dreyfus and as that firm carries on business in Karachi, Khillooram's suit could have been instituted here. The Arbitration Act, therefore, applies.

The second ground involves an attack upon the award for different reasons.

It is first contended that the arbitrators had no jurisdiction to proceed after the suit was filed and that, therefore, those proceedings and the award are invalid.

In the second place, it is contended that the stay order made by the Sub-Judge of Multan is incompetent as no such order can be made after a reference to arbitration, and that, therefore, this order does not validate the arbitration proceedings.

And lastly it is said that such an order could only have been made by a District Court.

Now as to the first point, it is true that Messrs. Louis Dreyfus and Co. proceeded with arbitration although a suit had been filed against them by Khillooram on the same cause of action. But there is no provision in the Indian Arbitration Act that forbids them from doing so. If the mere filing of the suit had the effect of invalidating a pending arbitration, this anomalous result would ensue—that after an order were made staying the suit it would be necessary to recommence arbitration proceedings de novo.

Again I think it clear that the Legislature does contemplate and has made, provision for, concurrent proceedings before an arbitration and before a Judge.

In 1872 section 28 of the Contract Act enacted that agreements which absolutely ousted the jurisdiction of the Courts were void. To this section there were two exceptions. Exception I referred to the special case dealt with in Scott v. Avery (1), where the agreement provides that no action shall be brought until after the award of the arbitrator. As explained in the Coringa Oil Company, Limited v. Koegler (2), there is here no ouster of the jurisdiction of the Court for there is no cause of action until an award has been made; and the second part of the exception was repealed in consequence of this decision. But Exception II is very important, for it saved agreements to refer to arbitration from the scope of the section. It was thus clearly enacted that agreements to refer to arbitration are not agreements to oust the jurisdiction of the Court. This was in accordance with the English rules that the pendency of an arbitration proceeding cannot be pleaded as a bar to a suit.

In 1877 section 21 of the Specific Relief Act enacted the general law that contracts to refer to arbitration cannot be enforced by suit, but can be enforced by the procedure of the Code of Civil Procedure, i. e., section 326 of the Code of 1859 and section 523 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882, and now rule 17 of the Arbitration Schedule to the Code of 1908.

It further enacted that the existence of such a contract was not a bar to a suit unless the plaintiff before suing had refused to arbitrate. This exception paid greater respect to arbitration than the English Law did. Under that law the party who had refused to arbitrate might sue, but by the Specific Relief Act he was debarred from suing though the innocent party might still seek his remedy in Court.

In 1899 the Indian Arbitration Act set up a special machinery for arbitration in the cases to which it applied in substitution of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. In these cases a contract to refer disputes to arbitration could not be specifically enforced by suit but could be enforced by the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act, i. e., by sections 8 to 15. But the last 37 words of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act were repealed so that a suit could be filed on the same cause of action even by a party who had refused to arbitrate. For this, provision was made in section 19 which gave power to apply for stay of the suit. The refusal to arbitrate was no longer a bar to the suit but the suit could be stayed by application under section 19.

There was thus a difference between cases where arbitration was enforcible under the Civil Procedure Code and the cases where it was enforcible under the Indian Arbitration Act. In the former a refusal to arbitrate was a bar to the suit, in the latter it was not. This distinction was abolished when the new Code of Civil Procedure was enacted.

(2) 1 C. 466; 1 Ind. Jur. 170; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 291.

In 1908 the Arbitration Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code repealed by rule 22 the last 37 words of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act and made a provision for stay of the suit by rule 18. The relation of the suit to arbitration was, therefore, the same whether the arbitration was enforcible under the Civil Procedure Code or under the Indian Arbitration Act.

Now what are the inferences to be drawn from these series of enactments? In the first place, section 28 of the Contract Act makes it clear that an arbitration agreement is not to be regarded as an attempt to oust the jurisdiction of the Court and is not, therefore, invalid. If the agreement is not in itself invalid, why should the filing of suit invalidate proceedings held in pursuance of a lawful agreement?

Next the Specific Relief Act makes the refusal to arbitrate a bar to the suit. Here it is the arbitration agreement which operates to invalidate the suit.

Lastly this bar on the suit is removed and provisions for stay of the suit are substituted.

Now if the mere filing of a suit superseded arbitration, these provisions for stay of suit would be unnecessary for the arbitration proceeding or agreement would be dead as soon as the suit was filed.

The cases decided prior to the enactment of the provisions for stay of suit lead to the same conclusion. In Harivalabdas Kalliandas v. Utamchand Manekchand (3), Sir Charles Sargent held that parties to a pending suit might agree to refer to arbitration and enforce the agreement by application under section 523 of the Civil Procedure Code. This was followed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Pragdas v. Girdhardas (4), where parties to a suit were to obtain an award by arbitration while the suit was pending and record it as a compromise of the suit.

These cases are no longer good law, because they have been rendered obsolete by the provisions for stay of suit but they prove that the mere filing a suit does not supersede arbitration.

The effect of the provisions for the stay of suit is that as soon as a stay order is refused or as soon as a party has by pleading in the suit waived arbitration, the arbitration proceedings are invalidated and the Court alone has seizin of the dispute. But, on the other hand, if a stay order is made, the arbitration proceedings may commence or may continue and the rights of the parties are decided by the arbitrator.

This was decided in Doleman & Sons v. Ossett Corporation (5). There an award made pending suit was held to be invalid for no application had been made for a stay order. There are no doubt some expressions in the judgment of Fletcher Moulton, L. J., which might bear the construction that the filing of a suit invalidates arbitration, but that case was not before the Court. The judgment was dealing with an arbitration which had begun after the suit had been filed; the defendant had pleaded to the suit instead of applying for a stay order. As I read the judgments, they depend solely on the defendant's failure to obtain a stay order and Fletcher Moulton, L. J., said at page 269: "There is nothing strange in the conclusion that the Court has sole seizin of the dispute where it has allowed the action to proceed." Again Farwell, L. J., said at page 273: "It is not a question of revoking the submission; it is a question of the construction of section 4 of the Act (which corresponds to section 19 of the Indian Act). It is impossible to suppose that the Court, on refusing an application to stay, and deciding that the suit must go on, means to allow the arbitration to go on also with the result that the decision first obtained will prevail, or that one or other proceeding will be an idle waste of time and money." When Farwell, L. J. said that it was not a question of revoking a submission, he was dealing with an argument that the arbitration must prevail as the Court had not revoked the submission. The answer to this was that it was not a question of the authority derived by the arbitrator from the party. He may have that authority but it ceases to confer jurisdiction upon him as soon as the Court decides to try the suit. (I may perhaps pause here to observe that the remark in Dhanpatmal Diwanchand v. Kishinlal Indraj (6), that the delegation of authority to an arbitrator could, until the passing of the Indian Arbitration Act, be revoked, is an obvious slip.] The judgment of Lord Romilly in Pestonjee Nussurwanjee v. Manockjee & Co. (7) explained that this obsolete common law doctrine was abolished by the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 and indeed this case was cited by the same Judge in Sanday Patrick & Co. v. Ramrattan (8). The authorities on this point are collected at pages 54 and 55 of Mr. Gopaldas's work on Arbitration.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the mere fact of a suit being filed does not invalidate arbitration proceedings. It has been faintly suggested that the award has been improperly procured because the arbitrators should not have proceeded after Khilloomal had filed his suit. In the cases of Louis Dreyfus & Co. v. Seth Shivakram Harkarandas (9) and Sawyer v. Louis Dreyfus & Co. (10) it was said that an arbitrator may proceed in spite of a suit filed after the reference to the arbitration, but that when the suit is filed first the party must not seek to oust the jurisdiction of the Court by appointing arbitrators. I think that there is no good ground for this distinction. Since the law has provided for stay of the suit so no party can oust the jurisdiction of the Court, for it is the Court that decides whether it should try the suit or not. The Court comes to this decision in the exercise of its jurisdiction. If the matter is tried by the arbitrator, it is not because the Court's jurisdiction is ousted but because the Court by making a stay order commits the matter in dispute to the arbitrators. If the party to an agreement to arbitrate files a suit in violation of the agreement, there is no misconduct in the other party seeking to enforce the agreement by appointing arbitrators. But he does so at his own risk, for if the Court refuses to stay the suit the arbitration proceedings will become void. Similarly if the party who has filed the suit ignores the arbitration proceedings, he also does so at his own risk, for if the Court stays his suit he is bound by the arbitration proceedings.

The filing of the suit did not, therefore, affect the validity of the reference to arbitration, and as the Court made a stay order the arbitrators had jurisdiction to make their award. The next two points affect the stay order.

The reference to arbitrators was made on the 21st May, and the suit was filed on the 23rd May. It is said that section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act is only applicable before a reference has been made to arbitrators. This is the view expressed in Sawyer v. Louis Dreyfus & Co. (10) and Dhanpatmal Diwanchand v. Kishinlal-Indraj (6). Curiously enough an exactly opposite view has been taken by the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts in Ramjidas Poddar v. Howse (11) and Peruri Suryanarayan & Co. v. Gullapudi Chinna (12). The Calcutta and the Bombay cases decide that the stay order can only be made after reference. They proceed on the assumption that the word "submission" in section 19 refers to the delegation of authority to an arbitrator. The judgment of Fletcher Moulton, L. J., in Doleman & Sons v. Ossett Corporation (5) (at pages 270 & 271) completely disposes of this fallacy. The word submission in section 19 (or in section 4 of the English Act) means the agreement to submit and is so defined in section 4 (b). The opposite construction is said in Dhanpatmal Diwanchand v. Kishinlal Indraj (6) to be supported by the history of the section and the wording of the section. The history of the section has already been discussed. It is said that the section is an indirect means of compelling specific performance of contracts to refer to arbitration, and must, therefore, be applicable only when the contract has not been performed by a reference. But the Judge is wrong in saying that before the Arbitration Act contracts to arbitrate could not be specifically enforced. He overlooks the provisions of the Civil Procedure Codes of 1859, 1877 and 1882. It is true that the effect of the section is to leave no other remedy open but arbitration—but it is an error to regard the section as a mode of specific performance. That is already provided for by sections 8 to 15 of the Act. The real purpose of the section is to prevent the conflict of jurisdiction which would arise if there were concurrent proceedings before a Judge and an arbitrator. The difficulty is well illustrated by the case itself, where the Judge refusing to apply section 19 had to fall back upon his inherent jurisdiction under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. It was said in Sawyer v. Louis Dreyfus & Co. (10) that there can be no conflict of jurisdiction between the Court and the arbitrator, because the original cause of action is merged in the agreement to refer. But this is incorrect, for the Court and the arbitrator both adjudicate on the original cause of action. Moreover the case of Doleman & Sons v. Ossett Corporation (5) now makes it quite clear that it is the conflict of jurisdiction that the section is intended to remove. That being so, the reason for resort to the section is more urgent after the reference than before; in Doleman & Sons v. Ossett Corporation (5) the award had been made before the defendants filed their written statement and yet it was the ground of the decision that no stay order had been applied for. Clearly, the Judges were of opinion that a stay order could be made not only after reference but even after award (as appears to have been the case here). There is nothing in the wording of the section that it is only applicable before a reference. The phrase "party to a submission" means party to an agreement to submit and is equally applicable before and after the reference. The phrase "should not be referred" does not limit the section to matters which have not already been referred. They have nothing to do with the stage which the arbitration proceedings have reached. They refer to such considerations as the nature of the subject-matter of the dispute or even the conduct or capacity of a nominated arbitrator. Freeman v. Chester Rural Council (13). Our conclusion, therefore, is that an order under section 19 can be made both before and after reference or award.

The last objection raised is that the stay order under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act can only be made by the District Court. In Lucas Ralli v. Noor Mahomed (14) the High Court of Bombay stayed a suit pending in the Court of Small Causes. It was assumed that the Court referred to in section 19, was the Court as defined in section 4 (a), i.e., the High Court in the presidency town and the District Court elsewhere. It was also said that jurisdiction to stay a suit in another Court was impliedly confirmed by the section. I think that if the section is intended to confer such a power and to override section 56 (b) of the Specific Relief Act, it would have done so by express and affirmative words. Again the assumption that the Court is the Court as defined in section 4 (a) overlooks, I think, the fact that the definition is subject to a proviso of repugnancy in the context. As the section gives no power to the High Court and District Court to stay suits in other Courts, the definition is repugnant to the context of the section. There is no possibility of a repugnancy in any other section and the definition seems to have been made subject to repugnancy of context in view of section 19. The Act sets up a machinery for enforcing arbitration in cases which can be filed [Lucas Ralli v. Noor Mahomed (14)] in a presidency town or [Morriston Tinplate Co. v. Brooker (15)] in a local area to which the Act is applied. It applies to cases within these areas only but it extends to the whole of British India. Not only because the general law as to specific relief is altered but also because arbitration within these areas may (as in the present case) affect suits outside those areas. The definition in section 4 is of the Courts which control and enforce the arbitration in these places, i. e., a High Court in a presidency town and a District Court in a local area to which the act is extended. I think the words "elsewhere the Court of the District Judge" mean the Court of the District Judge in any other local area and have no reference to Courts outside that area. The construction put upon the section in Lucas Ralli v. Noor Mahomed (14) would leave it in doubt which District Court should make the stay order—the Court of the local area where the arbitration proceedings are being held or the Court outside that area where the suit has been filed. The expression "stay the proceedings" and the absence of any provision as to notice to the other party indicate that the phrase is used in the same sense as in section 20 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 and that the Court is the Court in which the proceedings are held.

Lastly the Legislature could not have intended that a Court that had not seizin of the dispute should intervene and decide whether the Court of trial should or should not give way to the arbitrator. The Court of trial has cognizance of the subject-matter of the dispute and is in a better position to decide whether there should or should not be arbitration. This is also the rule in England. Morriston Tinplate Co. v. Brooker (15).

The stay order made by the Sub Judge of Multan in the suit pending before him was an order that he was competent to make. He could make it either before or after reference and award. By so doing he has declined jurisdiction in favour of the arbitrators. The award, therefore, is a valid award and the Court has jurisdiction to allow it to be filed.

I would reject this application with costs.

HAYWARD, A. J. C.—I concur that the applicant Khillooram could have instituted his suit in Karachi, as the subject-matter was the recovery of an advance from the opponents Louis Dreyfus & Co. of Karachi. The dispute, therefore, fell by reason of section 2 within the provision of the Arbitration Act.

I also concur that the suit subsequently filed by the applicant in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Multan, did not invalidate the arbitration proceedings promoted by the opponents under the Arbitration Act. The applicant claimed recovery of the advance from the opponents under a contract between the parties, which contained the usual arbitration clause providing for the reference of any dispute, which might arise, to arbitrators, thereupon to be appointed. The applicant's claim was disputed by the opponents, but he did not file his suit to recover the amount in the Court of the Sub-Judge of Multan, until he had heard that the opponents had appointed arbitrators in the manner provided by the arbitration clause for settlement of the matter by arbitration. The object of filing the suit obviously was to prevent arbitration proceedings under the Arbitration Act. It has been contended on the authority of Doleman & Sons v. Ossett Corporation (5) that that object was attained and that the suit filed in the Court of the Sub-Judge of Multan invalidated the arbitration proceedings and eventual award under the Arbitration Act.

Now the applicant would, it is true, have been liable merely for damages for breach of his contract to refer to arbitration under the common law. He would even have been entitled to revoke the authority of duly appointed arbitrators before their award and there would have been no means of preventing the prosecution of his regular suit in Court under the common law. But that position has been materially modified by the Arbitration Act. Parties have no longer the liberty to break their contracts to refer to arbitration. They can be compelled to fulfil them by regular process under the Arbitration Act. They have no longer the unrestricted right to revoke the authority of duly appointed arbitrators. They can only do so with leave duly obtained from the Court under section 5 of the Arbitration Act. They have no longer the unrestricted right to prosecute regular suits in Court. They can be prevented by stay order under section 19 of the Arbitration Act. It would appear, therefore, that the authority of the arbitrators would remain unaffected by the subsequent suit, as pointed out in the case of Sawyer v. Louis Dreyfus & Co. (10) and of Dhanpatmal Diwanchand v. Kishinlal Indraj (6), in default of revocation with leave of the Court under section 5 of the Arbitration Act. Nor would that authority apparently be affected by mere omission to seek stay of such subsequent suit under section 19 of the Arbitration Act. The actual submission to such suits or refusal of stay orders might well be regarded as implied revocation with the leave of the Court. It should be observed that the case of Doleman & Sons v. Ossett Corporation (5) was not a subsequent but a prior suit and that the parties had both submitted to the jurisdiction and disentitled themselves from seeking stay of the proceedings of the Court. It would be mere 'obiter' to consider here the effect of prior suits but it should be observed that caution should be necessary in applying to Subordinate Courts in India the 'dicta' in that case as to the effect of such suits, particularly as there was a difference of opinion among the Judges based on the dignity of the High Court in England.

It does not appear to me to be strictly necessary to consider the consequence of omission to seek stay of the suit, because stay was as a matter of fact sought and granted by the Court of the Sub-Judge of Multan and that order does not appear to have been challenged except in argument in this Court. But it seems desirable in view of the detailed discussion before us to express my dissent from the distinction drawn in the cases of Sawyer v. Louis Dreyfus & Co. (10) and Dhanpatmal Diwanchand v. Kishinlal Indraj (6) between the usual arbitration clauses and the references to arbitrators thereafter appointed. Both appear to me to be included in the definition of "submission" in section 4 (b) of the Arbitration Act and to be good grounds to support stay orders, whether of subsequent or prior suits under section 19 of the Arbitration Act. There would appear to be no necessity to have recourse to the provisions of section 151, Civil Procedure Code.

It does not appear to me strictly necessary for the same reasons to consider whether the stay order was within the jurisdiction of the Court of the Sub Judge of Multan or whether it should have been sought and passed by the District Court of Multan or by this Court. But it would again appear desirable in view of detailed discussion before us to observe that the jurisdiction could not properly be exercised by the Court of the Sub Judge of Multan according to the practice of this Court, which would appear to be in accordance with that of the Bombay High Court as reported in the case of Lucas Ralli v. Noor Mahomad (14). It would according to that practice be not the trial Court but the Arbitration Court as defined in section 4 (a) which would be vested with the jurisdiction to stay suits under section 19 of the Arbitration Act. The definition must be applied unless there should be anything repugnant in the context. It would be difficult to contend that the result of vesting the jurisdiction to stay suits in the Arbitration Court would be repugnant either to the spirit or the letter of section 19 of the Arbitration Act. The authority in the best position to decide whether suits should or should not be stayed might well be considered to be the authority vested with the control of the arbitration proceedings. It would indeed involve certain interference with Courts outside the ordinary jurisdiction of the Arbitration Courts. But that would be more apparent than real. The stay order might well be considered to be rather an injunction to the parties than an act of control of the Courts outside the jurisdiction of the Arbitration Court. The stay orders in any case have legal effect throughout British India, because the Act has in the preliminary section been declared to extend to the whole of British India. The words used "the Court" would grammatically cover the Arbitration Court and there might well be cogent considerations for vesting the jurisdiction in the Arbitration Court in India. It would have been simple to have used the definite words 'that Court' if it had been intended to vest the jurisdiction in the trial Court and not in the Arbitration Court, as usual in the English Statutes (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume I, paragraph 953, and note at page 451). It might well be argued from this change of words that it was not intended to adopt in this matter in India the precise rule in force in England.

These views, if correct, would, of course, also exclude the jurisdiction in this matter of the District Court of Multan. It would have no particular cognizance of the matter and would not be "in any other local area" mentioned in the proviso to section 2, which would appear to be the "elsewhere" contemplated in section 4 (a) of the Arbitration Act. There would be no particular reason for vesting the jurisdiction in the District Court of Multan and it would not be covered by the words "the Court" used in section 19 of the Arbitration Act. These views would, therefore, lead to the conclusion that the Arbitration Court is "the Court" contemplated by section 19 of the Arbitration Act and that a deliberate departure has been made in this matter from the rule in force in the Courts in England.

NARSINGH BAHADUR SINGH—APPELLANT

versus

SURAJ DIN—RESPONDENT.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 29, 30—Transfer, voidable, by guardian—Suit to set aside transfer, whether necessary.

A suit is not necessary to set aside a disposal of property voidable under section 30 of the Guardians and Wards Act. In a suit to enforce such a transfer, it is open to the person seeking to avoid it to exercise the option given to him by that section by resisting the suit on the ground that the transfer is not binding upon him.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 18th August 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOPKINS, J. M.—The respondent contested a notice of ejectment on the ground that he held the land in dispute under a perpetual lease. It is admitted that the lease in question, which was granted by the appellant's guardian at a time when the appellant was a minor, was one which it was not within the power of the guardian to grant, and which was voidable at the instance of the appellant under sections 29 and 30 respectively of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890. The Commissioner has upheld the lease on the ground that the appellant did not bring a suit to avoid it within the period prescribed by Article 44, Schedule I of the Limitation Act.

The appellant came of age in July 1915. He issued the notice of ejectment on 13th November 1917. The respondent filed his suit to contest the notice on 29th November 1917. The appellant filed his written statement on January 5th, 1918, in which he pleaded that the lease executed in his minority was not binding upon him.

Section 30 of the Guardians and Wards Act does not lay down that the avoidance of a disposal of property made in contravention of section 29 shall be by a suit brought by the person seeking to avoid it. When, as in the present case, a suit is brought which is practically one to enforce an avoidable lease, it seems to me that it is open to the defendant to exercise the option given to him by section 30 by resisting the suit on the ground that the lease is not binding upon him. In his written statement of 5th January 1918 the appellant did substantially repudiate the lease and give notice of his intention to avoid it within the period of limitation prescribed by law. The question of the validity of the lease was raised in a Court competent to decide the issue and the Court would have been acting in contravention of the provisions of Order II, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, if it had refused to decide the issue and had referred the appellant to a separate suit.

I would set aside the orders of the Courts below and would dismiss the respondent's suit subject to the payment of Rs. 350 in compensation, which is the amount agreed upon by the parties before this Court.

FERARD, S. M.—I agree.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 155—Landlord and tenant—Decree directing tenant to pay a sum of money to landlord—Extension of time, power of Court to grant—Possession taken by landlord, effect of.

MAHABIR SINGH v. DEOKI RAI.

A Court has power to entertain an application by a tenant judgment-debtor for enlargement of time to pay a sum of money awarded to the landlord decree-holder in a decree under section 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, even if the decree-holder has applied for execution of the decree and, as a matter of fact, has obtained possession of the property in execution.[p. 138, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarpur.

Mr. Rajendra Prasad, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Harnarayan Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner challenges the validity or the legality of an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur granting an extension of time to the opposite party to comply with an order passed under section 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and directing that the opposite party be restored to possession. It will be convenient to give certain dates.

It appears that on the 15th March 1915 the petitioner obtained a conditional decree for ejectment against the opposite party under section 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The decree provided that Rs. 20 should be paid as compensation to the plaintiff, and it directed the defendant to remove the disputed huts from the land in dispute within one month from the date of the decree. There was an appeal against this decree, which was dismissed on the 7th January 1916. It appears that on the 22nd January 1916 the opposite party deposited the money in Court but did not remove the huts as directed by the decree of the Munsif. On the 18th August 1916 the petitioner applied for execution of the decree and on the 29th August 1916 the opposite party applied for extension of time, to enable him to remove the huts, before the learned Munsif. On the 31st August 1916 the learned Munsif did grant an extension of time to enable the opposite party to remove the huts. There was an appeal from the order passed by the learned Munsif, which appeal succeeded. There was a second appeal to this Court which was dismissed on the 28th February 1917, but the High Court dismissing the second appeal expressly gave the opposite party power to apply for extension of time before the District Judge, but on the 2nd April 1917 the petitioner was put in possession of the property. On the 5th August 1918 the District Judge dealt with the application presented before him on the 24th March 1917 and by his order he extended the time to enable the opposite party to comply with the decree of the Munsif passed on the 15th March 1915 and further directed that the opposite party should be put in possession of the property. The petitioner before me complains against this order passed on the 5th August 1918 and urges that the learned District Judge had no jurisdiction to pass an order extending the time after he had been put in possession of the property by the order of the Court executing the decree.

In the case of Syam Mandal v. Sati Nath Banerjee (1) Mr. Justice Mookerjee held that it is competent to the Court to entertain an application for enlargement of time after the expiry of the period described in the decree and even after the decree-holder has applied for execution. The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the petitioner concedes this proposition, but he argues that there is no power in a Court to enlarge the time after possession has been taken by a party in terms of the original decree. It appears that in the case just cited possession had, as a matter of fact, been taken by the decree-holder, for at page 533* the learned Judge says: "an order will also be made that the petitioner be forthwith restored to possession, and such order will be executed by the Court below as a decree of this Court." The true view seems to me to be what Mr. Justice Mookerjee states at page 532* that is to say: "A remedial provision of this character should be construed liberally so as not to restrict the remedy and fetter the discretion of the Court." It seems to me that taking possession of the property is a part of the execution proceeding and if it is held that a Court has power to entertain an application for enlargement of time even if the decree holder has applied for execution, it seems to me that the Court is equally competent to entertain an application for enlargement of time even if the decree-holder has obtained possession of the property. Of course the matter is one of discretion and the Court will exercise that discretion on all the materials before that Court. But, in my opinion, there is no question of jurisdiction involved in this matter. That being my view, I would refuse this application with costs, which I assess at two gold mohurs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901*)*, s. 198—Imperfect partition—Lambardar, second, not appointed—Payment of rent to existing lambardar, effect of.

Where a village is imperfectly partitioned but a second lambardar is not appointed, the existing lambardar remains the lambardar, and if rent is paid to him in good faith, the tenant is protected by section 198 of the Agra Tenancy Act.

Reference made by the Commissioner, Allahabad Division.

JUDGMENT.—The case is not one for exercise for the Board's power of revision under section 185, Tenancy Act. The village has been imperfectly partitioned but unless or until the Collector in exercise of his powers under section 45 (1), Land Revenue Act, appoints a second Lambardar for the applicant's portion of the Mahal, in which it seems the hitherto and existing Lambardar has not a share, he remains Lambardar. It is only imperfect partition—joint responsibility of all the co-sharers remains—and I fail to see how the present Lambardar's duties under rule 18 (a) and 18 (aa) of Lambardar Rules are affected. There is a concurrent finding of the two first Courts that the respondent paid his rent to the Lambardar in good faith and I do not follow the Commissioner's argument that section 198, Tenancy Act, was not relevant. The word used in that section is landholder, not proprietor. The village custom, and it has not apparently been altered by anything contained in the terms of the imperfect partition, is that the Lambardar is the person to whom tenants have to pay their rents, i.e., their landholder. Rulings* referred in the note on plea of jus tertii, bottom of page 417, Agarwala's Tenancy Act, 5th Edition (section 198), show that section 198 covers the case of tenants pleading payment in good faith to the Lambardar.

I am not prepared to interfere. Let the record be returned.

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J. C.—On the question of jurisdiction I have given reasons in my judgment in Khilooram v. Louis Dreyfus & Co. (1) for holding that the applica ion for stay should be made to the Court trying the suit.

I regret I am unable to concur in the views expressed by either of my learned colleagues. In the case of an arbitration in the District Court of Karachi and a concurrent suit in a Subordinate Court in the Punjab, according to their view, the defendant should go to the Punjab Subor dinate Court, put in an appearance there and then proceed to the District Court to which that Court is subordinate and apply for a stay order. According to the other view he should go to the Punjab Subordinate Court, put in an appearance there and then return to Karachi and apply to the District Court here for a stay order. Whether in the latter event the Punjab Subordinate Court would recognize the jurisdiction of a Karachi Court to stay a suit pending before it, is a matter on which a doubt is perhaps permissible. But in either view the defendant has to apply to the trial Court for an adjournment. This, I venture to think is contrary to the principle of section 19 that there should be no sub mission to the jurisdiction of the Court where the suit is pending, and to the principle of the English cases that a per son who makes any application whatsoever to the Court, even though it be merely an application for time, takes a step in the proceedings: Halsbury, Volume I, paragraph 956. The judgment of Crouch, A. J. C., and the judgment of Hayward, A. J. C., in Khillooram v. Louis Dreyfus & Co. (1) seem to treat an adjournment as equivalent to a stay order. I venture to think this overlooks the cardinal distinction that an adjournment is an exercise of jurisdiction in the suit, while a stay order is an order declining to exercise jurisdiction. I also think it offends against the principle of Doleman & Sons v. Ossett Corporation (2) that when a suit is pending, the Court alone has sole seizin of the dispute.

As to proceedings of the Legislative Council, the rule declared by the Privy Council is that they may not be referred to as an aid to the construction of a particular section or sections of the Act: Administrator-General of Bengal v. Premlal Mullick (3). But in some cases they have been referred to for the purpose of ascertaining the object of the Act to show the intention of the Legislature when the Act is ambiguous: Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (4), Parbati Charan, In the matter of (5) and Krishnaji Tamaji v. Tarawa (6). If it be permissible to refer to the proceed ings of the Legislative Council under these cases, then it is clear that the avowed object of the Legislature was to substitute for section 21 of the Specific Relief Act the bar of a stay order and to bring the Indian procedure into conformity with the English. The English section requires the application to be made to the Court where the suit is pending. The section was said to be "perfectly clear" in Morriston Tinplate Co. v. Brooker (7) and the doubt raised in 1904 by the obiter dictum in Runciman v. Smith (8) could not have affected the Indian Legislature in 1899.

In Lucas Ralli v. Noor Mahomed (9) Davar, J., did not consider the case of a concurrent suit in another province. If he had, I venture to think his conclusion would have been different. For on the face of the proviso against repugnancy in the definition of section 4, it is impossible to construe section 19 as an implied repeal of section 56 (b) of the Specific Relief Act or of Act V of 1872 or as an implied grant of extraterritorial jurisdiction not only to High Courts but to District Courts.

I would, therefore, return the application for presentation to the Small Causes Court, Karachi, but according to the majority of the Bench the application will be rejected. Costs to be costs in the cause.

Act. On the 4th March 1915, by a written contract, the firm of Ratanchand-Ramkishandas sold to Sahiram-Dunichand 25 tons of Sarsi for May delivery on certain terms and conditions. The contract contained an arbitration clause in the following special form:—

"In case of any dispute arising with respect to this contract each party shall appoint his own arbitrator for the purpose of surveying the goods. In case of difference of opinion the arbitrators shall appoint an umpire. The umpire's award shall be considered final. The surveyor or the arbitrator shall be either a European or native merchant according to the terms of the contract. If any party fails to appoint an arbitrator, the other party after giving him 3 days' notice shall appoint an arbitrator on his behalf. If both the arbitrators fail to appoint an umpire, the Managing Committee of the Association shall appoint an umpire."

Delivery was not given under the contract, and, early in 1917, the purchasers, Sahiram-Dunichand, filed a suit in the Small Causes Court, Karachi, for recovery of damages for breach of contract. In this suit, defendants No. 1, Kaliandas-Rughnath, who were the purchasers of the goods from Sahiram Dunichand, were impleaded as defendants. Rattanchand-Ramkishandas now apply to this Court praying that the proceedings may be stayed in order that they may refer the dispute to arbitration.

At the hearing before the learned Judicial Commissioner the question of law was raised whether, when the suit sought to be stayed has been filed in a Subordinate Court, not under the jurisdiction of a High Court, the application under section 19, Indian Arbitration Act, lies to such Subordinate Court or to the District Court. In their judgments in Khillooram v. Louis Dreyfus & Co., (1), Pratt, J. C., and Hayward, A. J. C., expressed difference of opinion on the point: the case has accordingly been referred to the Full Bench for disposal.

The question resolves itself into one of construction of the words "the Court" in section 19, and we must apply the ordinary rules for the construction of Statutes. If the doubtful words have a technical meaning, they must be given that meaning and the language of the section must, as far as possible, be so construed as to be consistent with every other enactment which it does not, in express terms, modify or repeal. The technical meaning of "the Court" is found in section 4 to be the Court of the District Judge. Assuming that the section is consistent with section 2, Civil Procedure Code, 1882, which declares the limits of the jurisdiction of the District Court, and section 56 (b), Specific Relief Act, it must be taken to declare that an application to stay proceedings pending in a Subordinate Court must be made to the District Court to which such Court is subordinate. We cannot, in the absence of any clear indication of such an intention, assume that the Legislature intended that a District Court should exercise jurisdiction beyond its prescribed local limits.

If it was the intention of the Legislature that the powers conferred by the Act should be exercised by the Court of the District Judge only in those special local areas to which the Act was made applicable, that intention has not, in my opinion, been expressed. Section 1 declares that the Act extends to the whole of British India, and "elsewhere" in section 4 (a) must mean in all other places than the Presidency towns, unless the jurisdiction of all District Courts other than those in the notified local areas be excluded by section 2.

Section 2 limits the application of the Act to those cases only where, if the subject-matter submitted to arbitration were the subject of a suit, the suit could, with leave or otherwise, be instituted in a presidency town. But the section does not restrict the local extent of the Act as declared by section 1; nor does it, except possibly by implication, limit the jurisdiction to certain Courts. It is not unusual, in Indian Statutes, to define not only the local extent but also the classes of persons or of cases to which it is applicable. Other examples of Acts extending to the whole of British India, but having application only to particular cases, are the Indian Succession Act, the Succession Certificate Act, and the Probate and Administration Act. Where the Legislature intends to limit the extent of an Act to special local areas it states so in clear terms, as in the Suits Valuation Act, VII of 1887, section 2.

The combined effect of sections 1, 2 and 4 is that the provisions of the Act can be enforced, through the appropriate Courts, and within the prescribed limits of their application, throughout British India. Neither the operation of the Act, nor the right to enforce it, is limited to certain areas. We cannot, I think, read into section 2 an implied intention to deprive all other principal Civil Courts of original jurisdiction of power to deal with cases to which the Act is applicable from the bare fact that such cases must be such as could be litigated in a Presidency town or one of the notified areas.

For these reasons, I am unable to accept the view that power to make stay orders under section 19 is limited to the High Courts and certain District Courts.

Nor am I able to concur with the learned Judicial Commissioner in the view expressed in Khillooram v. Louis Dreyfus & Co. (1) that "the Court" in section 19 refers to the Court in which the suit is pending.

The expression "the Court" occurs 18 times in the Indian Arbitration Act, and it is suggested that the draftsman would not have inserted into the definition section the provision "unless there is anything repugnant in the context" unless he contemplated at least one instance of repugnancy. But the proviso is inserted, as a matter of course, into every definition clause of a modern Indian Act; there are over 20 instances in one volume of Naicker & Co.'s Bombay Civil Court Manual.] And it is inconceivable that the draftsman should have deliberately added the proviso in order that he might introduce confusion into one of the sections, without furnishing the public with any clue to the discovery of the particular section, or of the meaning which he intended to attach to the expression as used therein.

Section 19 of the Indian Act was adopted with slight verbal alterations from section 4 of the English Arbitration Act of 1889, and it may be inferred, and the inference is supported by the speech of Sir Griffiths Evans, when introducing the section, that the intention was to adopt the English procedure. What, then, was the procedure in force in England in March 1889, and what was the effect of the "slight verbal alterations"?

Section 4 of the English Act runs as follows: "4 If any party to a submission, or any person claiming through or under him, commence any legal proceedings in any Court against any other party to the submission, or any person claiming through or under him, in respect of any matter agreed to be referred, any party to such legal proceedings may at any time after appearance, and before delivering any pleadings or taking any other steps in the proceedings, apply to that Court to stay the proceedings, and that Court or a Judge thereof if satisfied that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the submission, and that the applicant was, at the time when the proceedings were commenced, and still remains, ready and willing to do all things necessary to the proper conduct of the arbitration, may make an order staying the proceedings."

The alterations consisted in the omission of the words 'in any Court,' in the early part of the section and the substitution of 'the Court' for "that Court" and for "that Court or a Judge thereof" in the middle of it.

The corresponding section in the C. L. P. Act, 1854, ran: "It shall be lawful for the Court in which such action or suit is brought, or a Judge thereof"....."on application by the defendant"....."to make a rule or order staying all proceedings."

By section 27 of the English Arbitration Act "Court" is declared to mean "Her Majesty's High Court of Justice", unless the contrary intention appears, and up to 1903, at any rate, the practice appears to have been in accordance with the view that the definition in section 27 prevailed; for both in the 8th Edition of Russell (1900) and in the 4th Edition of Redman (1903) it is stated that the application should be to a Master of the Supreme Court or a District Registrar. A District Registrar is an Officer of the Supreme Court, who has all the authority and jurisdiction of a Master of the Supreme Court within the limits of his District. But the wording of section 4 was undoubtedly open to the construction that an application for stay might be made to any Court in which a suit was pending, and the writer of the articles on Arbitration in Halsbury's Laws of England (1907) states: "The power to stay legal proceedings commenced in respect of a matter agreed to be referred to arbitration can, it would seem, be exercised by any Court in which such proceedings are commenced." To this there is a note. "See, however, Runciman v. Smith (8)."

At the time, then, of framing section 19 of the Indian Act, the practice in England was to make an application for stay to the High Court or a District Registrar; and, if the intention was to follow the English practice as closely as possible, it could not have been done more effectually than by declaring that the application should be to "the Court", that is to the High Court in Presidency towns and elsewhere to the Court of the District Judge. The slight verbal alterations not only carried out this intention, but relieved the Indian Act of any doubt which attached to the English Act. For the words which gave rise to the doubt were not reproduced.

Attention has been drawn to the similarity of some of the essential phrases used in section 19 to those used in section 20, Civil Procedure Code, 1882, and it is suggested that they indicate that the power of staying proceedings was to be exercised in each case by the trying Court. But stay orders can certainly be passed by a superior Court; by the Judicature Act, 1873, in cases in which an injunction would formerly have issued, power was given to order stay of proceedings. It is doubtful whether the Court could, under section 19 of the Act, issue an injunction.

It has been urged that it would be far more convenient if the power to stay proceedings under the section were vested in the trying Court; but section 4 seems to indicate that the Legislature considered it wiser to limit the powers to Courts of a grade not lower than that of a District Judge.

Though a Subordinate Court has, in my opinion, no power to stay proceedings under section 19, it has power to grant an adjournment; and where an adjournment has been granted for the express purpose of enabling the defendant to resort to arbitration, an award so obtained could not, in my opinion, be set aside as having been obtained merely because a suit was pending. The award or the order of the Court passed thereon could be put in as conclusive evidence.

I would hold, therefore, that the application has been properly filed in this Court.

On the merits I am of opinion that the stay should not be granted. The arbitration clause is in a special form and gives to each party the power to appoint an arbitrator for the purpose only of surveying the goods. Arbitrators appointed under this clause would not have the power to award damages for breach of contract or to decide all the questions in dispute. Further Kaliandas-Rughnath were not parties to the submission and it is not desirable to stay a suit when only some of the matters in litigation can be settled by the award. As applicants allowed nearly two years to elapse without making any attempt to proceed with a reference, they cannot be believed when they assert that they were always willing and ready to do so.

I would dismiss the application with costs.

HAYWARD, A. J. C.—The plaintiff Sahiram in 1915 sold to defendant No. 1 Kaliandas goods bought from defendant No. 2 Ratanchand. The plaintiff Sahiram in 1917 and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 jointly sued for damages for breach of contract, as disputes arose owing to Kaliandas having been unable to get or having been unwilling to take delivery from Ratanchand. The suit was filed in the Small Causes Court, Karachi. The defendant No. 1, Kaliandas, would be content to have the disputes decided there, but defendant No. 2 Ratanchand would prefer to have them settled by arbitration in accordance with the arbitration clause in the contract. He has accordingly applied to have the proceedings in the Small Causes Court, Karachi, stayed under section 19 of the Arbitration Act and has made his application to this Court as the District Court, Karachi.

It has been urged in opposition on the merits that stay ought not to be granted and further on the law that the jurisdiction to grant or refuse stay is vested in the Small Causes Court, Karachi, as the trial Court and not in this Court as the District Court, Karachi, under section 19 of the Arbitration Act.

It seems to me on the merits, concurring with the conclusions and reasons of my brother Crouch, that stay ought not to be granted. It seems to me further on the law, concurring with the conclusions of my brother Crouch, that the jurisdiction to grant or refuse stay is vested not in the Small Cause Court, Karachi, as the trial Court, but in this Court as the District Court, Karachi, under section 19 of the Arbitration Act. But it seems to me further on the law, concurring in the reasons urged by the learned Judicial Commissioner, that the jurisdiction is vested in this Court not simply as the District Court, Karachi, but as the District Court, Karachi, specially designated to be the Arbitration Court under the Arbitration Act.

With regard to the merits the defendant No. 1 Kaliandas is not bound by the arbitration clause in the contract of defendant No. 2 Ratanchand, and it is doubtful in any case whether that clause which could appear to be limited to survey of the goods would be sufficient to cover all the disputes between the parties. There has, moreover, been so much delay in bringing the disputes within sight of settlement that there are good reasons for suspecting the bona fides of the objections of defendant No. 2 Ratanchand to the proceedings in the Small Causes Court, Karachi. We ought, in my opinion, on these grounds to refuse stay under section 19 of the Arbitration Act.

With regard to the law the Act extends according to section 1 to the whole of the British India, but its application is limited by section 2 to cases where the suits would be instituted in a Presidency town or according to the proviso in local areas declared by notification to be deemed to be Presidency towns. The language of the proviso is elliptical, and the phrase "applicable in any other local area as if it were a Presidency town" no doubt means "applicable in cases where the suits could be instituted in any other local area thereby declared to be deemed to be a Presidency town." The meaning was no doubt intended to be similar to that more fully expressed in section 23 in respect of the particular local area of Rangoon. The Courts to deal with such cases have next been prescribed by section 4 (a) to be the High Courts in Presidency towns and the Courts of the District Judges elsewhere, that is, in other local areas declared by notification to be deemed to be Presidency towns. The language of the section is again elliptical and the phrase "in the Presidency towns, the High Court and elsewhere, the Court of the District Judge," no doubt means "in cases where the suits could be instituted in a Presidency town, the High Court of that Presidency town and in cases where the suits could be instituted in other local areas declared by notification to be deemed to be Presidency towns, the Courts of the District Judges of such local areas thereby declared to be deemed to be Presidency towns." The word "elsewhere" must refer to the "other local areas, declared by notification to be deemed to be Presidency towns, for there could be no practical purpose in conferring jurisdiction under sections 5 and 8 to 17 on Courts outside the local areas thereby declared to be deemed to be Presidency towns. The meaning was no doubt again intended to be similar to that more fully expressed in section 23 in respect of the particular local area of Rangoon. We ought, in my opinion, on these grounds to hold that this Court as the District Court of Karachi has been specially designated for the particular local area of Karachi to be the Arbitration Court under the Arbitration Act.

It has been conceded that unless there is anything repugnant in the context or subject, the Courts prescribed by section 4 (a) must further be held to be the Courts vested with jurisdiction under section 19 to grant or to refuse stay of suits instituted contrary to agreements to refer to arbitration. But it has been contended that there is something repugnant both in the context and the subject. It has been urged that there is something repugnant in the context, inasmuch as the phrase "at any time after appearance and before filing a written statement" limiting the time for demanding stay has reference to the trial Courts and would be repugnant to a subsequent direction requiring the demands to be made to the arbitration Courts. It has been sought to fortify this argument by the reflection that if there is nothing repugnant in section 19, then there would be nothing repugnant anywhere in the Act and that it was clearly contemplated that there would be something repugnant somewhere in the Act. There is, however, really nothing repugnant in the context between limiting the time for demanding stay by referance to the particular stage of the proceedings in the trial Courts and subsequently directing that demands for stay should be made to the Arbitration Courts. It is nothing more than enforcing the wholesome rule that where the parties have submitted their disputes to the jurisdiction of the trial Courts, they should not be permitted to render the proceedings there infructuous by transfer of their disputes to the jurisdiction of the Arbitration Courts. There is, again, no force in the reflection that there must be something repugnant in section 19, because that section was not inserted in the Bill until the final reading as appears from the remarks of Sir Griffiths Evans in the proceedings in Council printed at page 63 of part 6 of the Gazette of India of the 4th March 1899. Moreover, there would be no difficulty in detecting something sufficiently repugnant in sections 20 and 23. There is, however, really no need to detect, anything repugnant in the Act. The clause "unless there is anything repugnant" is the usual clause adopted by a careful draftsman as in sections 3 and 4 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, and was no doubt inserted merely "ex majori cautela" in the Arbitration Act, 1899.

It has been urged that there is something repugnant in the subject, inasmuch as the parties would be put to inconvenience if they had to refer the stay of their proceedings in the trial Courts for the decision of the Arbitration Courts and inasmuch as decisions would be liable to involve injunctions staying proceedings in trial Courts not subordinate to the Arbitration Courts contrary to the provisions of section 56 (b) of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. There is, however, really nothing repugnant in the subject. There would be no practical inconvenience to the parties in having to appear and protest against the jurisdiction of the trial Courts and then having to refer the stay of the proceedings to the Arbitration Courts. Their protests would, no doubt, secure adjournments for their references to the Arbitration Courts, and if not, further steps under compulsion would not be the voluntary taking steps in the proceedings contemplated as barring their references to the Arbitration Courts. No practical inconvenience has hitherto been brought to notice in the numerous cases in which proceedings in the Small Causes Court, Karachi, have been stayed by this Court as the Arbitration Court; nor was practical inconvenience represented to the Judges of the Small Causes Court, Bombay, or to the High Court in the case of Lucas Ralli v. Noor Mahomed (9), in which it was held that proceedings in the Small Causes Court, Bombay, could be stayed by the High Court as the Arbitration Court. Nor would the decisions staying proceedings amount to more than stay orders of the nature contemplated by section 10, Civil Procedure Code, akin to temporary injunctions specified in the first clause of section 53 of the Specific Relief Act. They would not amount to perpetual injunctions by decrees contemplated by the second clause of section 53 and clause (b) of section 56 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. They would in any case be valid under the special authority of the subsequent Arbitration Act, 1899.

We ought, therefore, in my opinion, to hold upon the strict construction of sections 4 (a) and 19 that the jurisdiction to grant or refuse to stay is not vested in the Small Causes Court, Karachi, as the trial Court but in this Court as the District Court, Karachi, specially designated to be the Arbitration Court under the Arbitration Act.

There remain for consideration some general contentions advanced against the strict construction of the sections. It has been contended that it would be generally more appropriate to vest the jurisdiction to grant or refuse stay of suits in the trial Courts, because they would be in a better position to decide whether the disputes should be referred to arbitration. But that would not necessarily or even probably be so. It would, in my opinion, generally be more appropriate to vest the jurisdiction in the Courts having special experience in arbitration and to leave the decision not only of revocation of agreements to refer to arbitration but also of staying suits instituted contrary to such agreements to the Courts specially designated to be Arbitration Courts under the Act. It had also been contended that the strict construction would conflict with the Sindh Jurisdiction Act, V of 1872, limiting the jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court and would generally extend beyond their Charters the jurisdictions of other High Courts. But the Sindh Jurisdiction Act, V of 1872, did no more than remove doubts as to the jurisdiction conferred by its Charter on the Bombay High Court. It did not place the Bombay High Court in a different position from other Chartered High Courts. The extension of these jurisdictions by the subsequent Arbitration Act, 1899, was within the powers of the Legislature and had been effected in other cases such as by section 50 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907. No conflict need arise in the rare cases of the exercise of these extended jurisdictions between the High Courts, if due regard be had to the courtesies usual between Courts, as in the case of Charu Chandra Mazumdar v. Emperor (10), in which jurisdiction was exercised within the territories under the Bombay High Court by the Calcutta High Court under the Criminal Procedure Code. It has finally been contended that the strict construction would be contrary to the practice in England. But the words "apply to that Court" in section 4 of the English Act of 1889 have been altered to "apply to the Court" in the Indian Act of 1899. The former words would refer to the trial Courts, though the matter would appear to have been free from doubt at the time of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899. The doubts expressed in the case of Runciman v. Smith (8) would not appear to have been settled until the case of Morriston Tinplate Co. v. Brooker (7). It must, therefore, be presumed that the latter words, which would refer strictly to the Arbitration Courts, were purposely adopted by the Indian Legislature to remove all doubts and vest the jurisdiction in the Arbitration Courts. This conclusion would appear to be confirmed by the remarks of Sir Griffiths Evans and the Hon'ble Mr. Chalmers, if it is permissible to look at them in the proceedings in the Indian Legislative Council reported at page 63 of part 6 of the Gazette of India of the 4th March 1899.

SECOND APPEAL PETITION No. 5 OF 1918-19.

March 22, 1919.

PIRTHI SINGH—APPELLANT

versus

BEDA—RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 194—Lease by some of several co-sharers—Tenancy, whether constituted.

To constitute a tenancy under a lease, the lease must be granted by all the co-sharers. A lease by any number of co-sharers short of the total number would not operate to constitute a tenancy.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Agra Division, dated the 13th September 1918, in the case of declaration of tenure.

JUDGMENT.—The Commissioner has found as a fact that the appellant's sub-tenancy commenced from 1324 F. after Beda respondent had obtained possession of his share in the occupancy holding. The question then is whether the appellant became a tenant under a term which was granted to him by Girdhari and Khumani only and not by Beda. Section 194 of the Tenancy Act seems to supply the answer to the question. The tenant-in-chief was the whole body of co-sharers in the occupancy holding. A lease by any number of co-sharers short of the total number would not operate to constitute a tenancy. I agree with the finding of the Commissioner and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Maharaja Bahadur KESHO PRASAD SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation (XI of 1825), s. 4—Accretion, what is—Riparian rights—Custom—Boundary between estates—Deep stream, whether boundary—Shahabad District.

After recession and encroachment by the river Ganges, the land washed away and afterwards reformed on the old ascertained site is not land gained by increment, within the meaning of section 4 of Regulation XI of 1825. [p 148, col. 1.]

In the Shahabad District, in the locality on the south bank of the river Ganges, where the Maharaja of Dumraon owns a large tract of land, there is no custom by which the deep stream of the river is recognised as the boundary between estates on each side of the river. [p 151, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad.

Mr. Kulwant Sahai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Fakhruddin, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—These appeals arise out of three suits brought in respect of 1650, bighas of land situated in the District of Shahabad. The plaintiff, who is the Maharaja of Dumraon, is the proprietor of a large tract of land lying on the south bank of the Ganges, and his case, as made in the plaint, is that the land in suit has gradually accreted to three of his Mouzahs Sonbarsa, Issurpura and Ojhawallia and that by virtue of a custom obtaining in that locality the deep stream of the river Ganges is the boundary between the districts of Balliah and Shahabad and between the lands of the proprietors on both sides of the river. The defendants in the suits are the proprietors of two Mouzahs, Pandepur and Bans Gopal Chapra, which were originally situated in the District of Balliah on the north side of the river, and their contentions shortly are that the land in suit is not a gradual accretion to the Mouzahs Sanbarsa, Issurpura and Ojhawallia, but that it is a re formation in situ of their Mouzahs Pandepur and Bans Gopal Chapra, which were suddenly diluviated and as suddenly re-formed on the south of the river.

The suit was in the first instance decreed ex parte in favour of the plaintiff, but on appeal this decree was set aside and the suit was remanded for decision of the issues which were involved in the suit. The findings on these issues have now been returned and are in favour of the defendants. The result is that the plaintiff is now in the position of an appellant. I may note that the proprietors of Bans Gopal Chapra have not appealed as this Mouzah, we are informed, has been purchased by Government. We are concerned in these appeals, therefore, with the land which is alleged by the defendants to be a re-formation in situ of the Mouzah Pandepur only.

In the suit there were three main questions for decision and these are also the main questions for decision in these appeals:—

1. Whether the land in suit is a gradual accretion to the plaintiff's Mouzahs caused by the Ganges gradually receding northward?

2. Whether the land in suit is a re-formation in situ of the defendants' Mouzahs Pandepur and Bans Gopal Chapra; and

3. Whether there is a custom that the deep stream of the river Ganges is the boundary between the estates on each bank of the Ganges?

With regard to the first point a mass of evidence, both oral and documentary, has been adduced to show that the Ganges has been receding northward in this locality for the last 20 years and that the lands on the north bank have been diluviated while there has been a considerable accession of land to the estate of the Maharaja of Dumraon on the south bank of the river. The formation of the land in suit is said to have begun in the year 1894 and to have been completed in the year 1901. It is impossible to say exactly how much land diluviated on the north bank of the river and how much new land was formed on the south bank of the river during the period, but it appears that Pandepur was completely diluviated between the years 1892 and 1900 and during this period the plaintiff's Khasras show accretions of about 1780 bighas to Issurpura, between 600 and 700 bighas to Sonbarsa and between 700 and 900 bighas to Ojhawalia. The river frontages of Issurpura, Sonbarsa and Ojhawallia were apparently about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles, $\frac{1}{2}$ mile and $\frac{1}{2}$ mile respectively and the first question is whether new formations of this magnitude can be treated as gradual accretions within the meaning of Regulation XI of 1825 or not. It is settled law in England that in order to be an accretion, land must be formed by gradual, slow and imperceptible degrees. The leading case on the point is Rex v. Yarborough (1), and "imperceptible" in that case was explained as meaning imperceptible in progress, i.e., step by step as the accretion is formed and not imperceptible in the result after a long lapse of time. It would appear, therefore, that it is not the extent of the land formed which would decide whether newly formed land is an accretion or not, but the manner in which the formation takes place. The question of accretion in India has been the subject of many decisions by the Privy Council, but in none of them has the question of what extent of newly formed land can be called an accretion been considered. In Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (2) the language of the English Law, that accretion should be gradual, slow and imperceptible, was apparently adopted but that was a case in which the land, which formed part of a Mouzah on the bank of the Ganges was wholly diluviated, after diluvion there was a subsequent diluvion and finally a recession of the river which left the land originally diluviated re formed on its original site. The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council was that the land diluviated and subsequently re formed in situ was not an accretion. The question, therefore, of whether accretion should be "slow and imperceptible" did not arise in that case, nor did it arise in Nogender Chunder Ghose v. Mahomed Esoff, the Collector of Chittagong (3) in which the language used is the same. This language has also been used in other cases in India, but in none of them do we find that the question has really arisen. It is by no means clear, therefore, that it has ever been the law in India that accretion must be "slow and imperceptible." In the Regulation the expression used is "gradual" and if indeed it was the law in this country that it must also be "slow and imperceptible," this view has been materially modified by the latest decision of the Privy Council, Srinath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (4). This was a case regarding a fishery and although the question of accretion did not directly arise, Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (2) and the other leading cases on the subject of accretion were discussed before their Lordships and Lord Sumner in his judgment, after pointing out that under the different conditions prevailing in the case of the English and Indian rivers what would be almost miraculous in the case of the former is normal and commonplace in the case of the latter, remarked:—"It is to be observed that here too Indian law, doubtless guided by local physical conditions, has adopted a rule varying somewhat from the rule established in this country. Where under English conditions the rule applies to 'Imperceptible' alterations, Regulation XI of 1825, Articles 1 and 4, speak of 'Gradual accession.' The analogy of the English rule can hardly be prayed in aid when Indian Legislation has thus an established and different rule on the same subject." It would thus appear that a distinct difference between the law in England and the law in India has been recognized by their Lordships of the Privy Council. The reason for the difference is ascribed to local physical conditions, and in interpreting the law of alluvion in India we should be guided by these local physical conditions. The question of the extent of newly formed land which can be held to be an accretion was discussed in the case of Secretary of State v. Rajah of Vizayanagaram (5). In that case, Ayling, J., remarked: "I do not think we should be justified in refusing to recognize plaintiff's title to the land thus formed on the ground of the comparative rapidity with which the formation took place. No doubt the reported decisions of the English Courts would seem to indicate that they would refuse to treat such a formation as an accretion, if it occurred in an English river. An addition of over 600 acres in the course of a single flood season could not be described as slow and gradual according to the standard of additions by alluvion in English rivers. But there is nothing abnormal in such a phenomenon in Indian rivers: and although several cases have been quoted in which the Privy Council has dealt with claims to accretions by alluvion in Indian rivers, I find none in which this claim has been rejected merely on the ground of the extent of land thus newly formed and the shortness of the period occupied in formation." The mere fact then that land is formed in a period which would be impossible in England, would appear to be no reason why it should not be treated as a gradual accretion. In the present case the land which has been newly formed has varied from a very narrow strip to a strip which would extend to about three-quarters of a mile from the original bank of the river in one year. The evidence, however, is that this has been caused by the natural silting up of the river bed and not by any sudden change in the course of the river. I am, therefore, of opinion that if this had been the only point in the case, it would have been a case of gradual accretion and the plaintiff would have been entitled to succeed. The case, however, does not rest on the decision of this point.

The next question is the question of re formation in situ. Unfortunately we have not been supplied in this case with a map shewing the position of the land in suit on the revenue survey map. The result is that we have had to hear a lengthy discussion as to the position of the land in suit relative to Mouzah Pandepur and have ourselves had to compare a large number of maps; and although I am satisfied as to the result, I consider it was the duty of the parties to have had such a map prepared and of the Court to see that this was done. Although, as I have said, we have had to compare a large number of maps, I shall refer only to those on which I rely. These are Exhibits B, 267, 371 and 117. Exhibit B is a map prepared in the year 1903 by two Deputy Collectors—one from the district of Balliah and the other from the district of Shahabad. In this map is shown the course of the river, the position of the Mouzahs on the north side of the river, which had not then been diluviated, and the position of the Mouzahs which had been diluviated, and which had re-formed on the south side of the river, and from it we find Pandepur had in 1903 been completely diluviated and re-formed on the south of the river. There is no reason to doubt the correctness of this map and that the position of Pandepur has been correctly laid down, can be verified from a comparative examination of Exhibit 267, a dhur dhura map, which has been filed by the plaintiff himself. In this map Pandepur has not been relaid but the adjoining village of Nauranga has been relaid. Nauranga is shown on Exhibit B and if we superimpose one on the other, we find that Pandepur has been correctly relaid in Exhibit B. There is thus no doubt that Pandepur has been diluviated and re-formed south of the river in the position indicated in Exhibit B. The question, however, remains whether the land in suit is identifiable with the re-formed site of Pandepur. In order to discover whether this is so, it is necessary to examine the other two maps. I have referred to Exhibit 117 and Exhibit 371. Exhibit 117 is a map of the land in dispute prepared by the plaintiff and Exhibit 371 is also a map prepared for the purposes of this case, showing the position of the river Ganges in the years 1844, 1863, 1882 and at present, and also the positions of the Mouzahs of both sides of the river. This map shows the position of Pandepur on the south side of the river, and if we superimpose the map Exhibit B on this, we find that the position of Pandepur in Exhibit B is the same as the position of Pandepur in Exhibit 371. If we then take the permanent line of stations as shown in Exhibit 371 and superimpose on this the permanent line of stations as shown in Exhibit 117, we find that the land in dispute, as shown in this map (Exhibit 117), exactly corresponds with Pandepur as re-formed. There can thus be absolutely no doubt that the land in dispute in this suit is a re-formation in situ of Mouzah Pandepur on the south side of the river.

I have already referred to Lopez v.

Muddun Mohun Thakoor (2) and this decision has been invariably followed in cases of re-formation in situ. In this case, therefore, the land in suit being a re-formation in situ of Mouzah Pandepur, the plaintiff cannot succeed unless he can establish that by custom the deep stream of the Ganges is the boundary between estates on each side of the river.

In order to establish this plea of custom the onus is strongly on the plaintiff, and first it is necessary to consider what the custom alleged really is. In the plaint the custom pleaded seems to have been simply that the deep stream was the boundary between the districts of Balliah and Shahabad and of the Zemindaries and villages on either side of the river, and throughout the oral evidence it is this custom which has been deposed to. It is not now contended, however, that that is the invariable custom. It is said that it does not apply in the case of a sudden change in the course of the river and two other exceptions are admitted, viz., in cases between Parganas Bihia on the south and Doaba on the north and in the case of Mouza Shibpur which lies on both banks of the river. The custom then, which was originally set up, has now been considerably modified. The plaintiff himself does not seem to have been very clear as to what custom he wished to allege and even now there appears to be considerable doubt because, as will presently appear, the exception in cases between Doaba and Bihia appears to be itself subject to exceptions. It is difficult, therefore, to understand what the custom alleged really is. The oral evidence is of the kind usual in cases of this sort. A number of witnesses have been examined, who state that the boundary between estates on either side of the river is the deep stream and they are contradicted by an almost equal number of witnesses who state that when lands are re-formed in situ, they are taken possession of by the original owners. This evidence is of little value and it is impossible to rely on it, particularly as the custom deposed to is not the custom now alleged. What is most relied on by the plaintiff is Mr. Roberts' Settlement Report. Mr. Roberts was a Settlement Officer in the North-West Provinces and in the year 1882 he made a settlement of Ballia district in the course of which he made enquiries into the question of alluvion and diluvion throughout that portion of the Ganges flowing between Ballia and Shahabad, and in his Settlement Report he has embodied an interesting chapter on the subject. He made certain suggestions for an amendment of the law, which Government did not think it was possible to take action upon, but the report in so far as it relates to custom is evidence. The report states generally that with the exception of Pargana Doaba the deep stream custom applies throughout the whole course of the river between Balliah and Shahabad. This seems a clear enough statement, but when we come to look into details the matter is not as clear as it would at first sight appear. In the first place, there is an exception in the Mouzah Shibpur which is on both sides of the river. This Mr. Roberts explains by saying that Shibpur which was originally north of the river was diluviated, there was re-formation of the land on the south of the river and the Maharaja of Dumraon took as much of it as he could. He was unable, however, to take all and the Zemindar of Shibpur remained in possession of some two-thirds. With regard to Doaba he says that originally Doaba was a portion of the Pargana Bihia which was cut off by the river and the land on both sides of the river was in possession of the Maharaja of Dumraon. Consequently it did not matter whether the lands were treated as accretions or as re formations and the rule of re-formation was made to apply. The Pargana next to Bihia and east of it on the south side of the river is Pargana Arrah; here he says the deep stream custom prevails, but he further says that at the junction of Parganas Doaba, Bihia and Arrah, there is debatable land where it is impossible to say whether the law of re-formation in situ or the deep stream custom applies, the reason apparently being that in this debatable area the Maharaja of Dumraon insisted on the rule or the alleged custom as suited him best. On a reference to Appendix XII of the report, however, we find cases where Mouzahs of Parganna Doaba have been diluviated and have re-formed on the other side in Parganna Bihia, where they have been treated as accretions. These are exceptions to the exception to the alleged deep stream custom, and in this locality at all events it is clear that there is no certainty as to what the custom is or whether there is a custom at all. It is with this portion of the river that we are concerned in this case. The Mouzahs on the south side of the river to which Pandepur is said to have accreted are the three Mouzahs Issarpura, Sonbarsa and Ojhawallia. Pandepur was in Durjanpur but the Mouzah adjoining it on the south and east was Nauranga which was in Perganna Doaba and before Pandepur was diluviated, Nauranga had been diluviated. Now Issarpura, Sonbarsa and Ojhawallia are in Pargana Bihia and according to Mr. Roberts' report, therefore, Nauranga should have been treated as a re-formation in situ when it re-formed south of the river. It was, however, treated as an accretion. It was possibly not a matter of much consequence because Nauranga also belonged to the Maharaja of Dumraon, but it shows that there was very little certainty as to whether law or custom should prevail. The next Mouzah after Nauranga to be diluviated was Pandepur and it has been re-formed, as I have already said, on the south side of the river. If it is an accretion, therefore, it is not to the Mouzahs Sonbarsa, Issarpura and Ojhawallia, but to Nauranga, a Mouzah appertaining to Doaba. The case then becomes one between Doaba and Durjanpur, and in such a case it seems impossible to say that there is any custom. The fact is that at this point of the river, owing to the action of the plaintiff himself, the position is such that it is impossible to say whether there is a custom or not; certainly no custom has been established and under the circumstances the law as laid down in Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (2) must apply.

Two other minor points have been argued by Mr. Fakhruddin on behalf of the plaintiff. The first is that he is entitled to succeed by right of adverse possession. This plea is obviously untenable, however, because the land is not alleged to have completely re-formed until the year 1901, and this suit was instituted in December 1911. The other point is in regard to abandonment. It is contended that when Pandepur was diluviated, the proprietors were granted a remission of revenue on account of diluvion and this being so, it should be held that the Mouzah reverted to the public domain and consequently the defendants are not entitled to contest the suit. Now in the first place, if this contention were a good one, it is obvious that the plaintiff should have made the Secretary of State for India a party to the suit, as has been from the first contended by the defendants, and the suit would be bad for non-joinder of parties. There is, however, no force in the contention. Under the Board of Revenue Rules of the North-West Provinces, a proprietor, whose land is diluviated, may either have the name of the diluviated Mouzah struck off from the Collectorate Register of Mouzahs held by him, or he may have the name kept on the Register and retain his title by the payment of one Rupee a year. It appears from the evidence of one of the defendants, the only evidence on the point, that he adopted the latter alternative. No reason has been shown to us why this evidence should not be accepted and this being so, this contention of the plaintiff fails.

In the result then I would set aside the ex parte decrees and would decree these appeals with costs including costs of the remand, in so far as the disputed land is a re-formation in situ of Mouzah Pandepur.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 185—Revision—Board of Revenue, power of interference of—Gross and palpable error of law—Mistake of law, whether sufficient ground for interference.

ISHRI v. BHOLA SINGH.

It is only in cases of gross and palpable errors of law involving substantial injustice that the Board of Revenue will interfere in revision beyond the strict wording of section 185 of the Agra Tenancy Act. Mere mistakes in law do not warrant revisional action.

Application for revision of the order of the Commissioner, Rohilkhand Division, dated the 20th April 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—I have heard Pleaders and perused the evidence. The respondent Lila is the grandson of Kundan and grand nephew of Sewa, and there is no doubt that he has been cultivating along with their widows for more than 12 years. The family was originally joint. The applicant's case is that when Kundan predeceased Sewa, the whole interest in the holding passed to Sewa by survivorship. Act XII of 1881 was then in force, and Lila has no right to succeed Sewa, who died after Act II of 1901 had come into force. This might hold if the case before me were an appeal, but it is not and there has been no flaw in jurisdiction within the strict wording of section 185, Tenancy Act. The lower Courts may have made a mistake in law, but this alone does not warrant revisional action. The case is one in which more hardship would be caused by straining the wording of section 185 and accepting the application for revision than the reverse. It is only in cases of gross and palpable errors of law involving substantial injustice that the Board goes beyond the strict wording of section 185, and this is not one of those cases.

I reject the application, parties paying their own costs.

Application rejected.

Custom—Succession—Jats of Jullundur District—Daughters versus Collaterals of 5th degree—Gift to daughter, validity of.

Among Jats of the Jullundur District a daughter is not entitled to succeed as against collaterals of the 5th degree, and a gift of ancestral property by the widow of the last male owner to her daughter in the presence of such collaterals is invalid.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 15th December 1915, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Jullundur, dated the 26th March 1915, decreeing the claim.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Appellants.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, who are Jats of the Jullundur District, sue in this case for a declaration that a gift of land and a house made by Ishri, widow of their collateral Gurmukh Singh, to Achhro, her daughter by her first husband Sarmukh Singh, shall not affect their reversionary rights. Sarmukh Singh and Gurmukh Singh were brothers, and the plaintiffs are their collaterals in the fifth degree. The lower Courts have concurred in giving the plaintiffs a decree, holding the gift to be invalid. The defendants have appealed to this Court, having obtained a certificate from the District Judge.

It is contended on their behalf that the land is not shown to be ancestral, being entered in the name of Gurmukh Singh's father Kharku in the earliest settlement. But both the Courts below have agreed in finding that the land is ancestral, and the finding is justified by the entries in the settlement record. In the pedigree-table the names of the common ancestor and his ancestors as far back as Garab appear, and in the history of the village it is stated that Garab was the founder of the village. The presumption in these circumstances is that the land is ancestral.

As niece of the last male owner Achhro would clearly have no case at all, and even as the daughter of the former Sarmukh Singh, she has to show that she is entitled to succeed to ancestral property in the presence of collaterals of the 5th degree (the provisions of the riwaj-i-am being against the daughter) or that a gift of property to her by her mother is valid. The evidence, however, does not contain a single instance in her favour, and we agree, therefore, with the findings of the lower Courts that the gift is invalid, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 150, scope of—Attachment—Release of property in favour of particular person, whether authorised.

Property attached under section 150 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act cannot be released in any particular person's favour. The section contemplates the removal of an attachment, but provides for no inquiry or decision as to who is entitled to hold the property after release.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 20th May 1918, in the case of release of property.

JUDGMENT.—The Mahal was taken under attachment under section 150 of the Land Revenue Act and the attachment was maintained pending the decision of a civil suit between appellant and the respondent. The appellant had stated, vide Deputy Commissioner's order of 12th February 1918, that if the civil suit was decided against her she would no longer oppose the claims of the respondent.

The civil suit was decided against her and the Deputy Commissioner ordered the release of the property in favour of the respondent, though he (wrongly apparently) described her as the person from whose possession the property had been attached.

Section 150 of the Land Revenue Act does not provide for the release of property after attachment in any one's favour. It merely contemplates the removal of the attachment and provides for no enquiry and decision as to who is entitled to hold the property after its release.

The appellant is not entitled to object to the Deputy Commissioner's order, as it was made in pursuance of her own undertaking and in any case is not prejudiced by it. The appeal is dismissed summarily.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Public policy—Benami purchase by Police Officer while in service, validity of.

The benami purchase of a village by a Police Officer while in the service, though effected in contravention of the rules of the service, both under the Police Manual and the Government Servants' Conduct Rules, by which the purchaser is bound, is not void as being opposed to public policy under section 23 of the Contract Act, nor is it illegal inasmuch as such purchase is not prohibited by any Statute which imposes a penalty for doing or omitting to do an act for the protection of the public. The Government Servants' Conduct Rules are not statutory rules in this sense that they do not provide a penalty for a breach of them. [p. 154, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Raipur, in Civil Appeal No. 39 of 1916, dated the 11th April 1918, arising out of Civil Suit No. 89 of 1913, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Raipur, decided on 31st July 1916.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. S. Kotual, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case leading to this second appeal are sufficiently clear from the judgment of the two lower Courts, and I proceed at once to deal with the points which arise for decision in second appeal. In the first place, it has been pressed very strongly on behalf of the present appellants that the defendant-respondent No. 1 Debi Singh having been a Police Officer at the time of the benami purchase of the village, the said purchase by him was void under section 23 of the Indian Contract Act as being opposed to public policy. The Subordinate Judge dealt with this matter in paragraph 9 of his judgment, while the lower Appellate Court has discussed the point fully in paragraph 6 of its appellate judgment. The learned District Judge has in the present case followed the decisions of the Allahabad

High Court in Bhagwan Dei v. Murari Lal (1) and the other case decided on the same day of Kamala Devi v. Gur Dial (2). The argument advanced on behalf of the present appellants is that the benami purchase by Debi Singh having been effected in contravention of the rules of service both under the Police Manual and the Government Servants' Conduct Rules by which he was bound, that purchase was opposed to public policy. In these provinces the law applicable on the matter in point was discussed by Drake-Brockman, J. C., in Vithal v. Siwa (3). It seems to me that that case was clearly distinguishable from the present one. The ratio decidendi of the decision just quoted was that where by a Statute a penalty for doing or omitting to do any act is imposed solely or partly for the protection of the public, such act or omission is impliedly prohibited by the Statute and is illegal. I fully accept the position laid down by the learned Judicial Commissioner in the decision just quoted, but it is pertinent to point out that he was there dealing with the breach of the statutory rule made under a Statute, viz., the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act of 1881. In the present case the position is entirely different. Even if it be assumed that Debi Singh was bound by the Government Servants' Conduct Rules, these rules are not statutory rules in the sense that any penalty is expressly provided therein for a breach of them. No doubt in a case like the present the 1st defendant-respondent was liable to disciplinary action for his conduct in this connection; dismissal, reduction or some such punishment might have been awarded on him, but no statutory penalty is provided in the rules in question.

My attention has also been called on behalf of the appellants to section 10 of the Police Act: that provision lays down that no Police Officer shall engage in any employment or office without the consent in writing of the Inspector-General, but it is prefectly obvious that this provision has no application whatever in the present instance. An attempt wat made to develop an argument that the fact of Debi Singh having acquired the village would under the Land Revenue Act necessitate his being appointed Lambardar, but this contention can hardly be taken seriously—the contingency was a remote one. On the face of it, it is obvious that section 10 of the Police Act has no application to the present case. It has again been urged in this connection that a penalty is provided by law under section 169 of the Indian Penal Code for the case of a public servant who purchases or bids for property. Such an argument overlooks the facts that for the purposes of a conviction under that section the public servant must be legally bound not to purchase or bid for property, and a reference to the definition of the word "illegal" in section 43 of the Code will show that it could have no application in the present instance. The utmost that has been proved against Debi Singh in this connection is that he was bound by departmental rules not to purchase immoveable property without the sanction of his official superiors, but a breach of such rules has had no explicit penalty attached thereto in the rules in question, nor does a breach of them bring the delinquent under provisions like sections 168 and 169 of the Indian Penal Code. As I have said before, it is obvious that he was liable to departmental action but this is a wholly different matter. A very wide gulf has to be bridged before one could hold that any act by which a Government servant renders himself liable to departmental action is illegal or contrary to public policy.

It seems to me that the decision in Shiam Lal v. Ohhaki Lal (4) cannot now be considered as good law in the face of the later Allahabad decisions which I have quoted above.

Sir William Anson has classified the cases of contracts falling under the heads of those opposed to the public service as follows:—

(1) Agreements tending to injure the public service.

(2) Agreements which injure the state in its relation with other states.

(3) Agreements which pervert the course of justice.

(4) Agreements which tend to abuse of legal process.

(1) 36 Ind. Cas. 259; 39 A. 51; 14 A. L. J. 962.
(2) 36 Ind. Cas. 319; 39 A. 58; 14 A. L. J. 969.
(3) 15 Ind. Cas. 933; 8 N. L. R. 82.
(4) 22 A. 220; A. W. N. (1900) 30; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1177.

(5) Agreements which affect the freedom or security of marriage.

(6) Agreements in restraint of trade.

(7) Agreements which are contra bonos mores.

It might conceivably be contended that a case, like the present, of a Police Officer buying land in defiance of departmental orders would fall under the first of these heads. It has, indeed, been urged on behalf of the appellants that the presumption must be that a Police Officer is supposed to devote his whole time to his duties, and that the acquisition of landed property must inevitably interfere with the efficient discharge of his duties. Just as the learned Judge in the 39 Allahabad case quoted above (2) decided that an assignment of a mortgage a Patwari could not be brought under any of the heads I have mentioned, so also I think that in the case of a late Police Officer it would be impossible to hold that this benami purchase by him could be held to be an agreement tending to injure the state. So far as the argument that a Police Officer must devote his whole time to his duties is concerned, it may be pointed out that under the Government Servants' Conduct Rules on which Counsel for the appellants has relied in support of his case, the acquisition of immoveable property by Government servants is permitted under certain restrictions. Debi Singh no doubt acted dishonestly and in contravention of the rules of his department in making the benami purchase of Mauza Banjari in the way he did, but it seems to me to be impossible to hold that he acted illegally. He broke no law or rule having the force of law, and, therefore, the decision in Vithal v. Siwa (3) cannot be applied with propriety in the present case. On this point, therefcre, I concur with the learned District Judge in his decision that the benami purchase in question was not void under section 23 of the Indian Contract Act as being opposed to public policy.

The next contention raised on behalf of the present appellants concerns the question of estoppel. The purchase took place in 1911 and up to 1913 (see Exhibit D—20) the village remained in his name. It is urged that the defendant-respondent No. 2, Kripal Singh was a man of no standing and that the appellants made advances as debts on behalf of cloth largely on the strength of his having acquired the village. It is urged in this connection that Debi Singh, having held out to all the world that Kripal Singh was the owner of Banjari, is now estopped from asserting his own title. I find, however, that I have very little to say on this matter in view of the careful finding of the learned District Judge in paragraphs 8 to 10 of his judgment. It seems to me that the appellants have failed to establish the fact that they made the advances they did to Kripal Singh on the strength of his having acquired this village, and the evidence as a whole largely negatives any such theory. Indeed, 1st appellant as P. W. No. 1 admits that advances have been made to Kripal Singh from 1908 onwards, that is, three years before the benami purchase. Even on the appellant's evidence alone, considerable ground arises for believing that he had an inkling of the real state of matters. He admits, for example, that he had dunned both the defendants-respondents for the amount of advances made to Kripal Singh, and his evidence as a whole seems to me quite inconsistent with the theory that he was under an innocent belief that the defendant No. 2, Kripal Singh, was the sole and real owner of Mouza Banjari. For these reasons, as well as for reasons given by the lower Appellate Court, I do not think that any question of estoppel arises in the present case.

Lastly it has been urged that the plaintiffs-appellants should not have been saddled with costs in this appeal and these were wrongly assessed ad valorem in view of the fact that the suit was largely a declaratory one. I can, however, see no reason for varying the order of the lower Courts in this respect. Costs were assessed on the Court-fees as paid in the case, and there is nothing to show that the Subordinate Judge exercised wrongly the discretion which vested in him. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs on the appellants.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 181, 182 —Pre-emption decree, execution of—Limitation, commencement of.

A person who obtains a conditional decree for pre-emption or for redemption of a mortgage can execute his decree at any time as soon as he pays the purchase-money or the mortgage-money which the decree requires him to pay But till he makes such a payment the decree is not capable of execution in his favour. The payment of the money is, therefore, a necessary step-in-aid of execution, and an application tendering the money in order that the decree-holder may be able to apply for possession forms a fresh starting point for limitation, whether Article 181 or 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies to the case. JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in this appeal is whether an application for execution of a decree for pre-emption can be made within 3 years from the date when payment is made in pursuance of the decree. The decree in question was passed on the 22nd January 1915. It directed the decree-holder to pay the purchase money within three months. Within the prescribed period the decree-holder tendered the purchase-money. The application tendering the money was made by him on the 15th April 1915 and the money was actually deposited on the 19th April 1915. On the next day the Court directed notice to issue to the judgment debtor to inform him of the deposit and to require him to withdraw the money from Court. The decree-holder filed the necessary talbana for the issue of the notice. The notice was served on the judgment-debtor and it is not disputed that he subsequently withdrew the money on the 31st May 1915.

The present application for execution was made on the 11th April 1918, which the Court of first instance allowed but the lower Appellate Court disallowed.

The learned Counsel, who appears for the decree-holder appellant, relies on the decisions in Chhedi v. Lalu (1) and Narhar Raghunath v. Krishnaji Govind (2). In the former case it was held that the right of a decree holder in such a case to apply for possession accrues when he pays the purchase-money in pursuance of the decree obtained by him and that till he makes such a payment there is no decree capable of execution. In the latter, an application to enforce the personal remedy granted by a decree, in case the sale-proceeds of the mortgaged property proved to be deficient, was held to be unaffected by section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code till the decree became ripe for execution so far as the personal remedy was concerned, and it was laid down that the limitation provided by that section could only be computed from the date when the decree became so ripe for execution in all its parts.

On behalf of the judgment-debtor-respondent reliance is placed on the decision in Etyati Pooparambil Bava v. Matalakot Krishna Menon (3) which has been followed in Jageshar Singh v. Raja Bhagwan Bakhsh Singh (4) and Ajudhia Singh v. Drigpal Singh (5).

It is obvious, however, that a person who obtains a conditional decree for pre-emption or for redemption of a mortgage can execute his decree at any time as soon as he pays the purchase-money or the mortgage money which the decree requires him to pay. But till he makes such a payment, the decree is not capable of execution in his favour. The payment of the money is, therefore, in any view of the matter a necessary step in-aid of execution, and an application tendering the money in order that the decree-holder may be able to apply for possession forms a fresh starting point for limitation, whether Article 181 or 182 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) is applied to the case.

Order XX, rule 14, of the Code of Civil Procedure, which prescribes the form in which decrees for redemption should be prepared, specifically lays down that the title of a person who obtains a decree for pre-emption to the property which he seeks to pre-empt does not accrue before the date on which he makes the payment which the decree requires him to make, and in that view of the matter an application tendering the requisite money, the payment of which would enable him to take the necessary step in enforcement of the decree, must be treated as an application to take a necessary step in aid of execution and the present application for execution which is within three years from the date of that payment is not barred by time.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed, the order passed by the lower Appellate Court is set aside, and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Held, (1) that the plaintiffs' suit was undoubtedly in part one under Order XXI, rule 63 of the Civil Procedure Code, but that they were not, because of an order under Order XXI, rule 61 of the Code, incompetent to institute a suit for a declaration under the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act; [p. 158, col. 2.]

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In the present case the facts necessary to state are that certain houses of one Dewa Singh, an agriculturist and the father of the appellants, were attached in execution of a decree against him. Dewa Singh objected and claimed exemption for the houses under section 60 (1) (c) of Act V of 1908, but his objection was disallowed. His sons, the present appellants, also filed objections under Order XXI, rule 58, of the Code of Civil Procedure claiming that they were in possession of the property attached as owners. Their claim was disallowed, and they then instituted a declaratory suit alleging that their claim had been wrongly disallowed, that the land was ancestral, that they had built certain of the houses which, therefore, belonged to them, that the debts contracted by their father, a drunkard, were without consideration and necessity and that the houses were exempt from attachment and sale by virtue of section 60 (1) (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure, and a declaration to the effect that the houses were not liable to attachment and sale was prayed for.

The Munsif, treating the case as one under the customary law, held that the houses had not been built by the plaintiffs and that the debts incurred by Dewa Singh were not immoral, but, holding the houses were those of an agriculturist, he declared that certain of the houses were not liable to attachment and sale.

The lower Appellate Court held that the question of the debts being immoral and without necessity and consideration did not arise, because the houses had not yet been sold and the suit was not one for a declaration under the customary law, that the decision in Jagdip Singh v. Bawa Narain Singh (1) was inapplicable inasmuch as Dewa Singh was alive, that the houses had not been built by the plaintiffs, that no claim of joint ownership with Dewa Singh had been made, and that the plaintiffs had no locus standi to claim the exemption relating to houses of agriculturists, because only a judgment-debtor was competent to do so and it, therefore, accepted the appeal.

In this Court a large number of points have been argued at length. In my view of the case it is not necessary to deal with them all, however interesting they may be. It is contended that the suit was one under Order XXI, rule 63, and it was not competent for the plaintiffs to sue on the basis of any claim other than the claim which had been disallowed under Order XXI, rule 61, and in support of this contention reference is made to Colvin Cowie v. Mrs. Barbara Owen Julia Elias (2). But this decision does not support the contention. In that case, as in this, the claim was of a two-fold nature, one based on the statutory right given to institute a suit when a claim in execution has been disallowed and the other a claim for a declaration. It was admitted and held in that case that the claim in a suit based on that statutory right must be substantially the same right as that for which the party had contended in the execution proceedings, but it was nowhere held that under such circumstances a claim to a declaration was not competent. On the contrary, the claim was considered and was dismissed merely on the ground that, in that particular case, there was no cause of action such as entitled the plaintiffs to the declaration which they sought, because the defendant had never by any act of his impugned or disturbed the title which the plaintiffs were setting up in their suit. The present case falls under the same category. The plaintiffs had, in their plaint, set out the facts relating to the disallowance of their claims, and undoubtedly their suit was in part one under Order XXI, rule 63, but that is no ground for holding that they were because of an order under Order XXI, rule 61, incompetent to institute a suit for a declaration under the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

Reference is also made to Abdul Kader v. Ali Meah (3) and to Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (4). In the latter case the question related to the proper Court-fee for a suit under section 283 of Act XIV of 1882, which section relates to the same matter as Order XXI, rule 63, and their Lordships of the Privy Council found that fortunately the object and nature of that suit was not dubious, and that the suit was one "to alter or set aside a summary decision or order." Their Lordships explained that "It is true that, instead of asking the Court to alter or set aside the decree which is the cause of action, she categorically asks from the Court the several decrees which she had asked from the Subordinate Judge, and which the Subordinate Judge had refused. But this is merely a verbal or formal difference, and section 283 of the Civil Procedure Code, under which section the action is brought, recognises such a suit as not merely an appropriate but the only mode of obtaining review in such cases." This decision is, I think, easily distinguishable. The claims in the two Courts were the same and it was expressly found, in that particular case and for the reasons stated, that the suit was one under section 283. The facts here are different. The claim disallowed was one based solely on possession by virtue of ownership. The judgment in Abdul Kader v. Ali Meah (3) takes the matter no further. In that judgment reference is made to the above decision, and it is explained that the summary decision in a claim case is confined to a consideration of the possession of the judgment-debtor at the time of the attachment and that any other discussion in such a decision is material only so far as it is relevant to the determination of that essential matter. It was pointed out that in both Courts the claim related to possession.

In my opinion, the lower Appellate Court clearly erred in holding that the suit was not one under customary law. Not only does this appear from the plaint but throughout the proceedings in the first Court the suit was treated as of that nature and the issues and evidence were directed to that end.

But, in my opinion, the appeal must fail on the ground that the suit was premature, and such was the decision of the lower Appellate Court when it briefly remarked that the houses had not yet been sold. No authority has been given that under customary law a suit for a declaration will lie when ancestral property has been merely attached in execution of a decree with a view to sale but not sold. In Sadhu Singh v. Secretary of State (5) the property had been both attached and sold. An attachment cannot be regarded as an alienation. It may be argued that an attachment infringes the right of a judgment-debtor, but does this give a cause of action under customary law to the reversioners? I am not aware of any such right.

For the above reasons I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

A mortgagee cannot, during the continuance of the mortgage, hold possession of the mortgaged property adversely to the mortgagor. [p. 160, col. 1.]

If, therefore, a mortgagee makes a temporary transfer of the mortgaged property by way of mortgage or lease, purporting to do so as proprietor, but recovers possession of the property before his mortgagee or lessee has acquired any adverse title, his position is just what it was before the mortgage or lease was made, and a suit for redemption of the mortgage by the original mortgagor would be governed by Article 148, Schedule I, to the Limitation Act. [p. 160, cols. 1 & 2.]

It is only when a puisne mortgagee redeems a prior mortgage that the question of subrogation arises—the doctrine of subrogation has no application where the mortgagor himself, or his successor-in-interest, redeems the mortgage. [p. 160, col. 1.]

A purchaser at an auction-sale is not entitled to the benefit of Article 134 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, even though the sale purports to transfer not merely the mortgagee rights which the judgment-debtor really possessed but the entire proprietary rights. [p. 160, col. 2.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Wazir Hasan, for the Appellants.

Babu Basudev Lal, for Respondent Nos. 3, 4 and 7.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in a suit for redemption of a mortgage. The only point which has been gone into by the Court below is one of limitation, the question being whether the suit is governed by Article 148 or by Article 134. The date of the original mortgage is given in the plaint as 21st December 1856. The suit was instituted on 12th December 1916 so that if it is governed by Article 148, it is, on the allegations n the plaint, just within time. The parties to the original mortgage were the mortgagor Husain Bakhsh now represented by the plaintiff-appellant and the mortgagee Mohammad Hadi. The mortgage was usufructuary. Mohammad Hadi's interest descended to his grandson Mohammad Abid, now represented by the respondents other than Din Dayal and Ajudhia Prasad, respondents Nos.3 and 7. Apparently the name of the mortgagee was entered in the Khewat as the proprietor and the fact that his interest was that of the mortgagee was lost sight of. At any rate it is an admitted fact that in the year 1893 Mohammad Abid, purporting to be full owner of the property, mortgaged it with possession as part of a large property in favour of one Puttu Lal. In the year 1902 the proprietary interest, subject only to the mortgage in favour of Puttu Lal, was put up to sale in execution of a simple money decree against Mohammad Abid and bought by the answering respondents Din Dayal and Ajudhia Prasad. The purchasers subsequently on 1st July 1904 redeemed Puttu Lal's mortgage and obtained actual possession of the mortgaged property. The present suit was brought more than 12 years after this transaction. If, therefore, Article 134 applies, the suit is clearly barred whether limitation is recognized from the mortgage in favour of Puttu Lal or from the redemption of that mortgage, or from the date of the respondents' purchase.

The appeal really involves two questions:—

(1) whether the respondents are entitled to the benefit of Article 134 by reason of their purchase at the auction-sale, and

(2) whether they are entitled to step into the shoes of Puttu Lal by reason of having redeemed his mortgage.

The second is the position taken by the learned Munsif. The learned Judge has taken a third view, namely, that Puttu Lal's mortgage became extinguished within twelve years of the date on which the mortgage was made. This view is, I think, untenable. A mortgagee cannot, during the continuance of the mortgage, hold possession adversely to the mortgagor. If, therefore, the original mortgagee makes a temporary transfer by way of mortgage or lease, purporting to do so as proprietor, but recovers possession before his mortgagee or lessee has acquired any adverse title, his position is just what it was before the mortgage or lease was made and the application of Article 148 is in no way affected. By their purchase at the auction sale the respondents became the successors-in-interst of Mohammad Abid and they cannot by redeeming Puttu Lal's mortgage acquire any greater rights than he would have had. It is only when a puisne mortgagee redeems a prior mortgage that the question of subrogation arises. A mortgagor who redeems a mortgage by himself cannot claim subrogation, nor can the person who succeeds to his interest. The effect, therefore, of the redemption of Puttu Lal's mortgage was to extinguish it.

The first question must also be answered against the respondents. There is considerable authority for the view that a purchaser at an auction-sale is not entitled to the benefit of Article 134, even though that sale purports to transfer not merely the mortgagee right which the judgment-debtor really possessed but full proprietary right. This was decided by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Ahamed Kutti v. Raman Nambudri (1) and the same view has been taken by the Allahabad High Court in Sheo Nath Singh v. Mahipal Singh (2) and by the Bombay High Court in Pandu v. Vithu (3). The view taken by this Court has been that a purchaser at such a sale cannot acquire a larger interest than was possessed by the judgment debtor whose interest he acquires.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed with costs and the case remanded to the lower Appellate Court under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for disposal of the remaining issues. Other costs will abide the result.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 89—Execution of decree—Sale—Application to set aside sale—Deposit made but not received by Court within thirty days—Sale, whether should be set aside.

The property of a judgment-debtor was sold by auction on 20th March. On 20th April he applied to the sale officer to set aside the sale and offered to deposit the decretal amount and the penalty mentioned in rule 89 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code. The sale officer, not being competent to entertain the application, forwarded it on 22nd April to the Court which had ordered the sale. On 23rd April the judgment-debtor applied to the Court asking that the money might be received. The Court did not receive the money and ordered the matter to come before it on 30th April. The money was deposited on 1st May, but the Court refused to set aside the sale on the ground that the deposit had not been made within thirty days of the sale. This order was reversed by the Appellate Court and the High Court was moved in revision, it being contended that the Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to make the order it did as no deposit had been made within thirty days :

Held, that the actual delay in the deposit of the money was not due to any act on the part of the judgment-debtor, and that, although the deposit was actually made on 1st May, he had brought the money into Court on 20th April, and that the Appellate Court was, therefore, justified in setting aside the sale. [p. 162, col. 1.]

Civil revision from an order of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 2nd August 1918.

Mr. Jang Bahadur Lal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision and has been brought under the following circumstances. The property of the respondent-judgment-debtor was sold by auction on the 20th of March 1918. The sale was held by the Revenue Court as sale officer under the orders of the Civil Court. On the 20th of April 1918 the judgment-debtor filed an application before the sale officer offering to deposit the decretal amount and the penalty mentioned in Order XXI, rule 89, of the Code of Civil Procedure and prayed that the sale might be set aside. The sale officer was not competent to entertain the application and accordingly made an order that the application be forwarded to the Munsif's Court which had ordered the sale. As a matter of fact the application was not actually sent to the Munsif's Court until the 22nd of April 1918. On the 23rd of April 1918 the judgment-debtor filed an application in the Munsif's Court, in which he referred to the application presented by him on the 20th of April 1918 and stated that he had brought all the money that was required to be deposited and prayed that it should be received. The Munsif did not receive the money but passed an order to the effect that the case should be put up on the 30th of April 1918. He said in his order that "so far the money had not been deposited." It is clear that had the Court received the money, it would have been deposited as the judgment-debtor distinctly said in his application that he had the money ready and he asked the Court in clear terms to receive it. On the 1st of May 1918 the money was actually deposited. The Court of first instance refused to set aside the sale, on the ground that the deposit had not been made within thirty days of the sale. This order of the Court of first instance has been reversed by the lower Appellate Court. The contention in this application is that the order of the lower Appellate Court was without jurisdiction as no deposit had been made within thirty days. In my opinion the application is untenable. As has been already stated, the judgment-debtor had, on the 20th of April 1918, stated to the sale officer before whom he by an error put in his application of that date that he had the money ready for deposit and he asked that it should be deposited. Had the application been forwarded to the Munsif's Court on the same date as directed by the sale officer, the deposit would have been made on that date, the judgment-debtor having been ready to make the deposit on that date. On the 23rd of April also he stated that he had the money with him, that he was ready to deposit it and he asked the Court to receive the money. The Court, however, did not do so. Therefore, the delay in the actual deposit of the money was not due to any act on the part of the judgment-debtor. He brought the money on the 20th of April and was ready to deposit it if the Court had received it. Therefore, it must be held that although the deposit was actually made on the 1st of May he had brought it into Court on the 20th of April. Under these circumstances the lower Appellate Court was justified in setting aside the sale. I see no reason to interfere. Furthermore an order in revision is a matter in the discretion of the Court and having regard to the circumstances of this case and to the fact that no injustice has been done, I see no reason to exercise my discretion in favour of the applicant. I accordingly reject the application. I make no order as to costs.

Application rejected.

Musammat ZAIBUNNISSA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS--APPELLANTS

Musammat HASARATUNNISSA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND ZAHID HUSSAIN—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (I of 1872*)*, ss. 35, 114, ill. (e)—Death register, entry in, admissibility of—Register, entry in, value of—Presumption as to regularity of judicial acts—Evidence, contrary, effect of—U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901*)*, s. 233 (k)—Partition proceeding—Civil suit, maintainability of.

An entry made in the register of deaths, maintained under paragraph 367 of the Police Regulations, is an official entry made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty and as such is admissible in evidence under section 35 of the Evidence Act. [p. 163, col. 2]

An entry in such register is, as a rule, reliable to within a few days, and even where the date is not absolutely exact, the entry is often most valuable evidence where the question is as to the relative order in which certain deaths took place. [p. 164, cols. 1 & 2.]

The principle that all acts of a Court should be presumed to have been regularly done is a correct principle, where there is no evidence to the contrary. Where, however, on an examination of the record itself, it appears that a party was not properly served, the principle has no application. [p. 164, col. 2.]

Section 233 (k) of the Land Revenue Act bars a civil suit if the plaintiffs were parties to the partition and were properly represented, but not if they were not parties or were not properly represented. [p. 164, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 25th February 1918, modifying that of the Additional Munsif, Fyzabad, dated the 30th June 1917.

Mr. H. Husain, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in a suit for the possession of certain property in certain villages in the Fyzabad district. The following pedigree will explain the position of the parties :—

ALI HUSAIN=Musammat SAERA BIBI.
(DIED IN 1907)—(DIED IN 1912.)

- Musammat Badran, | Musammat Bittan.
- Zahid Husain, defendant No. 6.
- Mumtaz Husain=Musammat Zaibunnissa, defendant No. 1
  - Musammat Ashrafunnissa, defendant No. 2.
  - Musammat Shafiqunnissa, defendant No. 3.
  - Musammat Shafiunnissa, defendant No. 4.
  - Musammat Samiunnissa, defendant No. 5.
- Ghaffar Husain died in 1912=Musammat Hasratunnissa, plaintiff No. 1
  - Irshad Husain, plaintiff No. 2.
  - Amjad Husain, plaintiff No. 3.

ZAIBUNNISSA v. HASARATUNNISSA.

After the death of Ali Husain his three sons were recorded as owners to the extent of one third i. e., 5 annas 4 pies each. Musammat Saera Bibi was ignored and the share in dispute is part of that which according to Muhammadan Law devolved on her on her husband's death.

Four pleas are urged in appeal, namely :—

(1) By custom widows are excluded from inheritance in the presence of children and that, therefore, Musammat Saera inherited no share at all.

(2) That Musammat Saera Bibi survived her son, Ghaffar Husain, the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs and that, therefore, they are not entitled to any part of her share.

(3) That Musammat Badran, the daughter of Ali Husain, was entitled to a legal share in the property of her mother, Musammat Saera Bibi, and

(4) That the suit is barred under section 233 (k) of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, 1901, by reason of a partition which took place.

It is unnecessary to go into the first and third of the above issues, as they were not raised in the Court below. In the opening sentence of the judgment of the learned District Judge it is expressly stated that the plea regarding the exclusion of Musammat Saera Bibi was abandoned before him.

As regards Musammat Badran an issue was framed by the learned Munsif in these terms :—

"Whether Badran is excluded under any custom set up by the plaintiffs, and if not, how does her presence affect this case?"

In deciding this issue the learned Munsif said :—

"I have no hesitation in holding that Musammat Badran was excluded from inheritance by virtue of the custom and she got no property on the death of Ali Husain."

The question whether she survived her mother or whether she was entitled to any property on the death of the latter was not considered. It is pointed out for the respondents that the expressions used in the riwaj-i am, "if any owner of property (sahib jaedad) dies...", are perfectly general and would apply as much to a mother as a father. However that may be, the question now raised as to Musamma Badran's right of inheritance to her mother was not taken at all either in the petition of appeal or in argument before the lower Appellate Court and as it might involve a question of fact which has not been gone into by the Courts below, it would not, in my opinion, be proper to allow it to be raised now:

The important issues are the second and fourth. The second issue looks like a pure question of fact, but the lower Courts have based their finding that Musammat Saera Bibi died a few days earlier than Ghaffar Husain largely on a register of deaths maintained under paragraph 367 of the Police Regulations, and the legal question raised is whether entries in that register are admissible in evidence under section 35 of the Evidence Act to prove that Musammat Saera Bibi predeceased her son.

The appellants rely specially on two rulings of this Court: Sampat v. Gauri Shankar (1) and Habib Ullah v. Emperor (2). The second ruling is not really an authority since the learned Judge, while stating that as at present advised he saw no reason to suppose that the ruling in Sampat v. Gauri Shankar (1) was erroneous, held that it was not necessary for him to consider the question because in the particular case before him the entry, even if admissible, proved nothing. The ruling in Sampat v. Gauri Shankar (1) passed in the year 1910 related to a Chaukidar's register and was based on the grounds

(1) That the entry in dispute was not made by the Chaukidar, and

(2) that it was not shown that it was made by any public servant in the discharge of his official duty or that it was the duty of any public servant to make it.

This ruling was doubted in Baldei v. Abhey Ram (3) and whatever the state of the law as to Chaukidars' death registers may have been in 1910, it is perfectly clear that the register of which a copy is before me is an official register made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty and as such is admissible under section 35. The case of Tamizuddin v. Taju (4) is a recent authority to the same effect. It is urged that even if this be the case, the entry is only evidence of the fact of the death and not of the date of it and further that even if it be allowed as evidence of the date, it is evidence of very little value.

(1) 10 Ind. Cas. 713; 14 O. C. 68.

As regards the former point, the form prescribed for this register contains a column for the date of death and it is, therefore, difficult to see how this entry could be excluded from evidence or held not to be made in the discharge of official duty. Rule 5 says that the report shall be made, if possible, on the day on which the death takes place, but that in rural circles they may be made at the periodical visits of the village Policeman to the Thana. The appellants' main reliance is on the second paragraph of rule 6 which runs as under:--

"When the village Policeman of a village comes to make his daily or his bi-weekly report, as the case may be, the Head Constable writer will ask him if any deaths have occurred in his beat since the date of his last report, and if any have occurred, he will enter them with details as under one or other of the prescribed heads. The writer (if there be nothing of a special nature leading him to suspect the accuracy of the report) need not require the exact day on which the man, woman or child reported as dead, died. The date on which the village Policeman's report is made will be assumed as the date of the death, this course of procedure being for all practical purposes of registration quite sufficient."

This, I take it, is not meant to excuse the Chaukidar from giving the correct date of death if he knows it. But if he does not know the exact date, the Thana Police will enter the date on which the report is made as being the date of the death, this being quite sufficiently near for practical purposes. I am quite prepared to admit the force of the appellants' argument that where the exact date of the death is of the highest importance and a difference of a day or two days is material (as for instance where there is a question of limitation), an entry in a register prepared on these lines would be an unsafe guide but the entry will as a rule be reliable to within a few days and even where the date may not be absolutely exact, the entry will often be most valuable evidence where the question is, as here, as to the relative order in which the deaths took place. Here the entry of Musammat Saera Bibi's death is dated April 1 and that of Ghaffar Husain April 5. The entries being, as appears from the Police Regulations, made bi-weekly, the probability is that the latter entry was made on a subsequent visit to the earlier one. As the learned Judge says, if Ghaffar Husain had been dead at the time when Musammat Saera Bibi's death was reported, it is in the highest degree unlikely that it should not have been mentioned. In any case if the entry is held admissible, the question of the amount of weight to be attached to it was one for the lower Appellate Court and would not be interfered with by this Court.

The last question is as to the effect of the partition. The case has been argued on both sides on the assumption, which I take to be a correct statement of the law, that if the plaintiffs were parties to the partition and properly represented, section 233 (k) of the Land Revenue Act stands in the way of the present suit but that if they were not parties or not properly represented, that section does not apply. In the present case it is admitted that the first plaintiff, Musammat Hasartunnissa, was not made a party in her personal capacity. The other two plaintiffs were minors and they appear to have been named as plaintiffs under her guardianship. The learned Munsif examined the partition file for himself, and he found that no order appointing her as guardian ad litem was ever passed, that there was no order holding that service on her as their guardian had been sufficient and that in fact it was apparent from the record itself that that service was insufficient. These findings have been accepted by the lower Appellate Court and it is not open to me to go behind them even if I were disposed to do so. The principle that all the acts of a Court should be presumed to have been regularly done is a correct principle where there is no evidence to the contrary, but where on an examination of the record itself it appears that a party was not properly served, the principle has no application.

KANSHI RAM v. TAGRA.

The appeal, therefore, fails and for the reasons given above I dismiss it with costs.

The respondents have filed a cross objection in regard to a point not hitherto touched on. The lower Courts have found that the first defendant, Musammat Zaibunnissa, is in lawful possession of a portion of the property in suit in lieu of her dower, and is entitled to hold it until that dower is paid. The respondents in their cross-objection asked that the amount of that dower should be determined and a decree for possession conditional on its payment passed in the present suit. This course was considered by the Courts below, who have pointed out that no offer was made by the plaintiffs in their replication or anywhere in the course of the proceedings to pay the amount of the dower debt, nor any request put forward in the pleadings for a conditional decree of the kind now asked for. Relying on the ruling in Amani Begum v. Muhammad Karim Ullah Khan (5) which is very much on all fours with the present case, they have declined to give such a decree and have left the question of dower to be determined in a separate suit. They are supported by the ruling on which they rely and no authority to the contrary has been shown me. I accordingly dismiss the cross-objection with costs.

Both Appeal and Cross objection dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 504 OF 1919.

May 13, 1919.

KANSHI RAM AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

TAGRA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Decree, construction of—Conditional decree, what is—Decree for possession, non-execution of, effect of—Suit for possession, whether maintainable.

A conditional decree is one in which it is provided that the decree-holder will be entitled to the relief granted only on condition of his doing something. [p. 166, cols 1 & 2.]

In a suit for possession of certain property and for recovery of its rent, it appeared that a previous suit had been compromised on the condition that the defendant was to remain in possession for three years and pay rent and perform service, and that, on the defendant's failure to do so, the plaintiff would be entitled to take possession before the expiry of three years, otherwise he could obtain possession by execution of the decree. On 15th March 1910, a decree was passed in accordance with the compromise and the defendant not having paid rent and having refused to vacate, the present suit was brought, it being alleged that the cause of action arose on the 15th March 1913, the date of the expiry of the three years:

Held, (1) that the decree of 1910 was not a conditional decree, but became absolute from the date on which it was passed; [p. 166, col 1.]

(2) that the remedy of the plaintiff was by execution of the decree obtained by him and not by a suit based on that decree. [p. 166, col. 2]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 20th November 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Fazilka, District Ferozepore, dated the 31st May 1918, dismissing the claim.

Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case briefly are that in 1910 the appellants, or their predecessors, instituted a suit for the recovery of the property now in dispute, on the allegation that in 1908 they had obtained a decree conditional on the payment of Rs. 30 which sum had been paid and possession obtained but forcible possession had again been taken by the defendant. This suit was compromised on the following terms: that the defendant should remain in possession for three years, that he should pay four annas a month to the plaintiffs and perform service, that if he failed to pay or render service the plaintiffs would be entitled to take possession before the expiry of the three years, otherwise the plaintiffs could obtain possession by execution of the decree. A decree was passed on the 15th March 1910 in accordance with the compromise. On the 4th March 1918 the plaintiffs instituted the suit out of which the present appeal arises. In their plaint the plaintiffs set out the facts of the compromise and decree and allege that the three years had expired but that the defendants refuse to vacate and have not paid rent. They prayed for arrears of rent and for possession, stating that the cause of action arose on the 15th March 1913, that is, the date of the expiry of the three years.

The Munsif dismissed the suit on the ground that the decree itself provided for possession being taken by execution, that the decree became absolute on the 15th March 1913, that the remedy of the plaintiffs had been by execution of the decree within three years of that date and that no fresh suit would lie. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the appeal for similar reasons but laying emphasis on the point that as the decree expressly provided that possession was to be obtained by execution, that was the only course open.

For the appellants it is argued that the plaintiffs had the right to sue on the determination of the tenancy whether the same be regarded as created by the decree or by agreement, that the provisions in the compromise and decree relating to the recovery of possession by execution was merely explanatory and so as to make it very clear that another suit would not be necessary, that the decree was a conditional one, that both the lower Courts had misapplied the judgment in Hafiz Baha-ud-Din v. Musammat Fatteh Bibi (1) and that the appellants had a fresh cause of action on the termination of the tenancy on the 15th March 1913. In support of these arguments reliance is placed on Ram Singh v. Nodh Singh (2) and Shamir v. Ladha Singh (3).

In my opinion this appeal cannot succeed. It is clear that the suit was based on the decree of 1910, and not on the original cause of action--no other cause of action was alleged. The decree of 1910 is not a conditional one. It was absolute from the date of the decree and not from the 15th March 1913. As held by the lower Courts, the decisions relied on for the appellants do not help them and, on the contrary, are against them. The leading case on the point is the Full Bench decision Ram Singh v. Nodh Singh (2), which has been referred to and followed by the Chief Court in more recent decisions. The matter is there fully explained and dealt with. In my opinion a conditional decree is one in which it is provided that the decree-holder will be entitled to the relief granted only on the condition of his doing something. The simplest example of such a decree is one granting possession of property on payment of a certain sum of money. In Ram Singh v. Nodh Singh (2) it was held that a conditional decree which is silent as to the consequences of an omission to satisfy the condition leaves it in the option of the decree holder to fulfil the condition; that if he does so he may take the benefit of the decree and that if he omits to do so, he shall not have the benefit of it but at the same time shall not be prejudiced by the omission. and that, therefore, he was competent to institute a fresh suit.

In the present case possession was deferred and in the meantime rent was to be paid and services rendered. This does not render the decree a conditional one. Even if, for the sake of argument, the decree be regarded as conditional, the plaintiffs can sue only on the original cause of action and not on the decree [Ram Singh v. Nodh Singh (2), Dewa Singh v. Harnam Singh (4), Hafiz Baha-ud-Din v. Musammat Fateh Bibi (1) and Shamir v. Ladha Singh (3)] and this has not been done.

Finally, it is urged that the area sued for now exceeds the area which formed the subject of the decree of 1910, that such excess was not governed by the decree of 1910 and the lower Appellate Court should have allowed the appellants to amend their plaint. In my opinion, the lower Appellate Court acted rightly in refusing the application at that stage, nor, as pointed out by him, could such amendment avail, as the suit was based on the previous decree and no facts were alleged with respect to the excess area on which a decree could be given.

I hold that the suit is barred. The remedy of the plaintiffs was by execution of the decree obtained by them. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

RAM BAHADUR SINGH—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 54, 66, 90—Execution of decree—Sale—Notice to judgment-debtor, absence of, effect of—Sale, whether can be set aside.

The mere absence of notice to a judgment-debtor of the intended sale of his property is not a material irregularity in the publication of the sale, within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code, sufficient of itself to justify the setting aside of the sale.

Reference made by the Commissioner of Benares Division.

ORDER.—The Commissioner recommends that a sale of immoveable property be set aside on the ground that the judgment-debtor did not receive the notice required by rule 66 (2), Order XXI, Schedule I, Civil Procedure Code.

The objection taken by the applicant in revision before the Collector was that there had been serious fraud and irregularities in the sale proceedings (which he did not specify); that the judgment-debtor had no knowledge from beginning to end either of the date of the sale or other proceedings; that other people also who wished to purchase got no information, with the result that the property was sold at a low price.

The Collector dismissed this objection on the ground that the applicant had received notice [found by the Commissioner to be the order served under rule 54 (i)] and that the property which was valued at Rs. 71 with encumbrances to the extent of Rs. 299-14-0 was sold for Rs. 81-7-3. The application for revision to the Commissioner was based on the ground that the proclamation was not properly served and the applicant had no knowledge of its service.

Under rule 67 (1) a proclamation is required to be made in the manner prescribed by rule 54, sub rule (2), which does not require particular notice to the judgment-debtor. There is no report by the Commissioner that the proclamation was not made according to law and this was not an objection taken in terms before the Collector. There is no statement from first to last by the applicant that the valuation of the property made by the Collector was incorrect. There is no statement of what the alleged defect was in the manner of making the proclamation. The ground on which the Commissioner bases his reference was not taken by the applicant at all.

The applicant has not established any prima facie case of any material irregularity or fraud in the conduct of the sale: still less of any substantial injury caused in consequence. I find no grounds for revision and direct that the records be returned.

Record returned.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 41 (3)—Death of minor—Court, power of, to direct guardian to deliver up property of minor to his widow.

A Court has no jurisdiction under section 41 (3) of the Guardians and Wards Act to make an order, on the death of a minor, directing his guardian to deliver up the property, papers and accounts in his possession to the widow of the minor. [p. 169, col. 1.]

Civil revision against the order of the District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 28th March 1919.

The Hon'ble Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Applicant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Uma Shankar Bajpai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

RYVES, J.—This is an application in civil revision to quash the order of the District Judge of Cawnpore, dated the 28th of March 1919, on the ground that it was passed without jurisdiction. It raises a question of difficulty and importance and appears not to be covered by authority. The order purports to have been made under section 41 (3) of the Guardians and Wards Act, Act VIII of 1890.

The facts are as follows :—In 1907 the present applicant, Kuar Chandra Bhukhan Singh, was appointed under the Act guardian of the property of the minor, his nephew, who had inherited a very valuable Zemindari estate which it is admitted is impartible. On the 23rd of November 1918 the minor died. Up to that time there had been no suggestion that the guardian had failed in any way to do his duty.

No sooner had the minor died, than litigation was started to determine who should succeed him. The two claimants were:—

(1) The widow of the minor, the opposite party here; and

(2) the applicant.

Both are claiming mutation of names in the Revenue Courts and the litigation is still pending.

On the 6th of March 1919 the widow of the minor filed an application in the District Judge's Court, in which she stated that "she was the sole heir of the minor and entitled as his widow to receive the entire property of the deceased minor." She further stated that "she believed that the guardian had withdrawn a sum of about Rs. 36,000 from the Allahabad Bank, Limited, standing in the minor's name and appropriated the same to his own use. She, therefore, prayed that the said guardian be called upon to deliver all moveable property and cash and documents and render accounts of the period of his guardianship and be prohibited from using or converting the property of the deceased ward in any manner whatsoever." She asserted that the immoveable property was already in her possession. The Court thereupon issued notice to the guardian to show cause why the application should not be granted.

The guardian, the applicant here, in his reply claimed that he was the heir. He denied that he had in any way wrongfully dealt with any monies belonging to the minor and stated that he had all along submitted accounts of his stewardship to the Court, the last accounts having been filed in July 1918. At the same time he protested against the Court's jurisdiction to pass the order prayed for against him as being beyond its jurisdiction. The Court made an enquiry of a very summary character, for I find that no evidence was recorded, and passed its order in the following terms:—

"I grant the application so far as it asks for property, papers and accounts in the possession of the guardian. The latter cannot under section 41 (3) be ordered to render accounts. For this a separate suit is necessary."

It may be noted here that the widow did not assert when the so called misappropriation of the Rs. 36,000 had been made, whether before or after the death of the minor. Nor has the Court come to any finding on this point. It says:—"It appears that he has drawn out in his own name some of the minor's money. He never informed this Court of his intention to do this." I presume that this was admitted by the applicant, for, as I have said, no evidence was taken. Assuming that this is a finding that the money standing in the minor's name had been withdrawn, there is no finding as to when this was done, whether before or after the minor's death.

The learned Judge seems to me to have been influenced to some extent by taking into consideration what in his opinion were the merits of the parties before him ultimately to succeed, for he says:—

"The question whether the widow or uncle is heir depends on the fact whether the uncle was joint with the deceased minor, that is to say, would have been a coparcener with the deceased but for the estate being an impartible one, it being common ground that the deceased minor was owner of the property as the holder of an impartible estate. There is a presumption in favour of jointness and the mere fact that the uncle lived in a separate house from the minor for the sake of convenience will not of itself prove the separation which would debar him from succeeding. At the same time it appears to me clear from the order appointing the uncle guardian that there was no suggestion when he was appointed guardian that he was next heir to the property nor did he then say that his living separately was a temporary matter of convenience."

Such considerations seem to me wholly irrelevant in the present enquiry. The question as to who was the heir of the minor was one which the District Judge certainly could not determine in this enquiry.

Mr. Narain Prasad for the applicant does not contend that the guardian's liability to account for his administration of the minor's property was terminated by the death of the minor. All he contends for is that the order passed was without jurisdiction.

It is admitted that the decision of the question turns on the proper construction of section 41 of the Act, and more particularly on sub-section 3 of that section. The only question raised and the only one which I propose to deal with, therefore, is whether this particular order was one which the Court had jurisdiction to pass. In my opinion it was not.

Section 41 enumerates the circumstances under which the powers of a guardian terminate. We are only concerned here with paragraphs 2 and 3 of that section. The powers of a guardian of the property of a minor cease (a) on his (the guardian's) death, removal or discharge; (b) by the Court of Wards assuming superintendence over the property of the ward; or (c) by the ward ceasing to be a minor.

While it is clear that the powers of a guardian cease on his own death, paragraph (c) declares that his powers also cease by the ward ceasing to be a minor. I think these words must mean by the minor becoming a major,—when he would have presumably reached years of discretion and would be able to look after his own interests. I do not think that the death of the minor was meant to put an end to the responsibility of the guardian to account to the Court whose officer he is for his stewardship. To hold otherwise would be to suggest that all that a dishonest guardian has to do to escape the disciplinary power of the Court which appointed him would be to procure the death of the minor. His liabilities are apparently only terminated by his death, removal or discharge. Unless and until the guardian on the death of the minor applies to the Court and gets his discharge and thereby obtains the safeguard provided under sub-clause 4 of section 41, it would appear that he still remains accountable to the Court for his administration of the minor's property. But this question is perhaps irrelevant here, as the guardian does not claim that the death of the minor in any way puts an end to his liabilities, and I, therefore, express no opinion on the point.

Dr. Tej Bahadur supports the order of the Court by arguing that under section 41(3) the Court may for "any cause" act under the section and, that "any cause" includes the death of a minor. The chief difficulty in accepting this argument is the fact that the wording of the sub-section and especially the concluding words, namely, "any past or present property of the ward," clearly contemplate that the ward was alive at the time (though he may have become a major) when the order was passed. But there is another serious difficulty to this argument. Orders under section 41, clause 3, are admittedly final and are not open even to appeal. If an order such as was passed in this case was within the jurisdiction of the Court it might well be held to operate as res judicata between the parties. Dr. Tej Bahadur has to admit this, but says the difficulty would in practice be removed because a Court dealing with such matters under the Act would not pass final orders except in cases where the issue is very simple. In difficult cases, he argues, or where a detailed enquiry was necessary, it would refer the parties to the ordinary Civil Courts. It seems to me that the Legislature either gave the Court jurisdiction finally to decide such questions or it did not. I cannot think, in the absence of any direction to the contrary, that it left it open to the whim or idiosyncrasy of the Judge concerned to decide whether or not to try a question of the kind involved.

No authority under the Act has been cited by either side nor have I been able to discover any.

The case of Narbadabai, In the matter of (1) has been cited.

That was a decision under Act XX of 1864 and is perhaps not quite decisive here because the language of the two Acts is not precisely similar, though they both deal with the guardianship of minors. But Act XX of 1864 was one of the Acts which was repealed and superseded by the present Act. The Legislature must, therefore, have been aware that the Bombay High Court had held that when a minor died during minority, the "administrator" of his estate, duly certificated, under section 6 of that Act, could not be called upon to render accounts to the Court on the death of the minor, because the Court, as representing the minor, was "functus officio", and yet took no steps in framing the present Act to provide for the case of the ward's death during his minority. From first to last the only section in the Act which seems to contemplate the consequences of the death of the minor during his guardianship is section 37, which has no application here. There is nothing in this Act corresponding to section 48 of Act IV of 1912 (The United Provinces Court of Wards Act).

(1) 8 B. 14; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 383.

On the whole I am satisfied that the order of the Court was without jurisdiction and must be set aside with costs. I would allow this application with costs.

WALSH, J.—I agree that this application must be allowed, for the reasons stated. We are not deciding that the death of the minor puts an end to the jurisdiction of the Court. On the contrary I incline to agree with what my brother has said about the termination of a guardian's liability to the Court exercising jurisdiction under the Guardians and Wards Act. But it will be time enough to decide that question when the point arises.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the application is allowed with costs, and the order of the Court below must be set aside.

Appeal allowed.

Pre-emption—Sale—Withdrawal of suit on payment of money, whether amounts to sale.

Where one person is in possession of certain property and another person claiming title to the property is out of possession, and the latter brings a suit and withdraws it on terms, the withdrawal cannot be considered as a sale of the property in dispute so as to give rise to a right of pre-emption. [p. 171, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Sitapur, dated the 21st March 1918, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Tahsil Biswan, Sitapur, dated the 30th June 19.7.

Mr. Ishri Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Girja Saran Lal, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—These are the facts. A certain woman Musammat Sarsuta died leaving certain property and leaving two daughters, Chamela and Miro. Ordinarily the property would have descended in equal shares to Chamela and Miro. Miro sold not only her own share but the whole of the property to a certain Lachhman Prasad. The property was at the time in the possession of Munwan Lal. Munwan Lal alleged that he was the devisee of the whole property by virtue of a Will made by Musammat Sarsuta. Lachhman Prasad, claiming the whole property as vendee from Miro, sued Munwan Lal for possession of the whole property joining Miro and Chamela as co-defendants. The Courts decided that Munwan Lal was unable to make out any title to the property, but that Miro had no title to more than half the property, and they, therefore, decreed half the property, in other words, Miro's share, to Lachhman Prasad. This left Munwan Lal in possession of the remaining half. Chamela sued Munwan Lal for the remaining half and these proceedings were terminated by Chamela withdrawing her claim, in consideration of payment of money compensation by Munwan Lal. Lachhman Prasad wishes to exercise a right of pre-emption with respect to this transaction on the following grounds. He says that he has title as vendee from Miro and that Chamela has title to the remainder, that Chamela has sold her share to Munwan Lal, and that on this sale he has a cause to come in asserting a right of pre-emption. I do not consider that the transaction by which Chamela resigned her claim to the property receiving money compensation can be considered to be a sale. It does not follow that Chamela has a title superior to that of Munwan Lal. She may have or may not have. Munwan Lal failed in the original proceedings to establish that he had a title as devisee. But the point is not res judicata as between Chamela and Munwan Lal in subsequent proceedings. Munwan Lal could have raised again his title as devisee against Chamela, and it is impossible to say what would have been the result if he had so raised it. But in any circumstances when a man is in possession and another person claiming title is out of possession and that person brings a suit and withdraws the suit on terms, the withdrawal could not ordinarily be considered as a sale of the property in dispute. I do not say that cases could never occur in which such a transaction might amount to a sale, but they would not ordinarily occur. In this instance I do not consider that there was any sale at all. As there has been no sale no right of pre-emption can arise and the suit was rightly dismissed. I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Co-owners—Settlement of portion of joint land made by one co-owner—Co-owner, right of other, to declaration that settlement would not affect his share—Joint possession with tenant, whether can be decreed.

The plaintiff claimed an undivided 10-annas 8-pies share in a taluq by virtue of a redemption-decree. The defendant No. 2 claimed to hold 3 drones of land in the taluq under a settlement made by the owner of the remaining 5-annas 4-pies share of the taluq :

Held, (1) that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration that the settlement in favour of defendant No. 2 was invalid and inoperative as regarded the 10-annas 8-pies share to which the plaintiff was entitled ; [p. 173, col. 1.]

(2) that, in the absence of any finding as to who was in possession of the remaining lands in the taluq, the plaintiff could not get joint possession with the defendant No. 2 of the three drones of land of which the latter was in possession by virtue of the settlement. [p. 173, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Officiating Additional District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 8th September 1917, affirming those of the Munsif, Cox Bazar.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babu Manindranath Banerji), for the Appellants.—The plaintiffs brought this suit for a declaration of their Taluqa Maliki right in a 10-annas 8-pies share of 3 drones and for joint possession. In 1912 the plaintiffs sued for redemption of the 10 annas 8-pies share and on 19th March 1912 they obtained a decree for redemption of their share. In that suit defendant No. 3 was a party and also Sharafat Ali. Under the Taluq there were many tenancies and Ram Dayal, who got the equity of redemption from Uma Charan on 5th February 1901, had no right to create an Etmam of the 10-annas 8-pies share, as he did, in favour of defendant No. 1. We are not barred by the creation of an intermediate tenure by Ram Dayal during the subsistence of the mortgage. The Etmam is inoperative as regards plaintiffs' 10 annas 8-pies share. Moreover Ram Dayal could not grant a lease which could affect more than his own share. Defendant No. 2, purchaser from defendant No. 1, cannot support the Etmam as regards plaintiffs' 10 annas 8-pies share. Defendant No. 2 says that as Ram Dayal was a co-sharer in the mortgaged property, he had a right to grant an intermediary lease to bind the plaintiffs who, he says, must bring a suit for partition. The 10-annas 8-pies must be decreed to plaintiffs and they should be given joint possession. As regards the alleged transfer of a 1-anna share to Nurasha by Ali Hossain, the original proprietor of the Taluq, no deed of transfer has been produced, so it cannot stand.

Babu Khitish Chandra Sen (with him Babus Dhirendra Nath Ganguly and Charu Chandra Sen), for the Respondents, agreed to only a declaration being made in favour of the plaintiffs and opposed joint possession, contending that a partition suit would meet the requirements of the case.

JUDGMENT.

No 2526 OF 1917.

CHITTY, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises related to about 3 drones of land comprised in Taluq Gouri Sanker Boidy Nath bearing No. 13400/12094 in Mouza Patoli Machnakhali and others. The plaintiffs claimed to be entitled by virtue of a redemption decree to a 10-annas 8-pies share in the Taluq. The defendant No. 2, who is the contesting defendant here, claimed to be entitled to 3 drones under the 5 annas 4-pies shares in Sikimi Taluqa rights. It appears that one Mahabat Ali Chowdhury owned two-thirds and one Uma Charan Ghose the remaining one-third share of this Taluq. Mahabat Ali and Uma Charan Ghose both mortgaged their rights in the Mahal to Bhecharam, the father of Ram Dayal Pal defendant No. 3. That was on 21st December 1883. They purported to mortgage two-thirds and one-third of the 16 annas. On 6th December 1900 the equity of redemption of Uma Charan, which had passed through several hands, came to Ram Dayal. On 5th February 1901 Ram Dayal granted an Etmam Patta of about 3 drones to defendant No. 1 Ali Neoz. On 7th June 1901 Ali Neoz transferred that to defendant No. 2, Abdul Gani Matabbor. On 28th May 1914 Ram Dayal sold the interest remaining in him to defendant No. 20 Kamala Kanta Sen. On 19th March 1912 the present plaintiffs instituted a suit for redemption of the 10-annas 8 pies share making Ram Dayal, who had presumably succeeded his father as mortgagee, party defendant No. 1 and Sarafat Ali Chowdhury defendant No. 2. On 19th August 1913 a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiffs for redemption. The plaintiffs then brought this suit on 25th January 1916 for a declaration of their Taluqa Maliki right in 10-annas 8-pies share of the 3 drones described in the schedule for joint possession thereof through the tenants defendants Nos. 4 to 19, for mesne profits, and fourthly, if the Etmam settlement was found to have been made, for a declaration that that settlement and sale were inoperative as regards the 10 annas 8-pies share of the plaintiffs. Both the lower Courts have dismissed the plaintiffs' suit, and hence this appeal.

Two points have been taken before us by the plaintiffs. The first is as to the extent of the plaintiffs' share. It was found by the Court below that long before the mortgage a 1-anna share of this Taluq had been transferred to Nurasha, the wife of Ali Hossein, and was no longer in Mahabat Ali Chowdhury or Uma Charan Ghose when they purported to mortgage their rights. This would be a question of fact into which we could not go in second appeal, but it was said that the learned Judge had erred in law in coming to the conclusion that there had been a transfer of this 1-anna share because such shares could only be transferred by registered deeds and there was no proof of any such document. In the first place, it would appear that the transfer to Nurasha must have been long before the Transfer of Property Act. She purported to convey 1 anna to Safdornessa in 1884, and the Judge says that the transfer to her was many years ago. It is not, therefore, by any means clear that a document was necessary for the transfer of this share. The date of it is left in uncertainty, but there is no doubt that the 1-anna share passed from hand to hand many times after 1884. Safdornessa sold to Sarafat Ali in 1889 and she bought it back from him in 1894. Again she transferred to one Golam Bari in 1894. Sarafat Ali appears to have again conveyed it to defendant No. 20 on 29th February 1912. Golam Bari made it over to defendant No. 2 on 11th January 1915. It will be observed that when the plaintiffs brought their redemption suit in March 1912 making Sarafat Ali a party defendant, Sarafat Ali had parted with his interest in the property—the subject-matter of that suit. There was, therefore, no one in that suit whose interest it was to raise the question as to this 1-anna share. We think that the findings of the Courts below must be accepted that this 1-anna share had passed away before the mortgage and that, therefore, Mahabat Ali and Uma Charan Ghose had not the full 16 annas to mortgage but mortgaged really 10 annas and 5 annas respectively.

The second point taken by the plaintiffs is that their suit should not have been entirely dismissed. The Etmam lease of Ram Dayal purported to cover all the shares in the Taluq though as regards area it was only in respect of these 3 drones. It is obvious that, as owner of the equity of redemption in 5 annas, he could not grant a lease which would affect more than his own share. The plaintiffs may, therefore, be given a declaration in terms of prayer (gha) of the plaint that, if Ram Dayal made any settlement of the lands in suit in favour of defendant No. 1, from whom defendant No. 2 purchased, it should be declared that that settlement and sale are inoperative and invalid as regards the 10 annas share to which the plaintiffs are clearly entitled.

It was urged upon us by the learned Pleader for the plaintiffs-appellants that the plaintiffs should be given joint possession of these 3 drones along with defendant No. 2, through the tenants, defendants Nos. 4 to 19. But there seems to be no reason at this stage for disturbing what appears to be the exclusive possession of defendant No. 2 in these 3 drones. The whole estate, we are told, which was comprised in the mortgage, amounts to 65 drones. We do not know anything of the conditions under which the other 62 drones are held, who is in possession through what tenants or, indeed, anything about them. It is said that if the plaintiffs do get a decree for joint possession of these 3 drones, they cannot hereafter bring a suit for partition. I fail to see the force of this argument because it must necessarily depend on who is holding the balance of the estate—the 62 drones of which we know nothing.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court dismissing the plaintiffs' suit will be set aside and there will be a decree in favour of the plaintiffs in terms of prayer (gha) of the plaint. The parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Nos. 170 TO 172 OF 1918.

In these appeals the question relates only to the 1-anna share. These appeals are governed by our decision in Appeal No. 2526 of 1917 and are dismissed with costs.

CUMING, J.—I agree.

Appeal, second—Finding of fact, whether can be challenged—Evidence, consideration of—Court, duty of.

A finding that the plaintiff has failed to prove a fact is prima facie a finding of fact which cannot be challenged in second appeal. [p. 173, col. 2]

The rule in Oudh regulating the consideration of evidence is, that the Court must apply its mind to every piece of relevant evidence produced, but it is not necessary for the Court to refer to every portion of such evidence. [p. 174, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 2nd February 1918, confirming that of the Munsif, Gonda, dated 19th December 1917.

Mr. H. N. Misra, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. N. Ghoshal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The case for the plaintiffs-appellants was that in a partition of joint family property the rights under a usufructuary mortgage had passed to them alone and that their brother, the defendant respondent, had no interest in the rights in question. There had admittedly been a partition in the family and the question for decision in these proceedings was whether the rights under the deed of usufructuary mortgage in question had or had not formed a part of the property partitioned. The lower Courts rightly held that it was for the plaintiffs-appellants to prove that the rights under the deed of usufructuary mortgage had been partitioned and they found that the plaintiffs-appellants had failed to prove that fact. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The finding that the plaintiffs-appellants failed to prove that fact is prima facie a finding of fact which cannot be challenged in second appeal. The learned Counsel for the appellants has, however, endeavoured to challenge that finding on two grounds. He has argued that the Courts had refused to receive evidence on behalf of plaintiffs-appellants which they should have received, and he has further argued that in the finding of fact the Courts have overlooked much evidence that was on the record.

With regard to the first point I consider that the Courts rightly refused to receive the evidence which they refused to receive, as it was filed at a very late stage and at a time when the plaintiffs had no right to adduce it. With regard to the second point it is true that the decisions of the Courts below do not refer to every specific piece of evidence, but there is no reason why every specific piece of evidence produced should be referred to in a judgment either of a trial Judge or of a Court of first appeal. It would frequently be intolerable, and it would always be very inconvenient, if Courts were tied down to a rigid rule, by which they were compelled to state every piece of evidence in the case and to arrive at a specific finding upon each portion. The rule accepted in Oudh is the rule that the Court must apply its mind to every piece of relevant evidence produced, but that it is not necessary for the Court to refer to every portion of such evidence. I am satisfied from the judgments of the learned trial Judge and the learned District Judge that they did apply their minds to all the evidence that was produced and, such being the case, the finding of fact at which they have arrived cannot be challenged in second appeal. I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 91, 92, 93—Execution of decree—Sale—Judgment-debtor having no saleable interest in property sold—Suit by auction-purchaser to recover purchase-money, whether maintainable.

At a Court-auction there is no warranty, express or implied, that the judgment-debtor has a saleable interest. [p. 177, col. 1.]

Where it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold in execution of a decree against him, the auction-purchaser has, in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation, no right of action against the decree-holder, either under the Civil Procedure Code or apart from it, to recover the purchase-money paid by him. [p. 176, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Original Side of this Court, in Civil Reg. No. 192 of 1918.

Mr. Ormiston, for the Appellant.
Mr. A. B. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The S. S. A. O. Chetty Firm obtained a decree against one Lim Po An. Certain immoveable property was sold by the Court Bailiff in execution proceedings, and the plaintiff-appellant, Soolayman Cassim Singi, purchased it at the auction-sale. He paid the money into Court, and the respondent-defendant withdrew it

In a subsequent suit between the plaintiff-appellant and one Ma Kyin Hlaing it was decided that Lim Po An had no saleable interest in the property sold. There was no appeal against this decision. The result was that the appellant obtained no benefit from the property. He, therefore, sued the respondent firm for Rs. 4,500 and interest thereon, in other words, for the return of the purchase money.

The respondent firm pleaded that they were not privy to the proceedings between the appellant and Ma Kyin Hlaing and contended that, in any case, there was no right of suit to recover the said purchase money.

The learned Judge on the original side held that there was no right of suit and that the appellant had no remedy against the judgment-creditor, either under, or apart from, the Code of Civil Procedure. The suit was dismissed with costs.

In this appeal Mr. Ormiston's main argument is that the learned Judge on the original side erred in holding that, in a case where there is a complete failure of consideration, a suit to recover the purchase money does not lie independently of the Code of Civil Procedure. He further contends that in every Court sale there is a representation that the judgment-debtor has some right, title and interest and that the learned Judge was in error in holding that "the chance that the judgment debtor may have some interest" amounted to a right, title and interest. He urged that the Judge was mistaken in coming to a conclusion that the right of suit, granted by the former Code, perished with it.

The matter has been argued at length. A very large number of authorities have been referred to by Mr. Ormiston, and his principal object in putting them before the Court was to show that there was a right of suit independently of the Code of Civil Procedure, quite apart from the fact that section 315 of the Code of 1882 had been held to give an implied right by a long series of decisions.

In the present case. I am only concerned with the Code of 1908, and the relevant portions are to be found in Order XXI, rules 91, 92 and 93. It may be taken as settled law that, when it is shown that the judgment-debtor has some interest, however small, in the property sold, there is no right of suit to recover from the judgment creditor a proportionate amount of the purchase money. What then is the purchaser's remedy when, as in this case, the judgment-debtor has been found to have no saleable interest?

The appellant's case is that he can either make an application within 30 days of the sale under Order XXI, rule 91, or else he can file a suit within six years, both as permitted by the Code of Civil Procedure and also independently thereof. In my opinion, there can, in the absence of fraud, be no right, apart from the Code of Civil Procedure, to file such a suit, unless there is some warranty, express or implied, on the part of the judgment-creditor that the judgment-debtor has some saleable interest in the property sold. This I consider is the crucial test, for otherwise there is no apparent cause of action, merely on the ground that it is subsequently found that the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest. As the Code of 1908 stands, I think that it is apparent that no suit will lie.

In the present case, in the sale proclamation, Ma Kyin Hlaing's claim was expressly set forth, though it was not admitted by the respondent, and the appellant had, therefore, obvious notice thereof. Nothing but the right, title and interest of the judgment debtor, with all its defects, was offered for sale at the auction. There was clearly no express warranty. The appellant did not make use of the special remedy provided by Order XXI, rule 91, whereby under rule 93 he would have been entitled to "an order" for a refund, after the sale had been set aside for want of any saleable interest. Mr. Banerjee argues that the appellant has thus lost his sole remedy and that he has no other. He contends that, perhaps on equitable grounds, the last two Codes have permitted this one remedy, but that the wording of Order XXI, rule 93, where the words "to an order for re-payment" are used, coupled with the omission of the second paragraph of the old section 315, makes it clear that there is no other remedy whatever.

Now it is apparent to my mind that this remedy in execution is conditional upon the sale having been set aside. It is expressly so stated. It is not contended that the fact that this sale was in execution of a mortgage-decree in any way affects the decision in this case. A Full Bench ruling of this Court, Maung Tun v. Ma Ngan (1), may be referred to with advantage at this stage. Therein several of the rulings, dealt with by learned Counsel on either side, were referred to. The ruling actually concerns moveable property, to which Order XXI, rules 91, 92 and 93, have no application, but the opinions of the Full Bench in regard to certain principles of law referring to immoveable property are of very great weight and must be considered. It was there held, on the authority of Dorab Ally Khan v. Executors of Khajah Moheeooddeen (2), (1) that, when property has been sold under a regular execution and the purchaser is afterwards evicted under a title paramount to that of the judgment-debtor, he has no remedy against the judgment-creditor, (2) that there is no warranty of title. Fox, C. J., was of the opinion that this statement of the law was applicable to all Court-sales whether, as in the Privy Council case, by a Sheriff or by Bailiffs. He pointed out that by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1877, the Legislature gave a summary remedy in execution to auction-purchasers of immoveable property, when the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest, but his conclusion clearly was that there was no right of suit in addition. Bell, J., referred to Sowlaminee Chowdhrain v. Rishen

(2) 3 C. 80; 2 C. L. R. 529; 5 I. A. 113; 3 Sath. P. C. J. 519; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 813; 2 Ind. Jur. 423; 1 Ind Dec. (N. s) 1097.

Kishore (3) decided under the Code of 1859, which contained no provisions similar to sections 313 and 315 of the Code of 1882. There it was held that the auction-purchaser had no right of suit on the ground that there was no warranty of title. The property sold in that case was land in the Mofussil in Bengal and not land situated in Calcutta. He further endorsed Muttusami Aiyar, J.'s views in the case of Sundara Gopalan v. Venkatararada Ayyangar (4) that the implied warranty of title in respect of private sales cannot be extended to Court-sales, except in so far as such extension is justified by the processual law in India. He was here dealing with the Code of 1882, and the changes introduced into that Code, "practically the same as the Code of 1877," were embodied in sections 313 and 315.

In my opinion, these sections gave a special and equitable remedy, which was provided in order to meet the absence in the 1859 Code of any similar provision and I do not think that it can be inferred that this special remedy was given because there was some implied warranty of title at an execution sale.

Again, in the 1908 Code, Order XXI, rule 92 (3), covers rule 91. Thus an auction-purchaser cannot sue to set aside a sale and, unless a sale is set aside, there is no remedy even under Order XXI, rule 93. There can be no doubt that the earlier decisions of the Allahabad High Court, commencing from the case of Munna Singh v. Gajadhar Singh (5), gave a separate right of suit. In the case of Sidheswari Prasad Narain Singh v. Mayanand Gir (6) it was held that apart from the Code of 1882, there was no right of suit, but the learned Judge appears to have interpreted the case quoted as Munna Singh v. Gajadhar Singh (5) which in reality allowed a right of suit independently of the Code. In the case of Nannu Lal v. Bhagwan Das (7) which was decided under the present Code, it was held that the auction-purchaser had no right of refund at all, unless the sale was set aside and that he had no right of action apart from the Code of Civil Procedure. This is the most important decision. In the last Allahabad case, Girdhar Das v. Sidheshwari Prasad Narain Singh (8), the judgment in Mannu Lal v. Bhagwan Das (7) was apparently overlooked, and it was decided that a suit lay. However, this decision was made under the Code of 1882. In the earlier Calcutta cases, it was held that such a suit could be brought, but the recent case of Juranu Mahamad v. Jathi Mahamed (9) decided to the contrary. The case reported as Prasanna Kumar Bhattacharjee v. Ibrahim Mirza (10), a decision by another Calcutta High Court Bench, is not to the point, inasmuch as the Judges appear to have been misled by the headnote of a Bombay ruling, as was pointed out by the learned Judge on the Original Side. The Madras High Court, generally speaking, has adopted the view that no suit lay apart from the Code. The last reported case, however, is that of Subbu Reddi v. Ponnambala Reddi (11) and here it was decided that in the present circumstances no suit would lie at all. The Bombay Court generally has decided that such a suit can be brought. The case of Rustomji Ardeshir Irani v. Vinayak Gangadhar (12) even goes so far as to state that a suit is maintainable, and that there is an implied warranty at the auction-sale, but this case was decided under the Code of 1882 and I regard the decision as of doubtful value. It is thus apparent that the general consensus of recent opinion in India is that, in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation, no right of action either under the present Code, or apart from it, is reserved to the auction-purchaser, when the judgment-debtor is found to have no saleable interest.

The introduction of section 315 in the Codes of 1877 and 1882 was, in my opinion, merely a special and equitable remedy which must be taken advantage of within 30 days from the date of sale. The reason for this brief period is obvious. It was to prevent prolongation and multiplicity of proceedings, and to ensure finality in execution. Great injustice might be caused to the decree-holder if, on receipt of the sale-proceeds, he should enter up satisfaction of his decree. It is conceivable that he might lose all his remedy inasmuch as further execution proceedings might be barred by limitation at the time when a suit to recover the purchase money was brought. The wording of Order XXI, rules 91, 92 and 93 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, seems to me to lead to the inference that no suit can be maintained. Mulla in the 6th Edition of his Code of Civil Procedure at page 574 would appear to take this view The sole remedy to which the purchaser is entitled is an order of refund, after he has had the sale set aside.

In conclusion I would say that the balance of authority is in favour of there being at a Court auction no warranty, express or implied, that the judgment debtor has a saleable interest, and that being so, I can only hold that the learned Judge on the original side decided this case correctly, and that no suit is maintainable under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, or independently thereof.

The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—These two revision cases arise out of a Small Cause Court suit instituted by the opposite party against the petitioner in each of these cases and against another person against whom no decree has been passed by the Court of Small Causes. It appears that the opposite party hired out certain articles for the purpose of the Chatri Sabha which was held in Patna on the 27th August and 9th December 1916. The question for my determination is, who is liable on the contract.

The plaintiff in his plaint specifically states that he hired out the articles on the personal liability of Moulvi Hamid Hasan and defendant No. 2, who has been dismissed from the action. He does not state that there was any contract between him and defendant No. 3 at all and as I read the judgment of the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court, he does not find that there was any contract between defendant No. 3 and the plaintiff. It is, in my opinion, well settled that no one is liable on a contract except a party thereto. It is not the plaintiff's case that defendant No. 3 was a party to the contract. It is not found by the Court below that defendant No. 3 was a party to the contract.

It is, however, urged on behalf of Moulvi Hamid Hasan that he contracted merely as an agent and, therefore, no decree could be passed against him and he relies upon section 230 of the Indian Contract Act. That section, in accordance with the English rule, lays down that an agent cannot personally enforce a contract entered into by him on behalf of his principal nor is he personally bound by such contract. Now, in this case as I read the judgment, there is no finding that Moulvi Hamid Hasan entered into the contract as agent. The finding upon which the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of Moulvi Hamid Hasan relies is this: "I am satisfied that defendant No. 1 took the articles, a list of which was prepared at the time, on hire for the Sabha. He entered into the contract and disclosed the purpose for which he took, and the person to whom he sent, the articles and paid Rs. 140." In my opinion it does not amount to a finding that defendant No. 1 acted as an agent in the transaction. I hold that upon the plaint itself and upon the finding of the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court he was wrong in passing a decree against defendant No. 3. Civil Revision Case No. 124 of 1919 must, therefore, be allowed with costs, which I assess at two gold mohurs, to be paid by the plaintiff. I further hold that Moulvi Hamid Hasan is liable on the contract into which he entered with Shahzad Khan.

Civil Revision Case No. 107 of 1919 must accordingly be refused with costs, which I assess at two gold mohurs.

The mere fact that one of several joint tenants of a holding is a female is not sufficient to constitute it a female tenancy within the meaning of section 25 (4) of the Agra Tenancy Act. [p. 178, col. 2,]

The power to grant time under section 66 (1) of the Agra Tenancy Act to tenants to eject sub-tenants, is discretionary with the Court and, when judicially exercised, will not be interfered with in appeal. [p. 178, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 19th October 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, J. M.—The facts of the case are admitted and are simple. The defendants-appellants are joint ex-proprietary tenants, three males and one female, a widow. They have sub let their holding for longer than the five years allowed under section 25 (1) Tenancy Act. The first Court dismissed the respondent-landlord's suit to eject them under section 57, his reason being that one of them is a female who under section 25 (4) may sub let as long as she lives. The Commissioner in first appeal holds that it is not a female tenancy covered by section 25 (4), as three of the four joint tenants are able-bodied males. Counsel are not able to show me rulings on the subject and the point does not seem to have hitherto come before the Board for decision, but I am of opinion that the Commissioner is right.

Two points of view present themselves on the wording of section 25 (d). On the one side it may be urged that though there are three male co-sharers in the tenancy with her, the lady's interest extends to every part of the holding and that it should, therefore, be regarded as the holding of a female. On the other side, it may be said that the protection of section 25 (d) is merely because females cannot cultivate themselves and was never intended to cover a case like this when three of the four tenants are males who can perfectly well do so. The latter view should, in my opinion, prevail, the intention of the law being to restrict sub-letting and only to protect, under section 25 (d), tenancies when the tenant is physically incapable of personal cultivation.

So far, therefore, I agree with the Commissioner, but I do not agree with him in not allowing the benefit of section 66 (1) and giving time to the tenants to eject the sub tenants. The power to give time is discretionary with the Court, and Appellate Courts are against interference with this discretion when it has been judicially exercised. There are rulings to this effect, but in a recent case of 1918, Radhey Shiam v. Bihari Lal (1), the Hon'ble High Court has held that when the discretion has not been judicially exercised, it is open to an Appellate Court, to interfere. The Commissioner has given no reason for not allowing the discretion; he remarks: "I see no reason to allow the benefit of section 66; there are no extenuating circumstances that I can see." It is clear he did not scrutinize the circumstances; it is quite possible that the sub-letting may have been due to the appellants thinking that section 25 (d) permitted them to sub-let, and I have little doubt that if he had considered this point, as I think he should have done, the Commissioner would have given a locus pœnitentiæ before ejecting ex proprietary tenants.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal and modify the orders of the Commissioner. I would give the benefit of section 66 (1) to appellants. I would maintain the decree of ejectment but direct that the decree be not executed, except as regards costs, against the appellants, if within three months they eject the sub-tenants and resume personal occupation of the holding. I would give respondent his costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XLI, rr. 18, 19—Appeal—Non-payment of process-fees—Appellate Court, duty of—Order dismissing appeal for non-payment of process-fees, whether appealable—Revision.

No appeal lies against an order passed under Order XLI, rule 18 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 179, col. 2.]

In order to be able to avail itself of the provisions of Order XLI, rule 18, of the Civil Procedure Code, it is the duty of the Appellate Court to fix a date by which the process-fees are to be paid. [p. 180, col. 1.]

The appellant filed an appeal in the Court of the District Judge and was ordered, at the time the date of the hearing was fixed, to pay the amount of the process-fee, which not having been paid even on the date of the hearing, the appeal was dismissed. He appealed to the High Court;

Held, (1) that no appeal lay. [p. 179, col. 2.]

(2) that inasmuch as the appellant had not pleaded that the non-payment was due to the fact that he had not been directed to pay by any fixed date, this was not a fit case for the exercise of the discretionary powers of revision. [p. 180, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 22nd November 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Jullundur, dated the 29th May 1918, dismissing the claim.

Mr. Gopal Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant had instituted an appeal in the Court of the District Judge at Jullundur, and though a very long period was given for the hearing of the case, he paid no process-fees to have notice served on the respondents. On the date fixed for the hearing the appeal was dismissed on account of the said default, presumably under Order XLI, rule 18, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The appellant made no application under rule 19 of the same Order and has appealed to this Court. A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies. Though this appeal purports to be one under Order XLIII, clause (t), which relates to an order passed under Order XLI, rule 19, it is clear that no order was passed under that rule and the appeal is really one against an order passed under rule 18. The proper remedy was an application under rule 19, but this was not made. No appeal lies to this Court from an order under rule 18 and it is admitted that the order is not a decree. I, therefore, hold that no appeal lies, but I proceed to hear the case on revision.

The usual practice in the subordinate Courts is for the Clerk of the Court to give a date by which the process fees for serving the respondent with notice of the appeal is to be paid into Court. Such action by a ministerial officer of the Court is authorised in this respect and must be regarded as an act of the Court. In the present case the appellant was directed to pay in the amount of the process-fee but no date was fixed by which the appellant had to make the payment.

Order XLI, rule 18, provides that tha Court may dismiss an appeal when on the date fixed for the hearing it is found that the notice to the respondent has not been served in consequence of the failure of the appellant to deposit, within the period fixed, the sum required to defray the cost of serving the notice. In order to enable the Appellate Court to avail itself of this provision a date must have been fixed by which the process-fee was to be paid. This was the view taken of the law in Purshadee Lall v. Umbika Pershad Lal (1). Though this decision was not given under the present Code of Civil Procedure, the law on the subject has not been altered. In fact a reference to the previous Codes makes it more clear that it is the duty of the Appellate Court to fix a date by which the process-fees are to be paid. Section 2 of Act XXIII of 1861 is as follows :—

"Every process required to be issued under Act VIII of 1859 shall be served at the expense of * * * and the sum required to defray the costs of such service shall be paid into the Court before the process is issued within a period to be fixed by the Court issuing the process."

The alteration in the language of the subsequent Codes has not altered the meaning.

In the present case the appellant was ordered at the time the date of the hearing was fixed to pay the amount of the process-fee. He certainly realised that he had to pay the fee before the date of hearing. The most that he can claim is that he was allowed time up to the date of hearing. Even on the date of hearing the process-fee had not been paid and he did not plead that the non-payment was due to the fact that he had not been directed to pay by any fixed period. It may be contended that he was given the whole period. However that may be, this is not, in my opinion, a fit case for the exercise of the discretionary powers of revision of this Court. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

No. 123 OF 1917.

This is an appeal against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge, Hooghly, dated the 2nd November 1916, affirming the decision of the Munsif of Serampore. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain property. The property, which is said to be homestead land, is in a town. The defendant No. 1 had been a tennant of this land for many years. He held, first of all, under two leases for a period of ten years each. Then he held over and has been holding over on the terms of the expired lease, so far as they are applicable to the tenancy created by the holding over. The view of the appellant is that he is entitled to a notice of six months expiring at the end of a year of tenancy. He has got no such right at all. If the case is governed by the general law, then as regards the homestead the tenancy would be prima facie the tenancy of a monthly tenant capable of being determined with a 15 days notice. If it is not, then the terms of the contract so far as they are applicable, must be taken to apply to the present case. The expired lease contained a proviso that the landlord might re-take possession on three months' notice. As a matter of fact, a six months' notice was served on the defendant. Such a notice was not provided for by the contract and the notice given in this case, which in fact extended over a period of six months, cannot be said to be unreasonable. No authority has been shown to suggest that a tenant holding over is entitled to a six months' notice expiring at the end of a year of tenancy. That would mean that a tenant who holds over for a week would be entitled to hold over for a year. The view of the appellant's Vakil is that notice expiring at the end of a year of tenancy means that the holding over must be at least for one year or so. There is no support to such a proposition either in the text books or in the reports of cases. The only provision is that the notice must be reasonable. The defendant No. 1 was only entitled to a three months' notice under the terms of the contract, but, as a matter of fact, a six months' notice was served on him. There is no reason to interfere with the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge in this case. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

No. 555 of 1917.

This appeal is not pressed and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad, dated the 20th September 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 3rd Court, Arrah, dated the 18th November 1916.

Mr. Ambika Prasad Upadhya, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question which I have to determine in this appeal is whether the appellants have acquired a right of occupancy in Khasra plot No. 434. The lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that the appellants are the tenants in respect of the plot No. 434, but that they have not acquired a right of occupancy therein. In the result, the lower Appellate Court refused to make a declaration that plot No. 434 is the guzashta land of the plaintiffs appellants, but did make a declaration that the plaintiffs are the tenants in respect of plot No. 434 and are entitled to remain in possession thereof. The plaintiffs have appealed, and on their behalf it has been argued that the lower Appellate Court should have held that they have acquired a right of occupancy in respect of plot No. 434. The respondents have filed a cross-appeal and they challenge the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the appellants are their tenants in respect of that land.

It will be convenient to deal with the cross-appeal first. The lower Appellate Court has arrived at the following findings of facts:—

(1) The disputed land is chaukidari chakran land.

(2) The plaintiffs' father was the chaukidar in possession of the land in dispute, but that the defendants have accepted rent from him and have treated him and the plaintiffs as their tenants.

(8) There were resumption proceedings in respect of the land under the Chaukidari Act, and the Government transferred the land to the defendants.

It was argued on behalf of the respondents that on these findings the lower Appellate Court should have held that the plaintiffs are mere trespassers and are liable to be ejected as such. They contend that they are not hampered by any recognition of tenancy before the resumption proceedings, inasmuch as their title to the land accrued only after the resumption proceedings, when the Government transferred the land to them. They say that upon such transfer they were entitled to hold the land as their zerait land, and that they were at liberty to do so, notwithstanding the fact that they may have recognized the appellants as their tenants at a time when they had no title to the land.

This argument, in my opinion, is entirely unfounded, for it rests on the fallacy that the title to the land in dispute accrued to the defendants upon transfer of the land to them by Government. The nature of chaukidari chakran lands was the subject of very careful investigation in the case of Joykishen Mookerjee v. Collector of East Burdwan and Brijo Roy Thareedar (1). That case has always been recognised as establishing that the title of the Zemindar to the chakran land was always there and that it remained unaffected by the fact that such land was appropriated to the maintenance of an officer who performed, and was liable to perform, duties as a village watchman. Originally these duties were rendered solely to the Zemindar, who, instead of paying wages to the chaukidar, made a grant of some land to the chaukidar for his maintenance. It was recognized later that the general public as well as the Zemindar was interested in their services, and, therefore, by various Regulations the chaukidars were made removeable by the the Magistrate, but, as the Judicial Committee points out, there is "nothing in these Regulations which takes from the Zemindar the right of nomination of these officers, or which deprives him of the power of himself removing them and appointing other fit persons in their stead, and nothing which deprives him of the right of requiring from the chaukidar such services as he was bound by law or usage to render to the Zemindar." It must also be remembered that by section 41 of Regulation VIII of 1793, the whole of these chakran lands were declared as annexed to the malguzari lands and responsible for the public revenue. In other words, the antecedent title of the Zemindar in these lands was recognized in the Regulation of 1793, and, in my opinion, having regard to that Regulation and the long series of cases decided by the Calcutta High Court [see Kazi Newaz Khoda v. Ram Jadu Dey (2)] it is now too late in the day to argue that the title of the Zemindar to these lands accrues only on the transfer of such lands to the Zemindar after the resumption proceedings.

It was argued, however, on the basis of Shaikh Jonab Ali v. Rakibuddin Mallik (3), that upon the transfer of such land to the Zemindar, such land was at the disposal of the Zemindar, and could be treated by him either as his mal land or zerait land. That undoubtedly is so, but, in my opinion, having elected to treat the land as his mal land, he cannot turn round and say: "The land is now at my disposal, and I shall treat it as my zerait land." The argument would have great force if it could be shown that he had no title to the land at the time when he treated it as his mal land. But that is not my view, and I am supported by the language employed by the Legislature in section 51 of the Village Chaukidari Act, where the Legislature has said as clearly as it knows how to say that the transfer to the Zemindar will be subject to all contracts made before such transfer by virtue of which any person other than the Zemindar may have any right to such land. In my view, section 51 of the Village Chaukidari Act recognizes two principles which are absolutely destructive of the elaborate argument advanced before Mr. Mullick on behalf of the respondents. It recognized, first of all, the antecedent title of the Zemindar to these lands, and it recognizes, secondly, the validity of the antecedent contracts entered into by the Zemindar respecting these lands. Contract of tenancy is one of the contracts within the scope of section 51, and, therefore, I am of opinion that the lower Appellate Court, on the facts found by it, was right in coming to the conclusion that the appellants were not trespassers and were not liable to be ejected as such.

I will now deal with the appeal. A right of occupancy is purely a statutory right, it is not a contractual right. Therefore, a right of occupancy is not saved by section 51 of the Village Chaukidari Act. But the appellants argue that they have been in occupation of the land in dispute as tenants for over twelve years, and, therefore, they have acquired a right of occupancy by Statute. In my opinion, this argument is not well founded. A right of occupancy is a right conferred by the Bengal Tenancy Act, and section 181 of that Act provides that nothing in that Act shall affect any incident of a ghatwali or other service tenure. It is true that the incidents of a ghatwali or other service tenure are not dealt with in the Bengal Tenancy Act, but if it can be established that one of the incidents of a service tenure is that rights of occupancy cannot be acquired therein, then there cannot be any doubt that a right of occupancy, being a right conferred by the Bengal Tenancy Act, cannot be acquired in the land in dispute.

It seems to me that on principle a chaukidar cannot acquire a right of occupancy in chakran lands. Chakran lands are held on condition of service, and occasonally a small rent is also paid by the chaukidar. Now, if it were possible for him to acquire a right of occupancy in such land, he could after twelve years' possession refuse to perform any services and yet claim to retain the land. The question was raised in the case of Hurrogobind Raha v Ramrutno Dey (4) but was not decided. But Garth, C. J., in that case said: "We are very much disposed to think that if the defendants held by a service tenure they could not acquire a right of occupancy. However, it is not necessary to decide that point in this case." But in the case of Upendra Nath Hazra v. Ram Nath Chowdhry (5) Maclean, C. J., held that a right of occupancy could not be acquired in a service tenure. He said: "I think that upon principle, having regard to the nature of ghatwali lands, the acquisition of occupancy rights in these lands is inconsistent with the incidents of such tenures; and this view gains support from section 181 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which seems to me to be inconsistent with the view of the acquisition of such rights in ghatwali lands. This conclusion seems to be in accordance with Mr. Justice Mitra's view on the point expressed in the case cited, that any such right is not susceptible of acquisition in the ghatwali lands." In my opinion, it is clear both on principle and authority that so long as the lands retained the character of chakran lands, the appellants could not acquire a right of occupancy in such lands. I think, therefore, that, upon the facts found by the lower Appellate Court, it was right in coming to the conclusion that the appellants have not acquired a rignt of occupancy in plot No. 434. Both the appeal and cross-appeal, therefore, fail and they must each be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1 (1), construction of—Withdrawal of suit—Co-plaintiff, whether can withdraw.

Per Ferard, S. M.—Rule 1 (1) of Order XXIII of the Civil Procedure Code should be construed according to its strict wording. One of several co-plaintiffs, when they have embarked upon a joint suit, cannot withdraw from the suit without the consent of the others. [p. 184, col. 1.]

Per *Hopkins, J. [p. 184, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 16th August 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, S. M.—(March 7, 1919).—The facts are not in dispute. The appeal is on a single point of law. The whole body of co sharers to whom respondent is liable to pay rent sued to eject him. Before the proceedings terminated one of them withdrew. The Commissioner in first appeal has dismissed the suit of all of them. The appellant, one of them, argues that under rule 4, Order XXIII, Civil Procedure Code, one of several co plaintiffs cannot withdraw without the consent of the others. The Commissioner, as set out in his judgment, does not give this wide interpretation to the rule.

It is, however, the plain meaning of the words as they stand and is the view taken in the note on page 410 of Agarwala's Tenancy Act, 5th Edition (note under section 194, Tenancy Act).

In Petition No. 73 of 1915 16, Musammat Bitto v. Ramsidh, the point came up before the late Junior Member, Sir J. Campbell, who wrote: "Two co sharers issue a notice for ejectment but only one of them now wishes to carry it out. The other has compromised with the tenant. It is quite clear that the tenant cannot be ejected under such circumstances. I uphold the Commissioner's order and dismiss this appeal with costs."

This, however, was an Oudh case and it was only a notice and not a suit for ejectment, so no question of the limits of rule 1 (1), Order XXIII, came in.

I have looked up Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Civil Procedure Code and find nothing useful on the point.

I would construe the rule in its strict wording. One of several co-plaintiffs, when they have embarked on a joint suit, cannot withdraw without consent of the others.

I have considered whether there will be any subsequent difficulty in carrying out execution of decree of ejectment if the withdrawing party refuses to join. There will not: Order XXI, rule 15.

I would allow the appeal, set aside the Commissioner's appellate order and restore the order of the Assistant Collector decreeing ejectment. Parties to pay their own costs.

HOPKINS, J. M.—I regret that I am unable to agree with my colleague in this case. Rule 1 (1), Order XXIII, of the Civil Procedure Code, allows a plaintiff to withdraw his suit without any permission. Clause (2) says that the Court may in certain circumstances give a plaintiff permission to withdraw with liberty to institute a fresh suit. Clause (4) says that nothing in this rule shall be deemed to authorise the Court to permit one of several plaintiffs to withdraw without the consent of the others. The word permit, I think, refers to the permission to be given under clause (2), as no permission is required under clause (1).

Ameer Ali and Woodroffe (page 1073) describe the effect of clause (4) as follows:—"This does not permit one of the plaintiffs withdrawing without permission to bring a fresh suit, even though the co-plaintiff do not consent."

Agarwala on page 410 is referring to suits for money under section 194 (3) of the Tenancy Act. He says that a suit for ejectment is outside the scope of the clause: but when all have joined in a suit, the subsequent withdrawal of one of them will not debar the others from obtaining a decree. He quotes Dwarkanath Rai v. Kali Chander Rai (1). I have referred to that case and I find that what was ruled there was that in a suit for ejectment in Bengal in 1885 when one plaintiff withdrew, the remaining plaintiffs could get a decree for possession of their share of the estate. The words Italicised should be added after the word decree in Mr. Agarwala's description of the case. The ruling, however, relates only to Bengal. But whatever may be the case there—in the Agra Province possession in an ejectment suit cannot be given in a portion only of the holding.

The meaning of the rule in Order XXIII is not clear, but I think the underlying idea is that no person can be forced to prosecute legal proceedings against his will, or prevented from withdrawing from them but that when once a person has withdrawn from a suit, he shall not be allowed to renew it without good cause shown for the withdrawal.

BY THE COURT.—As members do not concur in accepting the appeal, the lower Court's order must stand. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed, parties paying their own costs. I do not give respondent his costs, as his mutability has caused this extra litigation.

—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) s. 151, O. XLI, r. 5—Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI B. C. of 1908), ss. 215 (3), 224, 229—Appeal to High Court under Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act—Stay of execution—High Court, power of, to stay execution.

The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code as to stay of proceedings do not apply to cases under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, but, as that Act gives a right of appeal to the High Court, the Court has inherent jurisdiction as a Court of Appeal, where an appeal lies to it, to stay proceedings as ancillary to its powers as the appellate authority to reverse an order of an inferior Court. The jurisdiction, however, should be exercised sparingly and only in cases where it is manifest that justice demands such an exercise. [p. 186, col. 1.]

Mr. Atul Krishna Roy, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. R. Das (with him Mr. Sailendranath Palit), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an application asking for a stay of execution on behalf of the appellant in an appeal brought under section 215 (3) and section 224 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. The appeal is from a decision of the Deputy Collector, acting with the powers of a Deputy Commissioner, the amount in dispute being over Rs 5,000, and objection is taken that this Court has no jurisdiction under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure to exercise its powers of stay. Now, it must be conceded that the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to cases except cases tried by the Civil Courts save in so far as there is any express provision in the Civil Procedure Code itself, and the question which we have to determine is whether, under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, this Court is granted those powers of staying proceedings mentioned in Order XLI, rule 5 of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 229 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act provides that the provisions of section 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure (now Order XLI, rule 22) which applies to cross-objections shall, so far as applicable, apply to all appeals under this Act from decisions of the Deputy Commissioner, and sections 215 to 229 deal with appeals in suits under the Act itself. Section 224 provides that certain appeals shall lie from the Deputy Commissioner or the Deputy Collector, where the amount in dispute exceeds Rs. 5,000, to the High Court, but no provision is made in the Act applying Order XLI, rule 5 of the Civil Procedure Code, to cases under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. Certain provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are applied to the trial of cases under that Act, and the Local Government has power to make rules and prescribe the procedure to be followed. That appears from section 264, which provides that the Local Government may make rules to carry out the objects of this Act, and, in particular and without prejudice to the generality of sub-section (1), the Local Government may make rules in a great number of cases amongst others to prescribe the procedure to be followed and the information to be given by any party or applicant in any proceeding under this Act and section 265 provides, in sub-section (1), that the Local Government may, with the previous sanction of the Government of India, make rules for regulating the procedure of the Deputy Commissioner in matters under this Act for which a procedure is not provided hereby; and may, by any such rule, direct that any provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply with or without modification to all or any classes of cases before the Deputy Commissioner, and sub section (3) which is important provides that, until rules are made under sub-section (1), which I have just referred to, and subject to those rules when made and to the other provisions of the Act, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to certain matters which are described under headings (a) to (k) shall, so far as may be, and, in so far as they are not inconsistent with this Act, apply to all suits, appeals and proceedings before the Deputy Commissioner under this Act and to all appeals from decisions passed in such suits or proceedings Now, the Local Government, in fact, has made no provision for making rules for regulating the procedure and, therefore, under sub section (3) of section 265, the only rules which apply are those mentioned in that sub section and those rules which are enumerated, as I said, under the headings (a) to (k) do not include the powers of the Court to stay proceedings. Therefore, it appears to me that as the Civil Procedure Code does not in itself apply to cases of this sort, and as the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act which alone gives a right of appeal to the High Court, although it prescribes the procedure to be followed, does not incorporate in that procedure the provisions of Order XLI, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code, that the right of the High Court to stay proceedings in cases of this nature cannot be exercised under the Civil Procedure Code. The matter, however, is not of very great importance in this case, because it seems to me quite clear that the Court has inherent jurisdiction as a Court of Appeal where an appeal lies to the High Court, to stay proceedings in the lower Court as ancillary to its powers as the Appellate authority to reverse an order of the inferior Court. That doctrine was laid down in Panchanan Singha Roy v. Dwarka Nath Roy (1) and again in Balkishen Sahu v. Khugnu (2). At the same time, I think that this right of staying execution in cases under appeal should be exercised sparingly and only in cases where it is manifest that justice demands such an exercise. We are prepared, therefore, to hear the applicant in this case and to consider whether there is any real ground upon which he is justified in asking us for a stay of execution.

COURTS, J.—I agree.

Order accordingly.

RAMA PRASAD SHUKUL—RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 22 (e)—Occupancy holding—Succession—Collateral assisting in cultivation—Co-sharer—Right of such collateral to inherit.

A person, collaterally related in the male line to an occupancy tenant, who assists in cultivating the land is a co-sharer in the cultivation, and on the death of the tenant is entitled, under section 22 (e) of the Agra Tenancy Act, to inherit his occupancy rights, his right being in no way affected by any proceedings of the landlord against a person who has no rights in the holding.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 22nd March 1918, in the case of determination of rent.

JUDGMENT.—It would have saved trouble if the respondent Ramprasad had been made a party in the suit of 1915. As he was not, the Commissioner is quite right in holding that it does not operate as res judicata against him.

On the merits, and I have gone through the record of both suits, I consider the Commissioner has come to a correct and equitable conclusion, and I find no legal flaw in it. The land was the ex proprietary holding of Ramkishan and, as his son predeceased him, it passed to his grandson, Sitaram. The respondent is a male collateral who undoubtedly helped Sitaram's mother to look after the land while Sitaram was away and, on the analogy of Selected Decision No. 3 of 1915, I think this would amount to co-sharing in cultivation. But there is further evidence that he did the same after Sitaram's return in ill-health from Kuch-Bihar. Sitaram, I may say, was a major and not a minor as Commissioner says.

The respondent, a collateral in male line of descent, who co-shared in cultivation with Sitaram, occupancy tenant at the time of his death, is entitled under section 22 (e) to inherit his occupancy right, and his right is in no way affected by the proceedings of the landholder appellant, against Musammat Balwanta, mother of Sitaram, who, of course, had no rights in the holding, as her husband, father of Sitaram, had predeceased his father Ramkishan. The grounds of appeal have no force.

I dismiss the appeal but without costs as Ramprasad, respondent, is to blame for not insisting on being made a party in the previous suit, though the fault lay chiefly with the Assistant Collector who tried that suit.

Appeal dismissed.

RAM DULARE LAL—PLAINTIFF AND KAMTA PERSHAD—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Execution of decree—Attachment—Objection by defendant whose name had been removed—Declaration, suit for, by decree-holder, maintainability of.

One J. P. was impleaded as one of the defendants in a suit to recover a sum of money; his name was removed from the array of defendants and a decree was passed against his father K. P., but the decree stated that J. P. was exempted and was to bear his own costs In execution of the decree certain property was attached and it was objected on behalf of J. P.; that the property belonged to him and not to K. P.; his objection was allowed. The decree-holder then brought the present suit for a declaration that the property was in fact the property of K. P. The Courts found that, as the outcome of a family conspiracy, the property had been entered in the name of J. P. and decreed the claim. In appeal to the High Court it was contended that, as J P. was a party to the original suit, his objection was final by reason of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and it was not open to the plaintiff to bring the suit:

Held, that J. P., having been expressly excluded from the former suit, was not a party to the suit, and, therefore, not a party to the decree, and that, on the findings of fact as to the family conspiracy, section 47 did not apply and the suit had been rightly decreed. [p. 187, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Farrukhabad, dated the 15th February 1917.

Messrs. Gulzari Lal and Baleshwari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Dr S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

RYVES, J.—In this appeal one technical point of some difficulty has been pressed. Ram Dulare Lal filed a suit in 1914 against Kamta Prasad and his minor son Jamna Prasad to recover a sum of money in the Court of the Munsif. During the pendency of the suit Ram Dulare Lal had petitioned that Jamna Prasad, the minor, should be exempted from the array of defendants. This was done. The suit was decreed against Kamta Prasad alone but it was stated in the decree that Jamna Prasad was exempted, the actual words being "bari kiya gaya", and he was to bear his own costs. In execution of that decree an objection was raised on behalf of Jamna Prasad to the effect that the property which had been attached as belonging to Kamta Prasad in fact belonged to him, and the execution Court upheld his objection because it appeared that the property stood recorded in the name of Jamna Prasad. Hence this suit for a declaration that the property was in fact the property of Kamta Prasad. It has been decreed in both Courts. The technical objection raised is that, inasmuch as Jamna Prasad was a party to the original suit, the objection raised by him being a party to the decree was final by reason of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it is not open, therefore, to the plaintiff to bring the suit. It seems to me, personally, a little difficult to hold that, although Jamna Prasad had been expressly excluded from that suit by Ram Dulare Lal, he still must be held to be a party to that suit and, therefore, a party to the decree. However, there is authority in Data Din v. Nanku (1) which, though the facts are different, nevertheless points in this direction. On the other hand, there is a Full Bench ruling in Vaddadi Sannamma v. Koduganti Radhabhayi (2) which certainly does fully support the contention of the appellant. It seems to me, however, that in this case the findings of fact render the application of section 47 of the Code inapplicable. In effect this suit is to get a declaration that the property has been entered in the name of Jamna Prasad as the outcome of a family conspiracy and the finding is that this is so. Under these circumstances, it seems to us on the facts as found that the suit was rightly decreed and the appeal must fail with costs including, in this Court, fees on the higher scale.

WALSH, J.—I agree.

BY THE COURT.—We dismiss this appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 283 OF 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Bevan Petman.
NIKKA MAL—PETITIONER
versus
THE MARWAR BANK, LIMITED, LAHORE, IN LIQUIDATION—RESPONDENT.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 16 (2) (c), 20 (d), 37—Application to avoid sale—Right to apply, when accrues—Creditor, whether can make application—Receiver, whether necessary party—Limitation—Terminus a quo—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 181—Insolvency Court, powers and duties of.

Before the right to make an application under section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act accrues, two conditions precedent have to be fulfilled: firstly, the application for insolvency must be made within three months of the transfer sought to be avoided, and, secondly, the debtor must be adjudged an insolvent. [p. 189, col. 1.]

The limitation for such an application is three years from the date when the right to apply accrues. [p. 189, col. 1.]

One L. sold certain property of his on the 5th November 1913. An application for insolvency was made on the 30th of January 1914 and L. was declared an insolvent on the 29th April 1914. An application to set aside the sale as against the Official Receiver, was made on the 19th December 1916:

Held, that the starting point for limitation was the 29th April 1914 and the application was not time-barred. [p. 189, col. 1.]

An Insolvent Estates Court is not only competent to entertain an application under section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, but it is bound to enquire judicially into the matter when it is brought to its notice. The proper procedure is for the Receiver to make the application or at least to be a party to it. [p. 190, col. 2.]

Kauleshar Ram v. Bhawan Prasad, 42 Ind. Cas 845 and Simil Rowther v. Kumarappa Chetty, 35 Ind. Cas. 875; (1916) 2 M. W. N. 182, followed.

Where, however, the Receiver fails to move in the matter, it is competent to a creditor to make the application. [p. 190, col. 2.]

Petition, under section 46 of Act III of 1907, for revision of the order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 20th December 1917, affirming that of the Judge, Insolvents Estates Court, Lahore, dated the 17th February 1917, ordering that the two sales be annulled against the Official Receiver.

Lala Rama Nand, for the Petitioner.

Mehta Bahadur Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This revision arises out of an application under section 37 of Act III of 1907 made to the Court of Insolvent Estates at Lahore by the Marwar Bank, Limited, in liquidation, to have a sale by an insolvent, Labhu Mal, in favour of one Nikka Mal declared null and void as against the Official Receiver. That Court annulled the sale as against the Official Receiver. Nikka Mal appealed to the District Court, Lahore, and his appeal was dismissed with costs.

For the petitioner it is contended that the application was barred under Article 181 of the Limitation Act, which allows three years as the longest period for an application. The sale deed is dated the 5th November 1913 and the application was made on the 19th December 1916.

For the respondent it is submitted that Article 181 relates only to applications under the Civil Procedure Code and I am referred to page 559 of Rustomji's Limitation Act, 2nd Edition, where all the authorities on this point are collected. It is further contended that, even if Article 181 applied, the three years have to be calculated from the date when the right to apply accrues and, before the right to make an application under section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act accrues, two conditions precedent have to be fulfilled, firstly, the application for insolvency must be made within three months of the transfer, and secondly, the debtor must be adjudged an insolvent. The application for insolvency was made on the 30th of January 1914, i.e., within three months, and Labhu Ram was declared an insolvent on the 29th April 914. Consequently the starting point for limitation would be the 29th April 1914 and the present application was made within three years and is not barred. There is force in these contentions and I hold that the application is not time-barred.

The next contention is that the lower Appellate Court erred in law in holding that the Marwar Bank had any locus standi and that the Official Receiver alone was competent to make the application. For this contention reliance is placed on the words "as against the Receiver" in section 37 itself and on sections 16 (2) (b) and 20 (d) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. It is also urged that the Official Receiver cannot delegate his powers to a creditor and that in these proceedings the Court had suggested to the Official Receiver to move in the matter but that official had not done so. Reference is also made to Sadodin v. Spiers (1) and Balaji Narayan Patvardhan v. Ram Chandra Govind Kanade (2). The former case is distinguishable. There an insolvent had instituted a suit to enforce the terms of a settlement regarding landed property made before he filed his petition in insolvency, and the Court held that any rights which the insolvent had in such settlement had vested in the Official Assignee and that a suit to enforce such rights could be maintained by the Official Assignee only. That is a different case to the present. The person owning a right in property is ordinarily the proper person to bring a suit to enforce that right. In the present case no such position or claim is set up by the applicant. As a creditor and one interested he asks for a declaration that a transfer shall be deemed void as against the Official Receiver for the benefit of all creditors. The decision in Balaji Narayan Patvardhan v. Ram Chandra Govind Kanade (2) related to a Receiver appointed under the Civil Procedure Code, and it was held that such a Receiver is not justified in delegating or entrusting to another a duty entrusted to him by the Court. The case is not in point, nor does the question of delegation arise in these proceedings. It is not alleged.

The words "as against the Receiver" in section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act do not indicate who should make the application or that an application is necessary. The section provides that certain transactions shall be deemed fraudulent and void as against the Receiver and shall be annulled by the Court.

Section 16 (2) (b) of the same Act provides that after an order of adjudication and during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings no creditor to whom the insolvent is indebted shall, except as provided by the Act, have any remedy against the property or person of the insolvent in respect of the debt or commence any suit or other legal proceeding except with the leave of the Court. The applicant is not asking for any remedy in respect of its debt. The clause appears to be badly worded. It obviously was not intended that a creditor could not commence a suit or other legal proceedings of any kind against persons unconnected with the insolvency and relating to other matters. Apparently these words relate also to the subject of a creditor's debt. The object of the clause is to forbid litigation independent of the provisions contained in the Act. There is nothing in this clause which supports the contention.

Section 20 (d) of the same Act provides that for the purposes of realising the property of the debtor and of distributing dividends the Receiver may "institute, defend or continue any suit or other legal proceeding relating to the property of the insolvent." This is an enabling section and there is no doubt but that the Receiver could have made the application.

The question here is, whether it is not competent to a Court of Insolvent Estates to entertain an application under section 37 made by a creditor to which the Receiver is not a party or itself to initiate proceedings on facts brought to its knowledge, and are such proceedings illegal and void for the reason that the Receiver is not a party to them? This point has apparently not been decided by any Court in India.

(1) 3 B. 437; 4 Ind. Jur. 218 & 350; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 291.

(2) 19 B. 660; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 442.

The following decisions have not been cited before me but they have a bearing on the point: Khushhali Ram v. Bholar Mal (3), Kauleshar Ram v. Bhawan Prasad (4) and Simil Rowther v. Kumarappa Chetty (5). In the first of these an application, which was construed as being an application under section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, was made by a creditor. The Judge held that no further inquiry was necessary. The learned Judges of the High Court held that the Judge misconceived the extent of his jurisdiction in insolvency proceedings and that he was bound to enquire into this question of the alleged mortgage at the instance of any creditor who claimed to be prejudiced thereby. The following passage occurs in the judgment:—

"He (the Judge) might have come to the conclusion that there had been a transfer by way of mortgage under circumstances calling for interference on his part under section 36 of the Insolvency Act, or he might have found that there had been a purely fictitious transaction, not involving a transfer.....and the property purporting to be affected by this mortgage would become available for the benefit of all the creditors free of incumbrance. We think that Khushaliram's application should have been taken up, notice of the same given.....and the questions raised enquired into and decided."

Section 36 of the Insolvency Act also contains the words "be void against the Receiver." This decision would equally apply to an application under section 37.

In Kauleshar Ram v. Bhawan Prasad (4) creditor made an application under section 36 of the Insolvency Act. On appeal to the High Court no objection was taken regarding the locus standi of the creditor. The objection was that proceedings had been taken without proper notice to the transferee. In accepting the appeal on this ground the learned Judges made the following observations:—

"We think that the proceedings to set aside the transfer ought to have been taken in the name of the Receiver and that no proceedings should have been commenced until after the appointment of a Receiver. No doubt the creditors (or any of them) are entitled to furnish the Receiver with information and evidence and to be examined when the matter is tried out."

In Simil Rowther v. Kumarappa Chetty (5) the learned Judges set aside an order of the Insolvency Judge relating to section 36 on the ground that he had not made a judicial enquiry and remarked: "We observe that the Official Receiver should have been and should now be made a party to the proceedings."

It would thus appear that the correct procedure is for the Receiver to make the application or at least be a party to them. In the present case, however, though his attention was called to the matter by the Court, the Receiver took no action. The Court should probably have directed the Receiver to make the application. Failure on the part of the Receiver and the Court in these respects compelled the applicant to move in the matter and to ask the Court to take action.

In my opinion the Court, under the circumstances, had power to entertain the application and, further, that it was the duty of the Court to judicially enquire into the matter when it was brought to its notice. This view is strongly supported by the decision in Khushhali Ram v. Bholar Mal (3) already referred to.

The next point urged for the petitioner is that the provisions of section 37 of the Insolvency Act have not been complied with. This matter is sufficiently dealt with by the lower Appellate Court. It is obvious that the insolvent could not meet his liabilities as they fell due. Counsel for the petitioner urges that if this property be held as that of the insolvent, it would form a further asset with which to pay, but he ignores the fact that the property is alleged to be worth Rs. 1,500 and was transferred in consideration for an alleged debt of Rs. 3,500 which was thereby paid off. It is obvious that until this transfer is set aside, the property is not available to the creditors.

(3) 28 Ind. Cas. 573; 37 A. 252; 13 A. L. J. 270.
(4) 42 Ind. Cas. 845.
(5) 35 Ind. Cas. 875; (1916) 2 M. W. N. 182.

It is also urged that the matter is res judicata. This contention is new and untenable. There was no final or other adjudication between the parties by order of the Insolvency Court dated the 26th August 1916.

Lastly it is urged that the transfer was not a voluntary one. This point has been fully dealt with by the lower Appellate Court and I see no grounds for interference. This revision is dismissed with costs.

Revision dismissed.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 4 (2), 19, 58—Grove held on yearly rent—Tenancy, whether established—Ejectment—Jurisdiction of Revenue Courts.

B., the grantee of some land, planted a grove thereon; after his death D. was admitted as a tenant on payment of a yearly rent. He continued to pay this rent from 1899 till 1910 when the present defendant sued in the Revenue Court and obtained a decree for his ejectment, the Board of Revenue holding that, though the grove in question was not "land" within the meaning of the Tenancy Act, a decree for ejectment could be given on the ground that D. came in after the death of the original grantee, not as his heir and not under the same contract as would bind him and the original grantee, but simply as a tenant paying rent from year to year. D. thereupon brought the present suit to obtain a declaration that the decree of the Board of Revenue was illegal being one which the Revenue Courts had no jurisdiction to pass:

Held, that a grove-holder such as D. was a non-occupancy tenant and the Revenue Courts had the power to eject him, and that the decision of the Board of Revenue was in no way illegal.

First appeal against the decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Benares, dated the 28th June 1916.

Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. N. Upadia, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Sarat Chandra Chowdhri, L. M. Banerji and Kashi Narain Malvaya, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The present respondent gave some land to Swami Bishudha Nand, it is said some 56 years ago, to plant a grove. In 1899 the Swami died. Subsequently, the Maharaja of Darbhanga was admitted as a tenant and paid the respondent Rs. 14 a year as rent. It appears that he was recorded in the revenue papers as a non-occupancy tenant. Be that as it may, he continued paying the rent up till the year 1910 when the respondent brought a suit to eject him under section 58 of the Tenancy Act. In his reply to that suit the Maharaja of Darbhanga made two somewhat contradictory statements. In paragraph 2 of his written statement he stated that the holding was a grove pure and simple, and that he was merely managing it as a sort of Shebait. In the 3rd paragraph he went on to say that, inasmuch as he had been in charge and management of the property for over 12 years, he had acquired a right of occupancy. Both the Assistant Collector and the Commissioner dismissed the suit holding that the defendant had proved himself to be an occupancy tenant. On revision to the Board of Revenue it was held, that occupancy rights could only be acquired in "land", and that the grove in question was not "land" within the meaning of the Act. It held that a decree for ejectment of the defendant could be given on the ground that, after the death of the Swami, the Raja of Darbhanga came in not as the heir of the Swami and, therefore, not under the same contract as would bind the defendant and the Swami, but that he simply came in as a tenant paying Rs. 14 year by year. The result was that the Raja of Darbhanga was ejected from the land. He then brought this suit for a declaration, for possession of the grove and mesne profits, on the ground that the defendant had no right to eject him and that the ruling of the Board of Revenue was illegal being one which the Revenue Courts had no jurisdiction to pass. There can be no doubt that such a grove-holder as the appellant is a tenant according to the definition in section 4 of the Act. Next, it remains to be seen whether he is a non-occupancy tenant. Section 19, in which the word "land" does not find a place makes it quite clear, that the appellant is a non-occupancy tenant. Therefore, the Revenue Court had power to eject him. Section 58 lays down the conditions under which a non-occupancy tenant may be ejected and there is nothing in that section which seems to exclude such a grove-holder. It is argued that section 58 implies a suit for ejectment from land, the word "land" as defined in section 4 (2) of the Act being land used for agricultural purpose. But there is no force in this argument. The section lays down how such a tenant is to be ejected from his tenancy. That tenancy need not necessarily be over land used for agricultural purposes. It seems to us, therefore, that the decision of the Board of Revenue was not only one which it had jurisdiction to pass but which was right. In this view, it is unnecessary to consider the various rulings of this Court and also of the Board of Revenue which have been cited to us, as our finding on this point concludes the appeal. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fee on the higher scale.

RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant--Settlement—Holding wrongly described as occupancy—Status of occupier, whether can be contested—Landlord, whether can confer occupancy rights on tenant.

Where a plot of land is misdescribed in the proceedings of a settlement as an occupancy holding, such misdescription would not prevent the zemindar from afterwards contesting the occupier's status.

A landlord cannot confer occupancy rights upon a tenant.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 10th October 1918 in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—The plot in suit was recorded as a grove in 1313. It could not have become occupancy of respondent in 1319 when settlement took place. It was misdescribed in proceedings before the settlement as an occupancy tenure and in a subsequent suit to enhance the Rs. 4 rent which the Settlement Officer fixed. Misdescription does not prevent the Zemindar from afterwards contesting the occupier's status and as in the enhancement case no enhancement was decreed, the Rs. 4 rent being maintained, there is no case for estoppel against the Zemindar on the ground that appellant accepted, without appealing, a decreed enhancement. The papers show that in 1320, wheat and barley was grown in 3 out of 5 bighas, sawan and peas on the same area in 1321, and paddy in 1322, 1323 and I have no doubt that the many young trees which a witness of appellant said are planted there now were planted there as a defence to suit. I notice that the Assistant Collector made a mistake in thinking that a landlord can confer occupancy rights on a tenant—he cannot do so, as decided in a Board's Selected Decision of 1918.

The Commissioner's decision is really one of fact, that the plot was a tenant's grove which has become arable by loss of trees and treated as such by the Settlement Officer who fixed rent and afterwards by the occupier, appellant, who grew wheat and other crops. There are no legal flaws in the Commissioner's decision and I am not prepared to interfere with it.

Appeal dismissed.

Arms Act (XI of 1878), ss. 19, 20—Chhavi, whether "arm"—Possession of chhavi, whether offence.

To determine whether a particular instrument is an arm within the meaning of the Arms Act, the real test is whether it is usually employed for the purpose of offence or defence

Crown v. Santa Singh, 16 P. R. 1900 Cr, followed.

The possession of a chhavi is unlawful under the Arms Act.

Appeal from the order of the Magistrate, Ist Class, with section 30 powers, Gurdaspur, dated the 29th March 1917, convicting the appellant.

Mr. Morton, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a very clear case under section 20 of the Indian Arms Act and does not require any lengthy discussion. There is a mass of evidence upon the record to prove the fact that on the night of the 19th February 1917 the appellant, Jinda, was arrested outside the abadi of the town of Sri Gobindpur, and that upon search a chhavi blade was found concealed in his loin cloth. The finding of the Magistrate upon this point has not been seriously assailed by the learned Counsel for the appellant.

The contention that chhavi does not come within the category of the word "arms" in the Arms Act cannot be accepted. As pointed out in Crown v. Santa Singh (1), the real test is, whether a particular instrument is usually employed for the purpose of offence or defence, and this test is fully satisfied by the weapon in question. There are numerous cases in which the possession of chhavi has been held to be unlawful under the Indian Arms Act, XI of 1878, vide, inter alia, Khem Singh v. Emperor (2). The fact that the offender was passing in front of the thana when leaving the town of Sri Gobindpur and that the chhavi was concealed in his loin cloth goes to show that he concealed it with the intention that it should not be known to the Police. These and other circumstances bring the case under section 20 of the aforesaid Act.

For the reasons set out above I confirm the conviction, and in view of the notorious character of the appellant I am not prepared to hold that the sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment is too severe. The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction to prosecute, application for—Small Cause Court, order made by—Revision—Court, proper.

Held by a majority of the Court (Jwala Prasad, J., dissenting), that clause (c) of sub-section 7 of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies to a Small Cause Court, and that the authority to review an order made by the latter Court granting or refusing sanction to prosecute is the District Court within whose local limits the Small Cause Court is situate. [p. 199, col. 2; p. 200, col. 2; p. 202, col. 1.]

Jwala Prasad, J.—Neither sub-section 7 of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code nor any of its clauses, (a), (b) or (c), applies to Courts of Small Causes. Under sub-section 6 of that section an application can be made both to the District Court and to the High Court for the purpose of revoking or granting a sanction given or refused by a Court of Small Causes. As a matter of procedure, however, such applications should not, except under special circumstances, be entertained by the High Court. [p. 204, col. ; p. 205, col. 2]

The scope of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code examined and discussed.

Civil Criminal revisions against the orders of the Small Cause Court Judge, Chapra, dated the 31st January 1919, granting sanction to prosecute the petitioners under sections 209, 210, 467 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code.

LALJI TEWARI v. EMPEROR.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Yunus (with him Mr. Ram Prasad), for the Petitioners.—This case involves a point of great importance and its importance is enhanced by the difference of opinion between eminent Judges of various High Courts. According to the law as it stands at present, the Allahabad High Court and the Calcutta High Court are against the view taken by the Patna High Court.

The preliminary point taken by the Crown is that the petitioners could not move the High Court direct against the order of the Small Cause Court Judge granting sanction to prosecute them. But I submit that if the word appeal is understood to have the meaning given to it in Sheo Nandan Prasad Singh v. Emperor (1), the contention of the other side is well met. In that case it was held that revision is a modified form of appeal, that 'revision' and superintendence are incidents of appellate jurisdiction and that the words 'Courts of Appeal' include a Court which entertains applications for revision. This being so, section 25 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act makes the High Court only as the Court of Appeal which can entertain appeals (including revisions) from the order of the Court of Small Causes and, therefore, by virtue of section 195 (7), Criminal Procedure Code, the petitioners are entitled to move the High Court direct.

Moreover, for the purposes of the Criminal Procedure Code appeal includes revision under section 439. Therefore, for all intents and purposes so far as the High Court is concerned, there is under the Criminal Procedure Code no difference between an appeal and a revision when section 195 is mentioned in section 439.

A reference to the provisions of section 195 as it found place in the previous Criminal Procedure Code is instructive. I shall have to refer to three Acts, namely, Act X of 1872, Act X of 1882 and Act V of 1898.

Sections 467 to 470 of Act X of 1872 contained provisions regarding sanction only but were silent regarding the subordination of Small Cause Courts relating to sanction. In Act X of 1882 the Sessions Judge was expressly given power to hear appeals against the sanction given by Small Cause Courts—compares section 195 of Act of 1882 with section 195 of the present Code. Therefore, under the present Act the intention of the Legislature was to take away this power from the District Court and vest it in the High Court. Reads section 25 of Act IX of 1887 and contends that the powers of the High Court under that section are as wide as that of an Appellate Court. Quotes Behram Kaikhushru Irani v. Ardeshir Kavasji (2), Elahi Buksh Mandal v. Ram Narayan Ghose (3), Shanker Singh v. Musammat Rekha (4) and Rupchand v. Minhomal Hardasmal (5).

Having regard to section 25 and section 28 of the Small Causes Courts Act and the view taken in Sheo Nandan Prasad Singh v. Emperor (1), the High Court is to all intents and purposes the Appellate Court of Small Causes and not the Court of the District Judge.

My second contention is that the Court of Small Causes is not a Civil Court. In the enumeration of the Civil Courts in the Civil Courts Act, i. e., the Bengal, N. W. P. and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, section 3, the Small Cause Court is not mentioned.

[DAS, J.—But that enumeration is not exhaustive. Read the opening words of the section; that is only for the purposes of this Act.]

Mr. Yunus.—I submit the Legislature has enumerated all the Civil Courts then in existence and it is significant that the Small Cause Court is left out.

[DAS, J.—For the obvious reason that there was a separate Act governing or defining the procedure, constitution, etc., of a Court of Small Causes.]

Section 16 of the Small Causes Courts Act excludes the jurisdiction of every other Court in cases coming within the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court and, therefore, a Court of Small Causes is distinct from a Civil Court. Reads section 24 of the Small Causes Courts Act, and section 102, Civil Procedure Code.

[JWALA PRASAD, J.—But read sections 2 (8), and 9, Civil Procedure Code, and section 15, Small Causes Courts Act.]

(3) 10 Ind. Cas. 117; 16 C. W. N. 288.

(5) 27 Ind. Cas. 366; 8 S. L. R. 164.

LALJI TEWARI v. EMPEROR.

Mr. Yunus.—These sections of the Civil Procedure Code are not applicable to Courts of Small Causes. Only such portions of the Civil Procedure Code apply as are made expressly applicable either by the Civil Procedure Code itself or by the Small Causes Courts Act. Further section 2 (8) gives the meaning of the Judge for the purposes of the Civil Procedure Code only.

I submit that if my contention is correct that a Small Cause Court is not a Civil Court, in that case it follows logically that the District Judge cannot review the sanction granted by the Small Cause Court and the High Court alone can interfere.

My third contention is that if your Lordships are against me on my previous submission, then there is no Court in existence capable of reviewing a sanction to prosecute given or refused by a Small Cause Court under the machinery provided by section 195, or in other words, clause (7) of section 195 does not apply to the Court of Small Causes. I rely on Ajudhya Prasad v. Ram Lal (6) and the cases of the High Court reported as Ambica Tewary v. Emperor (7) and Sukhdeo Singh v. District Magistrate of Muzaffarpur (8)—clearly sub clauses (a) and (b) of section 197 (7) do not apply, because there is no Court to which appeal ordinarily lies from a proceeding in a Small Cause Court (assuming that my first argument fails).

The principal Court of original jurisdiction must have reference to the class of cases in respect of which the principal Court is to be discovered. In civil cases for instance, it is the Court of the District Judge but inasmuch as the District Court has no original jurisdiction in Small Cause Court suits, therefore clause (7) cannot apply in such a case.

In the alternative I submit that as the High Court can try in its extraordinary jurisdiction suits of small causes, the authority capable of reviewing the sanction granted or refused under section 195 is the High Court, not the District Court.

The principal case against me of the Calcutta High Court is Nibaran Chandra v. Akshoy Kumar Banerjee (9). But their Lordships in that case did not discuss the point at all. They simply said that the practice in the Calcutta High Court was that such applications should be made to the District Judge and as such practice was not inconsistent with the interpretation of section 195, their Lordships did not deem it advisable to disturb that practice. I submit that your Lordships will not disturb the practice of this Court since its establishment. It is not correct to say that the view of Ajudhya Prasad v. Ram Lal (6) is followed here. Their Lordships have considered the point independently in this Court and come to the same conclusion. This interpretation is a reasonable one.

The Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Chidda Lal v. Bhajan Lal (10) has no doubt taken a different view, but the contentions which I have advanced were not considered there and in any view the High Court have ample power to interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code or section 107 of the Government of India Act.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad, Government Advocate (with him Mr. Monohar Lall Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.—My first submission is this that when a Subordinate Judge or Munsif is vested with the powers of a Small Cause Court Judge under section 25 of the Civil Courts Act of 1887, such officer nevertheless remains a Subordinate Judge or a Munsif, as the case may be although he is now exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court Judge, and, therefore, under clause (7) of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, the authority entitled to review the sanction order is the authority to which appeals from him ordinarily lie, i.e., the Court of the District Judge. For instance when a District Court is exercising its jurisdiction as a Probate Court or a Matrimonial Court it does not cease to be the Court of a District Judge. I submit that if this submission of mine is admitted as well founded, a great deal of difficulty in interpreting the section so far as it relates to Courts of Small Causes is removed.

My next submission is that the present applications are governed by clause (c) of sub-section (7) of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code.

The object of sub section 7 is to indicate that only one Court can review a sanction given or refused under section 195 and, therefore, clause (a) defines which of the two Courts is to be deemed to be the one Court which can review such an order, and clause (b) again defines or points out the one Court when there are different Courts, Civil or Criminal. But these two clauses contemplate a situation when appeals do lie ordinarily. In order to make clause 7 exhaustive the Legislature provides a Court even in cases when no appeal lies, e.g., a case tried by a Court of Small Causes. In such a case we must look to the class of Court trying that case, e g., Civil Court or Criminal Court or Revenue Court. I may submit here that the reasoning of Roe, J., in Ajudhya Prasad v. Ram Lal (6) is open to criticism when the learned Judge proceeds to consider the various sub divisions of Civil, Criminal and Revenue Courts, because no matter how you subdivide a Civil or a Revenue Court, the sub division must remain a Civil or a Revenue Court, as the case may be, and section 195 (2) distinctly points out that a Court means a Civil, a Criminal or a Revenue Court. Having then determined the Court which has tried the particular case out of which the sanction proceedings have originated and when no appeal lies, we find out, as directed by section 195 (7) (c), which is the principal Court of original jurisdiction for that class of Court, i.e., if it is a Civil Court we find out which is the principal Court of original civil jurisdiction, etc That is the authority to which the first mentioned Court shall be deemed to be subordinate, although it is not in fact so subordinate.

To resume, it cannot be doubted that a Small Cause Court is a Civil Court because it tries only suits of a civil nature. See section 15 (2) of the Act, reads the lines "all suits of a civil nature"—no appeal ordinarily lies from its decisions. I may submit here that the argument of the other side that revision is a modified form of appeal overlooks the word "ordinarily" purposely used by the Legislature in section 195 (7), and section 3 (15) of the General Clauses Act, X of 1897, defines the District Judge to be the Judge of the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction. Therefore, for the purposes of section 195 (7) (c) the Court of Small Causes shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Court of the District Judge.

In the prior Code of 1882 the clause corresponding to clause (c) in the present Code under section 195 provided that in the case of Small Cause Courts the right of review in matters of sanction rested with the Sessions Court. This anomaly was removed in the present Code, because it seemed extraordinary to vest a Criminal Court with jurisdiction over a Court of Small Causes, over which it could have no jurisdiction whatever as a Criminal Court.

As far as the case law is concerned, the Full Bench case of the Allahabad High Court reported as Chidda Lal v. Bhajan Lal (10) is the last word on the subject. The cases of this High Court reported as Ambica Tewary v. Emperor (7) and Sukhdeo Singh v. District Magistrate of Muzaffarpur (8) have been discussed and dissented from in that judgment as well as the ruling of Chamier, J., in Ajudhya Prasad v. Ram Lal (6). The case of Nibaran Chandra v. Akshoy Kumar Banerjee (9) likewise embodies the view of the Calcutta High Court.

Mr. Yunus, in reply.—The novel argument advanced by the learned Government Advocate as to a Small Cause Court Judge being still a Sub Judge or a Munsif, is quite erroneous. Section 33 of the Small Causes Courts Act is a complete answer to this argument.

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—This application in revision comes before this specially constituted Bench on a reference made by my learned brother Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad and myself with the consent of the Chief Justice.

The question which arises for decision in this application is: to what Court, if any, can an application, with respect to a sanction given or refused by a Court of Small Causes under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, be made for its revocation or grant as the case may be?

Before dealing specifically with the point requiring determination, it is desirable briefly to examine the scope of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the procedure laid down with reference to the rights created thereby.

Section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code confers upon certain authorities the right of granting sanction to prosecute certain individuals for offences against the specific sections of the Indian Penal Code mentioned therein. The power conferred to grant or refuse sanction rests (a) with certain public servants and (b) with Courts before whom offences against public justice may have been committed.

By sub-section (2) of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code the term "Court" is defined, and "Court" is therein declared to mean a Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court, but does not include a Registrar or a Sub-Registrar under the Indian Registration Act of 1877. Therefore, I take it, the term "Court" applies without restriction to the general classification of all Civil Courts, all Revenue Courts and all Criminal Courts.

Sub-section (6) of section 195 provides that any sanction given or refused may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority granting or refusing it is subordinate. Sub-section (6), however, does not apparently give an express and unqualified right of appeal to the persons or parties against whom sanction has been given or refused respectively. It is merely an enabling section authorising a superior authority to review an order of sanction granted or refused by a subordinate authority.

The word "authority", as used in section (6), applies to public servants within the meaning of clause (a) of sub section (1) and to Courts within the meaning of clauses (b) and (c) of sub section (1). When, however, the authority granting or refusing sanction to prosecute is a Court, then the provisions of sub section (6) apply and regulate the procedure to be adopted with reference to the authority to be vested with power to review a sanction antecedently given or refused. Sub section (7) runs as follows: —"For the purposes of this section every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie." Then by way of explanation of the meaning and purport of sub-section (7) are added three clauses (a), (b) and (c) for the purpose of defining when one Court is or may be deemed to be subordinate to another, with a view of ascertaining the Court which has power to review a sanction to prosecute granted or refused by a Court subordinate to it.

Section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code is self-contained, and provides its own procedure, and from within the four corners of the section itself we must ascertain its true meaning and intent.

Sanction to prosecute the petitioners Lalji Tiwari and Dipak Tiwari was granted by the Judge of the Small Cause Court of Chapra on the 31st January 1919 under sections 209, 210, 467 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code, read with section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. From the sanction so granted application was made by the petitioners respectively by separate applications to the High Court to revoke the sanction so granted by the Judge of the Small Cause Court of Chapra. It was contended before us that in such cases the High Court is the authority within the meaning of sub-section (7) of section 195 to review a sanction granted or refused by a Small Cause Court Judge, inasmuch as the Court of Small Causes is immediately subordinate to the High Court, as appeals from a Court of Small Causes lie directly to the High Court by virtue of the provisions of section 25 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act of 1887.

Mr. Yunus argues that the right to review a sanction given or refused by a Small Cause Court is only entertainable by the High Court, and he relies upon sub-section (7) of section 195.

The argument of Mr. Yunus is based entirely on the right of revision and superintendence exercisable by the High Court over a Court of Small Causes under section 25 of the Small Causes Courts Act, and he contends that section 25 confers in a modified form a right of appeal even though applications presented under section 25 to the High Court may be revisional; and he cites in support of this contention a case reported as Sheo Nandan Prasad v. Emperor (1), in which it was laid down that an application in revision is an appeal in a modified form.

However, we feel unable to assent to the first branch of the argument addressed to us by Mr. Yunus.

Sub-section (7) of section 195 refers to cases in which an unqualified and absolute right of appeal is given from the decision by one Court to another at the instance of a party to the litigation before it. Section 25 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act does not confer an absolute and unqualified right of appeal. It merely enables the High Court in the exercise of its discretion and power of superintendence to revise the proceedings of the Small Cause Court with a view of seeing that justice is done and that the law is properly applied and administered. In no sense, therefore, can it be said that the High Court is the Court to which appeals from Small Cause Courts ordinarily lie, in the sense contemplated by sub section (7) of section 195.

Alternatively Mr. Yunus suggests that if his first argument fails that then there is no Court in existence capable of reviewing a sanction to prosecute given or refused by a Small Cause Court; and in support of this contention he relies upon what he conceives to be the true construction of clause (c) of sub section (7), which he argues has no application to a Small Cause Court and reliance is placed in support of this proposition upon the rulings reported as Ajudhya Prasad v. Ram Lal (6), Ambica Tewary v. Emperor (7) and Sukhdeo Singh v. District Magistrate of Muzaffarpur (8).

Mr. Yunus admits that clauses (a) and (b) of sub section (7) of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code cannot apply to a Small Cause Court, inasmuch as there is no Court (if his first argument fails) to which an appeal ordinarily lies from a proceeding in a Small Cause Court; and thus it is conceded that the only clause of sub-section (7) which can apply with reference to the question now requiring determination by this Court is clause (c); and in support of this contention reliance is strongly placed on the reported decisions of this Court which were decided by our late and distinguished Chief Justice, Sir Edward Chamier, that clause (c) does not apply to a Small Cause Court and that, therefore, a Small Cause Court is a Court whose orders as to granting and refusing sanction to prosecute are immune and incapable of review by any superior authority whatsoever.

Clause (c) runs as follows:—"Where no appeal lies, such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the principal Court of original jurisdiction within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such first-mentioned Court is situate."

Two contentions are put forward as to what is the construction of this clause: The first is that the principal Court of original jurisdiction in any district or area defined by the Local Government under its powers is the District Court; but that inasmuch as the District Court has no original jurisdiction in Small Cause Court suits that, therefore, no right of review can rest with it in respect of sanctions granted or refused by a Small Cause Court.

The second contention advanced is that on the authority of the decisions cited, clauses (a), (b) and (c) of sub section 7 of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, deal not with Courts granting or refusing sanction to prosecute, but to cases in which sanction to prosecute has been granted or refused, and that consequently clause (c) applies to a proceeding of a non-appealable character in an original suit in which an appeal lay This argument was assented to by a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court reported as Ajudhya Prasad v. Ram Lal (6) and as a logical extension of the ratio decidendi of that decision, Chief Justice Chamier held in this Court in a case reported as Ambica Tewary v Emperior (7) that a Small Cause Court was not directly or indirectly within the purview of clause (c) of sub-section (7) of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Mr. Justice Roe, following the decision of Sir Edward Chamier in this Court, likewise yielded to a similar contention, and held that the District Court was not the Court of original jurisdiction with reference to Small Cause Court matters and suits, and that the District Court could not, therefore, be said to be the authority contemplated by clause (c) for reviewing sanctions granted or refused by a Small Cause Court situated within its territorial limits. Mr. Justice Roe further held that on the true construction of clause (c) of sub-section (7) the only Court of original jurisdiction in existence in respect of Small Cause Court matters was the Small Cause Court itself and that, therefore, the Small Cause Court was the only authority capable of reviewing its own decisions granting or refusing sanction to prosecute. This decision was criticised in the Full Bench ruling reported as Chidda Lal v. Bhajan Lal (10), and as was pointed out, such a construction of clause (c) of sub-section 7 would lead to hopeless anomaly and render the interpretation of the sub-section 7 of section 195 an obvious absurdity, a result which we must presume the Legislature never intended according to the established rule for the construction of Statutes.

The fundamental error underlying the decision of the Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court reported as Ajudhya Prasad v. Ram Lal (6) appears to us to be in construing sub-section 7 of section 195 and the explanatory clauses annexed thereto as dealing only with cases in which appeals lie to certain Courts. It appears to us for the purpose of construing sub-section 7 of section 195 to be immaterial whether an appeal lies in certain cases or not; but the vital consideration is whether an appeal ordinarily lies from one Court to another superior to it, and to which the first Court is as a general rule subordinate If this then be the true construction of sub-section (7), as we believe it is, then clause (c) of sub section (7) cannot have the restricted and limited interpretation put upon it by the Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the ruling already referred to.

Sub-section 7 purports to define when a Court is subordinate to another; and in order to make the meaning of the Legislature clear illustrations are appended to that sub-section in sub-clauses (a), (b) and (c) for the purpose of showing when one Court is or is deemed to be subordinate to another. The illustrations contained in clauses (a) and (b) are free of difficulty; and clause (c), we think, was intended to apply where no appeal at all lay from the Court exercising the functions and powers conferred by section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. A Small Cause Court is such a Court, because no appeal lies from it save and except by way of revision under section 25 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act, and to a limited extent in certain respects under section 24 of the Small Causes Courts Act to the District Judge.

The majority of us are of opinion that clause (c) of sub-section 7 of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies only to Courts from which no appeal lies, whether the Court be a Civil Court, a Criminal Court or a Revenue Court.

The Government Advocate, however, submits a very clear argument in answer to the case put forward on behalf of the petitioners by Mr. Yunus. Shortly summarised, the Government Advocate's contention is that in cases of Small Cause Courts a review of a grant or refusal of sanction to prosecute is only entertainable by the District Judge's Court, and not by the High Court. This argument on behalf of the Government Advocate is subdivided into two branches:—

It appears that in this province only one Small Cause Court was created under the provisions of the Small Causes Courts Act of 1887 and that that Court is the Small Cause Court situate at Dinapur. In every other District a Subordinate Judge or Munsif is vested with the powers of a Small Cause Court Judge under section 25 of the Civil Courts Act of 1887; and thus the Government Advocate contends that the Subordinate Judge or Munsif, as the case may be, vested with the powers of the Small Cause Court Judge is still, while acting as a Small Cause Court Judge, nevertheless a Munsif or a Subordinate Judge, as the case may be, and that in testing the right of the authority to review a sanction given or refused by a Subordinate Judge or a Munsif while so acting as a Small Cause Court's Judge, the authority to review such sanction is with the tribunal to whom an appeal ordinarily would lie from a Subordinate Judge or a Munsif as such; and that, therefore, the provisions of clause (a) of sub-section 7 come into play and the authority to review such sanction given by a Subordinate Judge or a Munsif vested with powers of a Small Cause Court's Judge is the Court to whom an appeal would ordinarily lie from each of them. This argument was strongly assailed in reply; and, in our opinion, it is not well founded. The Subordinate Judge or Munsif vested with powers of the Small Cause Court's Judge exercises, while acting as such, a different and wholly distinct jurisdiction from that which they exercise either as a Subordinate Judge or as a Munsif; and consequently that the limitations and rights and obligations attaching to their jurisdiction as a Subordinate Judge or a Munsif cannot affect the rights and obligations which they exercise in their capacity as a Judge of a Small Cause Court. The two jurisdictions are materially independent of each other.

In the alternative the Government Advocate contends that then the present applications are governed by clause (c) of sub-section (7), and he argues that in every case where no appeal lies from a Court that then the authority to review a grant or refusal to sanction a prosecution is the principal Court of original jurisdiction within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such first-mentioned Court is situate; and he urges that this applies in every case whether it be civil, criminal or revenue. The learned Government Advocate concedes that no appeal lies directly from a Small Cause Court to the District Judge's Court as such, save within the limits of section 24 of the Small Causes Courts Act; but he contends that clause (c) was not designed to create new or disestablish existing rights or to fetter a jurisdiction antecedently existing, but that it was merely designed to constitute an authority which should be deemed for the purpose of clause (c) as the authority capable of reviewing a sanction to prosecute granted or refused by a Court from which no appeal lay. In the prior Code of Criminal Procedure in 1882, the clause which corresponds to clause (c) of sub-section (7) of the present Code provided that in the case of Small Cause Courts the right of review in matters of sanction should rest with the Sessions Court. This was an extraordinary provision to have enacted, inasmuch as the Court of Session as a Criminal Court had no jurisdiction whatsoever over a Court of Small Causes. However, the enactment contained in the prior Code of 1882 may be regarded to afford some indication of why the change was made in clause (c) as it, at present, stands; the idea being to take away the power of review from the Sessions Court, viz., a Criminal Court, and giving it to the Civil Court of principal original jurisdiction in which the Small Cause Court is within the limits of the territorial jurisdiction of the District Court situate. The later enactment is no more arbitrary than the prior enactment, and for apparent reasons the principal Civil Court was given a special jurisdiction to review sanctions granted by a Court exercising a civil jurisdiction from whom no appeal lay.

District Judge is defined by clause 15 of the General Clauses Act of 1897 as being the Judge of the principal Court of original jurisdiction in which the District Court is situate. It would appear that there is no corresponding statutory enactment defining a principal Court of original jurisdiction referable to criminal and revenue matters and proceedings; but by analogy it would seem to be that in criminal cases the District Magistrate is the Court of original criminal jurisdiction, while in revenue cases the Collector is the Court of original jurisdiction.

Shortly summarised, therefore, clause (c) clearly appears to bear the interpretation that where no appeal lies from a Court administering civil, criminal or revenue jurisdiction respectively, that then the principal Court of each of such classifications of jurisdiction shall be deemed the principal Court for reviewing sanctions granted or refused by a Court in respect of each from which no appeal lies.

It was contended by Mr. Yunus that the Small Cause Court, though a Court, is not a Civil Court; and the only ground suggested to support such a contention was, that the Small Cause Court as a Civil Court was not mentioned in the enumeration of Civil Courts specified in the Civil Courts Act.

With great respect to Mr. Yunus's argument we think it is entirely and absolutely unfounded. The test is not whether the Court is within the purview of the Civil Courts Act; but whether it is a Court constituted for the administration of civil justice, and regulating the civil rights of His Majesty's subjects inter se. Undoubtedly the Small Cause Court is a Court exercising civil jurisdiction, and as such is within the general scope and purview of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure

However, the question which we have to consider has been recently the subject of a considered judgment of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court, presided over by the Acting Chief Justice, with his colleagues Mr. Justice Piggott and Mr. Justice Walsh. The Allahabad High Court unanimously held that the decision of Sir Edward Chamier reported as Ajudhya Prasad v. Ram Lal (6) was an erroneous expression of the law; and the Allahabad High Court reversed the authority of the decision, which was challenged; and likewise the Allahabad High Court dissented in strong and definite terms from the decisions of this Court reported as Ambica Tewary v. Emperor (7) and Sukhdeo Singh v. District Magistrate of Muzoffarpur (8). By the ruling of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court it is now the positive law of the United Provinces that clause (c) of sub-section (7) of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure applies to a Small Cause Court, and that the authority to review its orders granting or refusing sanction to prosecute is the District Court in which such Small Cause Court is situate.

Following the decisions already referred to in this Court the matter was also agitated in the Calcutta High Court and discussed in a ruling reported as Nibaran Chandra v. Akshoy Kumar Banerjee (9), and in that case the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court held that it had always been the universal practice in Bengal that in respect of Small Cause Courts constituted under the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act of 1887, that the District Court was the Court to review grants or refusals of sanctions to prosecute made by a Small Cause Court; and that the practice was too long settled and too firmly established to admit of being reviewed at so late a period of time, and accordingly the Calcutta High Court declined to follow the decisions of this Court reported as Ambica Tewary v. Emperor (7) and Sukhdeo Singh v. District Magistrate of Muzaffarpur (8) respectively.

So also in a ruling reported as Jamna Das v. Subapathy Chetti (11) the High Court of Madras declined to follow the decisions of this Court.

(11) 12 Ind. Cas. 521; 36 M. 138; 10 M. L. T. 278; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 259; 21 M. L. T. 1074; 12 Cr. L. J. 545.

It has been stated more than once by distinguished Judges of this Court that where a uniform course of practice existed referable to particular legal principles in the province of Bengal before the partition, that then this Court would recognise such practice in the administration of law in this province. Therefore on the grounds of continuity from long established practice I would have thought that in this province at least a new departure would not have been hastily embarked on without consideration which was inconsistent with the prior existing practice prevailing in old Bengal when the present province of Behar and Orissa fell within its jurisdiction.

However, the decision of Sir Edward Chamier reported as Ajudhya Prasad v. Ram Lal (6) having been so severely criticised, the entire foundation to support the authority of his pronouncement in this Court as declared in the ruling reported as Ambica Tewary v. Emperor (7) loses much of its weight.

Having considered very carefully all the authorities, and finding that in all the other High Courts in India the practice is in conformity with the law as now declared by the Full Bench ruling in the Allahabad High Court, we are of opinion that the law laid down in Ajudhya Prasad v. Ram Lal (6) and the two subsequent cases in this Court reported as Ambica Tewary v. Emperor (7) and Sukhdeo Singh v. District Magistrate of Muzaffarpur (8) can no longer be regarded as a sound or proper legal interpretation of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Just one additional word. Clause (c) only deems a certain Court to be an authority to review a sanction granted or refused by a Small Cause Court. It in no way affects the antecedent jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court, nor does it enlarge the powers of the District Court, viz., the principal Court within whose local limits the Small Cause Court is situate. Section 195 merely provides that the District Court shall be deemed, viz., shall be considered or taken to be the authority to review; and this is so irrespective of the fact that the District Court as the principal Court of original jurisdiction is not a Court in respect of which the Small Cause Court stands in any relationship in the exercise of its original jurisdiction as such.

Consequently the majority of this Court is of opinion that the application as presented on behalf of the petitioners to the High Court is not entertainable under the provisions of section 195 of the Small Causes Courts Act, and that the proper Court to review the order of the Small Cause Court is the District Court of Chapra.

The law, however, has been in some doubt; and, therefore, we think it would be unfair to the petitioners to deprive them now of exercising the right to which we believe they are entitled, as a result of this decision. Accordingly we shall give the petitioners leave to withdraw the applications made to this Court with a view of presenting the same to the District Court for its consideration, as the authority indicated by law to review orders made in such cases as the present.

Sanctions granted or refused by a Small Cause Court may come before this Court in its revisional jurisdiction under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or possibly under section 107 of the Government of India Act, but not certainly under the provisions of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which is self-contained and marks out and defines the procedure applicable in its own terms.

Accordingly both these petitions are dismissed.

DAS, J.—I concur in the judgment delivered by Mr. Justice Atkinson.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The question for determination is "whether an order granting sanction to prosecute by a Judge of a Small Cause Court is appealable under the provisions of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; and if an appeal is sustainable, to what Court does such an appeal lie."

The first part of the question must be answered in the affirmative. Although, strictly speaking, there is no right of appeal against an order giving or refusing sanction under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, any person aggrieved by such an order is entitled to apply for the setting aside of the same. Such a right was given by the former Code of Criminal Procedure of 1882, under which an application against an order passed by a Small Cause Court under section 195 was entertainable by the Court of Session for the Division within which the Small Cause Court was situate and to which it was declared to be subordinate by an express enactment in the section. The present Code has only omitted the provision of the former Code declaring a Court of Small Causes to be subordinate in the matter of giving or refusing sanction to the Court of Session but has not taken away the substantive right of making an application to a superior authority. The right has been re-affirmed in clear and unambiguous terms in sub-section 6, which provides that "any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate."

The word 'authority' has been advisedly used in the sub section in order to include a 'public servant' where sanction is given or refused under clause (a) of sub-section (1) in respect of offences mentioned therein, and a 'Court' where sanction is given or refused under clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1). In either case the sanction given or refused may be revoked or granted by the authority to which the 'public servant' or the 'Court', as the case may be, is subordinate. A sanction given or refused by a Judge of a Small Cause Court comes under clause (b) or (c) of sub section (1) and is liable to be revoked or granted by any authority to which the Court of Small Causes is subordinate and an application for the same purpose may be made to such an authority.

In order, therefore, to answer the second part of the reference, namely, to what Court an application against the order made by a Small Cause Court under section 195 would lie, it is necessary to find out the authority to which a Court of Small Causes is subordinate.

Under the Code of Civil Procedure (section 3) and the Small Causes Courts Act (section 28), a Court of Small Causes is subordinate both to the District Court and the High Court within the territorial limits of which the Small Cause Court is situate. By 'District Court' is meant the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction within the local limits of a district presided over by a District Judge [vide section 2 (4) of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 3 (15) of the General Clauses Act].

Accordingly, Mr. Justice Piggott in the Full Bench case of Chidda Lal v. Bhajan Lal (10) came to the conclusion that "the Judge of a Court of Small Causes" is an authority subordinate, within the meaning of sub-section 6, both to the High Court and to the District Court.....and that according to this sub section, therefore, a person against whom an order giving sanction has been passed by a Judge of Small Cause Court would be entitled to apply for revocation of the same either to the District Judge or to the High Court." With this view I entirely agree.

It is, however, contended that under sub-section 7 a Small Cause Court should be deemed subordinate only to the District Court and that the right of making an application under sub-section 6 is, therefore, restricted to that Court only.

Sub-section 7 runs as follows:— "For the purposes of this section every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie, that is to say:—

(a) Where such appeals lie to more than one Court, the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction shall be the Court to which such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate;

(b) Where such appeals lie to a Civil and also to a Revenue Court, such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Civil or Revenue Court according to the nature of the case in connection with which the offence is alleged to have been committed;

(c) Where no appeal lies, such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the principal Court of original jurisdiction within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such first-mentioned Court is situate." It has to be seen whether and which of the aforesaid clauses (a), (b) and (c) of sub-section (7) would apply to a sanction given by a Court of Small Causes.

Broadly speaking, no appeal ordinarily lies from the decision of a Court of Small Causes and hence the main sub section 7 with clauses (a) and (b) has obviously no application. The doubt and difficulty has hitherto arisen with respect to clause (c) only, but the learned Government Advocate contends that clause (a) would apply to a sanction given by a Subordinate Judge in the exercise of his jurisdiction as a Judge of a Court of Small Causes conferred upon him under section 25 of the Civil Courts Act, XII of 1887.

It is argued that an appeal ordinarily lies from the decision of a Subordinate Judge exercising civil jurisdiction under the Civil Courts Act and hence even in respect of his orders passed in the exercise of his jurisdiction vested under section 25 of the Civil Courts Act as a Judge of a Small Cause Court from which there is no appeal, it must be held for the purposes of sub-section 7 of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure that an appeal ordinarily lies. Hence applying section 21 of the Civil Courts Act under which an appeal from the decision of a Subordinate Judge ordinarily lies either to the District Judge or the High Court according to the value of the suit, it is said that the former Court, being "the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction," should be deemed to be the Court to which a Subordinate Judge exercising powers of a Small Cause Court is subordinate under clause (a) of sub section 7. The argument, no doubt, was very ingenious and at the first sight appeared to be plausible, but looking closely into the matter there does not appear to be much substance in it.

It is conceded that the clause has no application to the sanction granted by a Court of Small Causes established under section 5 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act, IX of 1887. The distinction is sought to be made between the Court so constituted and that of a Subordinate Judge vested with the powers of a Small Cause Court under section 25 of the Civil Courts Act. This is a distinction without any difference.

The answer to the aforesaid contention is to be found in sections 4 and 33 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act. These sections make it perfectly clear that a Court of a Subordinate Judge, while trying suits cognizable by a Court of Small Causes under powers vested by section 25 of the Civil Courts Act, is a Small Cause Court within the meaning of section 4 of the said Act and exercises jurisdiction quite distinct from and independent of his jurisdiction as a Court of civil jurisdiction under the Civil Courts Act.

LALJI TEWARI v. EMPEROR.

Sections 24, 25 and 27 of the Small Causes Courts Act will, therefore, apply to decrees or orders passed by a Court of Subordinate Judge while exercising powers under the Small Causes Courts Act and no appeal will ordinarily lie from the decree or order of that Court. Clause (a) of sub-section 7 has, therefore, no application to the present case and the contention of the learned Government Advocate must fail.

Clause (b) of sub-section 7 also has obviously no application.

It then remains to be seen whether sanction given by a Court of Small Causes comes under clause (c) of the sub-section. If this clause is read as a distinct and separate sub-section, a Court of Small Causes might come under it inasmuch as no appeal lies from a Court of Small Causes. But if this clause is read as a part of and as explanatory of sub-section 7, it would be difficult to apply this to a Court of Small Causes for sub-section 7 applies only to a Court from which appeals "ordinarily lie." In the case of Ajudhia Prasad v. Ram Lal (6) Chamier, J., although the matter did not directly arise in that case, held that the whole sub-section 7 and with it clause (c) did not apply to a Court of Small Causes, inasmuch as that sub section is "confined to Courts against whose decisions or some of whose decisions appeals do lie" as the opening words of the sub-section clearly indicate, and hence the words in clause (c) "where no appeal lies" did not "refer to Courts against none of whose decisions an appeal lies but to refer to particular cases in which no appeal lies." Karamat Hussain, J., agreed in this view and in support of it quoted his own decision in Wazir Mohammad v. Hub Lal (12). The point directly arose subsequently in this Court in the case of Ambica Tewary v. Emperor (7) and Sir Edward Chamier, then Chief Justice of this Court, adhered to the opinion expressed by him in the aforesaid Allahabad case and held that clause (c) of sub-section 7 cannot be construed as if it were an independent sub section. This view was followed by Mr. Justice Roe in a later decision of this Court in Sukhdeo Singh v. District Magistrate of Muzaffarpur (8), where the learned Judge held that the words 'that is to say' "indicate not that a supplementary provision is to be found in clause (c) but merely an explanation of the words 'to which an appeal ordinarily lies.'" This view has since been acted upon by this Court in several cases without any discussion. Placed as clause (c) is, namely, as a subordinate clause to sub section 7 and introduced into it by the words 'that is to say', it is difficult to disagree with the view taken in the aforesaid cases and to hold that clause (c) does anything more than explaining and elucidating the opening words of the sub section, namely, "for the purposes of this section every Court shall be deemed subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie." The difficulty in applying the clause to a Court of Small Causes created by the words 'that is to say' in sub-section 7 has been felt by almost all the learned Judges who had to construe it. I would now discuss the cases in which a contrary view was taken and clause (c) was applied to orders made by a Small Cause Court. In the case of Nibaran Chandra v. Akshoy Kumar Banerjee (9) it was expressly said that the said words 'that is to say' in sub section 7, when read with sub-clause (c), "entail a difficulty." But the sub clause was applied to the Court of Small Causes not on the ground of true construction of it but on the ground of practice and of analogy drawn from the fact that the Presidency Small Cause Court is subordinate to the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court and hence the Provincial Small Cause Courts should be deemed to be subordinate to the District Courts. The decision of the Madras High Court in Appavu Kavundan, In re (13) is of no assistance for the purpose of construing the clause, inasmuch as it has not given any reason, or discussion for the view taken by it. This difficulty was got over by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Chidda Lal v. Bhajan Lal (10) by trying to omit the words 'that is to say' from sub-section 7 altogether while construing clause (c), or by putting a loose interpretation upon the words in order to give effect to an intention of the Legislature, namely, to restrict the right of application under sub-section 6 in respect of orders made by a Small Cause Court to one Court instead of to two Courts, as would have been the case if clause (c) had not applied.

In order to determine whether this was the "Legislative intent", let us look to the law on the point prior to the present Code and the object with which clauses (a), (b) and (c) were inserted in the present Code. Section 195 of the Code of 1882 simply provided that the Court giving or refusing sanction should be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie, and there were no provisions similar to those in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of the present Code. This led to conflicting rulings and clauses (a), (b) and (c) were added in the present Code with a view to getting rid of the difficulty. Clause (a) provides for the case of a Subordinate Court against whose decisions appeals lie to two different Courts of different grades. For instance, under section 21 of the Civil Courts Act, an appeal lies to the District Court and the High Court according to the value of the suit decided by a Subordinate Judge. Clause (b) provides for the case of a subordinate Court against whose decisions appeals lie to two different kinds of Courts; for instance, Civil and Revenue Courts in certain rent cases. Clause (c) provides for cases where appeals ordinarily lie from the decisions of a Court but no appeals lie in particular cases. The object of adding clauses in the present Code to the provision in sub section 7 was only to explain and elucidate sub section 7 and to meet the exigencies created by the conflicting authorities under the old Code. Neither in the old nor in the present Code, a Court of Small Causes comes under the main provision in sub section 7.

Again the Legislature does not pretend to restrict the right of making an application under sub-section 6 to one public servant as a superior authority, where sanction is given by a public servant under sub section (1) (a) of section 195.

Take the case of a Sub-Inspector of Police or an Excise Sub-Inspector, who is subordinate to more than one officer, where an order giving or refusing sanction by him may be set aside by any one of the public servants to whom he may be subordinate. There are many instances of a public servant being subordinate to more than one authority. Why should we then assume an intention of restricting the right to make an application to one Court only as a superior 'authority' referred to in the said sub section 6, unless such an intention is clearly expressed by the Legislature? This intention of course is clear in the case of a Court giving or refusing sanction from which an appeal ordinarily lies, but in the particular cases no appeal lies. The intention is not clear in the case of a Court from which no appeal at all lies, as in the case of a Small Cause Court.

There is, therefore, no justification for reading clause (c) as a separate sub-section, or to interpret it otherwise than its plain language, its position and the grammatical construction indicate, on the ground of carrying out effectually the intention of the Legislature. The intention of the Legislature to include a Small Cause Court within clause (c) is not clearly established.

This clause was, however, applied to a Small Cause Court in the case of Nibaran Chandra v. Akshoy Kumar Banerjee (9), on the analogy that as a Presidency Small Cause Court is subordinate to the High Court within the limits of whose jurisdiction it is situate, it would appear to follow that a Provincial Small Cause Court is similarly subordinate for the purposes of section 195 to the Court of the District Judge. This analogy has been quoted with approval in the Allahabad Full Bench case of Chidda Lal v. Bhajan Lal (10). But the analogy does not hold good, inasmuch as under section 6 of the Presidency Small Causes Courts Act the High Courts of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, Madras and Bombay have been expressly declared to be the only Courts to which the Presidency Small Causes Courts are subordinate, whereas the Small Causes Courts Act and the Code of Civil Procedure have declared a Small Cause Court to be subordinate both to the District Court and the High Court.

Again, the cases already adverted to have referred to the prevailing practice, whereby the District Judge exercises jurisdiction in respect of sanction given or refused by a Court of Small Causes. This practice necessarily must have grown after 1898 when the new Code came into operation, for prior to that the Sessions Judge was declared by an express provision in the Code of 1882 to be the authority to which a Court of Small Causes was to be deemed subordinate for the purposes of section 195. There are, therefore, not many reported cases relating to the practice referred to above. On the other hand, within these few years the views taken in the different High Courts have been different. It is more than doubtful if there has been an uniform interpretation of the Statute and that that interpretation has been adhered to without interruption, or that the practice has been so general and of such a long standing that it has taken the place of a settled law in the province : vide Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes. On the other hand, the decision in the case of Ambica Tewary v. Sing Emperor (7), passed soon after this Court was created, has been followed by this Court in several reported and unreported cases. I would, therefore, not rely upon practice for the determination of the question before us as to which Court should have power under section 195 to set aside an order passed by a Small Cause Court. I, therefore, hold that on none of the grounds of "Legislative intent," "analogy" or "practice", sub-section 7 or any of its sub-clauses (a), (b) and (c) applies to Courts of Small Causes.

In the view that I have taken it is unnecessary to consider what would be "the principal Court of original jurisdiction" referred to in clause (c) as the authority to which a Small Cause Court should be deemed subordinate in case the said clause did apply.

I would only observe that the omission on the part of the Legislature to define "the principal Court of original jurisdiction" has created hopeless difficulties and conflict of opinions. It is said that the said words must be construed to be the principal Civil, Criminal and Revenue Courts of original jurisdiction according as the order passed under section 195 be by a Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court respectively, and in support of this sub-section (2) of section 195 is referred to. In that sub-section the Legislature no doubt has declared that "in clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1), the term 'Court' means a Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court", but that definition is expressly restricted to the clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1) and has not been declared to apply to the rest of the section including sub-section (7).

Again, the difficulty is not solved by reading the words "civil, criminal or revenue" in the said clause, for there is no definition in the General Clauses Act or anywhere else of a principal Court of original, criminal or revenue jurisdiction, though "the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction" has been defined by clause 15 of section 3 of the General Clauses Act to mean the Court of a District Judge. Much is left to surmise and guess in order to find out what Court is meant by the Legislature in using the said expression in clause (c).

Mr. Yunus argues that with regard to suits cognizable by a Small Cause Court, the Small Cause Court itself is a principal Court of original jurisdiction and not the District Court. [This was the view of Roe, J., in the case of Sukhdeo Singh v. District Magistrate of Muzaffarpur (8)]. The fallacy of the argument is that if the Legislature intended to apply this clause to a Court of Small Causes, it must have intended to convey by the words "the principal Court of original jurisdiction" some Court other than the Small Cause Court itself, for the simple reason that the clause would be without any meaning and would frustrate the object in pointing to a superior authority which would have power to set aside the sanction given or refused by a Small Cause Court.

It is next argued that "the principal Court of original jurisdiction" with regard to Small Cause Court cases must be held to be the High Court. But the High Court of Patna has no ordinary original civil jurisdiction "to receive, try and determine any suit." Under section 9 of the Letters Patent constituting this Court, it has only "extraordinary original civil jurisdiction" "to remove, and to try and determine a suit" within the jurisdiction of any Court subordinate to its superintendence. The distinction is noteworthy. The power to receive a suit constitutes original jurisdiction and power to remove a suit constitutes extraordinary jurisdiction. This Court has no original jurisdiction to receive and entertain a Small Cause Court suit.

However, had clause (c) of sub-section 7 applied, it would have been possible to hold that the Legislature intended that a Small Cause Court in respect of orders made by it under section 195 should be deemed subordinate to the District Court as being the principal Court of original civil jurisdiction within the meaning of section 2 (4) of the Civil Procedure Code and section 3 (15) of the General Clauses Act notwithstanding the difficulties created by the inartistic drafting of the section. But I have already held that according to the true construction, sub-section (7), with all its sub-clauses (a) (b) and (c), does not apply to Courts of Small Causes. We have, therefore, to find out the superior authority referred to in sub-section (6) uncontrolled in any way by sub section (7). It has already been shown that such an authority competent to deal with sanction given or refused by a Court of Small Causes will be both the District Court and the High Court within the meaning of that sub-section. I, therefore, do not accept the view taken by this Court that the application could not be made to the District Court, or the view taken by the other High Courts that the application could not be made to the High Court. Had the Legislature intended to restrict the jurisdiction of entertaining applications under section 195, clause (6), to one Court only, the intention should have been expressed clearly and they failed to carry out their intention, if any, by the language employed in section 195, to which only we should refer for the purpose of interpreting the Statute and its intention, instead of roaming over the previous law and the authorities thereunder: vide the dictum of Lord Herschell in Bank of England v. Vagliano (14). The drafting of section 195 has been criticised by several Judges and it may be of some use to note incidentally that in the proposed bill for the amendment of the Code of Criminal Procedure I do not find any suggestion to define the 'subordination of Courts' for the purpose of section 195.

As the two Courts, the District Court and the High Court, have concurrent jurisdiction over the orders passed by a Court of Small Causes, it will be open to the High Court to refuse to entertain an application under sub-section (6) of section 195, unless the party aggrieved had in the first instance moved the District Court. I would, therefore, hold that as a matter of procedure it should be ruled that in such a case an application should in the first instance be made to the District Court. This will be reasonable, inasmuch as it will save trouble and expense to the party concerned in coming to the High Court instead of having his redress in the District Court. And at the same time a second opportunity would perhaps be afforded to the aggrieved party to come to the High Court either under sub-section (6) of section 195 or under the powers vested in the High Court by section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or section 107 of the Government of India Act.

I would, therefore, answer the second part of the reference as follows:—

That under sub-section (6) of section 195 an application can be made both to the District Court and to the High Court for the purpose of revoking or granting a sanction given or refused by a Court of Small Causes. But as a matter of procedure the High Court should not entertain an application except under special circumstances, unless such an application was first presented to the District Court.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 437—Further enquiry after discharge, when to be ordered—Evidence recorded and considered by Magistrate, effect of.

Further enquiry into the case of a discharged person should not be ordered, unless the order of discharge is manifestly perverse or foolish or is based upon a record of evidence which is obviously incomplete.

Where, therefore, the Magistrate recorded the evidence of all the witnesses whom the complainant wanted to produce in support of his complaint and, after considering the evidence, being of the opinion that the story told by them was an improbable one, dismissed the complaint; but the Sessions Judge, holding that the story might be improbable but was by no means impossible, ordered a further enquiry:

Held, that this was not a valid ground for dissenting from the conclusion of the Magistrate and for directing further enquiry.

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated the 25th March 1919, reversing that of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Lahore, dated the 11th December 1918, and ordering further enquiry to be made.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Petitioner.

Lala Moti Sagar. R. S., and Lala Devi Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—After perusing the judgments of the lower Courts and examining the arguments advanced by the learned Vakils on both sides, I have reached the conclusion that the order of the learned Sessions Judge directing further enquiry cannot be sustained and must be set aside. It is to be observed that the Magistrate recorded the evidence of all the witnesses whom the complainant wanted to produce in support of his complaint, and that after considering that evidence he came to the conclusion that the story told by them was an improbable one, and he consequently dismissed the complaint. The learned Sessions Judge holds that the story "may seem an improbable one but it is by no means impossible." Now, I do not think that this is a valid ground for dissenting from the conclusion of the trial Court and for directing a further enquiry. It is possible that another Magistrate may come to a different conclusion on the evidence, but that does not justify an order for further enquiry. The principle of law enunciated in the Full Bench ruling in Emperor v. Kiru (1), though directly applying to a case of fresh enquiry after discharge, has an important bearing on the case before me, in which, as pointed out above, the whole of the evidence on behalf of the complainant was recorded by the Magistrate. The learned Judges laid down in that judgment that further enquiry is improper, unless the order of discharge was manifestly perverse or foolish, or was based upon a record of evidence which was obviously incomplete. Judged by this test, the order of the learned Sessions Judge cannot be upheld. Further, I must say that I am inclined to endorse the view of the Magistrate that it is difficult to believe the story related by the complainant.

Accordingly I accept the application for revision and set aside the order directing further enquiry.

Application accepted.

THE ADVOCATE GENERAL OF THE GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS AND ANOTHER —RESPONDENTS.

Press Act (I of 1910), ss. 3 (1), 4 (1), 17, 22—Printing Presses and Newspapers Act (XXV of 1867), ss. 4, 5—Liberty of press—Control of printing presses—Declaration by owner of printing press—Deposit of security—Magistrate, power of, to dispense with security or to cancel or vary order relating to security, whether judicial or administrative—Notice to person affected, whether necessary—Order forfeiting deposit—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 435—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Revision—Certiorari, writ of, issue of—High Court, power of—Bringing into hatred or contempt—Attack upon system as distinguished from attack upon class—Press Act and Penal Code, provisions of, comparison between—Appeal to His Majesty in Council—Practice of Privy Council in criminal cases—Limitations on Committee's powers.

The Indian Press Act contemplates that in ordinary cases security shall be deposited by the owner of a printing press used for printing a newspaper, and the only duty of the Magistrate is to fix the amount and to receive it. The proviso to section 3, sub-section (1), gives him the power, for special reasons, to dispense with any deposit, but the same proviso also gives him the power to cancel any such order of dispensation, and the necessary consequence of such cancellation will be that security will have to be deposited according to the amount thereupon fixed by him within the limits prescribed by the Act, as would be done in normal course on the first making of the declaration required from every person who keeps in his possession a printing press. [p. 214, col. 1.]

The action of the Magistrate in requiring or dispensing with a deposit or in cancelling an order dispensing with a deposit is administrative and not judicial, nor is he bound, strictly speaking, to hear the person affected by his order, though it may be more discreet to do so. [p. 215, col. 1.]

The power of the High Courts, which have inherited the ordinary or extraordinary jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, to issue writs of certiorari has not been taken away by the provisions of section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code and section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. But semble, that, assuming the order of the Magistrate to be a judicial order, the power to issue a writ of certiorari against any such order would be taken away by section 22 of the Indian Press Act (I of 1910). [p. 215, col. 2; p. 216, col 1.]

The provisions of the Indian Press Act, section 4, as to the forfeiture of deposits are closely analogous to those of sections 124A and 153A of the Indian Penal Code. Both sets of provisions attempt to balance two important public considerations, the undesirability of anything tending to excite sedition or to excite strife between classes and the undesirability of preventing any bona fide argument for reform. [p. 217, col. 2.]

In substance, the question under clause (c) of section 4, sub-section (1), of the Indian Press Act comes to this, are the words used such as in fact to excite, or do they disclose an attempt (which implies intention) to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection towards the Government or of any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in India, and, in judging the question of intent, the publisher must be deemed to intend that which is the natural result of the words used having regard, among other things, to the character and description of that part of the public who are to be expected to read the words. [p. 218, col. 1.]

An attack upon a school of opinion does not necessarily involve an imputation upon the class who hold or give effect to that opinion. But one is apt to lead to the other, and in judging whether the second exists regard must be had to the fact that the words in clause (c) which refer to the hatred or contempt of a class or section are not limited by Explanation 2. In this respect the Press Act differs from the Penal Code. [p. 218, col. 2.]

The Board, in this case, observed that as they found that the Statute applicable had not been misconstrued by the local tribunal, they would not, in any event, having regard to the constitutional limitations on their functions in criminal cases, have considered themselves justified in interfering, but that if they had thought it proper to look into the matter in detail, they would have held that on the merits the Court appealed from was right in supporting the declaration of forfeiture. [p. 218, col. 2; p. 219, col. 1.]

Consolidated appeal by special leave from two judgments of the Madras High Court, both dated October 18, 1916, reported as 37 Ind. Cas. 525 and 607.

FACTS of the case and the main provisions of the Statutes concerned are set out in their Lordships' judgment. Full reports of the earlier proceedings are contained in 37 Mad. 1085; 37 Ind Cas. 525, and 39 Mad. 1164; 37 Ind. Cas. 607. The appellant's application to the Madras High Court for leave to appeal from their judgments was refused—Abdul Rahim, Officiating, C. J., and Seshagiri Aiyar, J., holding that the Court had no power to grant leave to appeal, though Ayling, J., considered that leave could and should be given under clause 39 of the Letters Patent. Appellant thereupon obtained from the Privy Council special leave to prefer the present appeals.

Mr Upjohn, K. C., (with him Messrs. J. Robertson Christie, K. C., and W. Ingram), for the Appellant.—The Supreme Court of Madras had the same right to issue writs of certiorari as the King's Bench have in England. That jurisdiction was given them by the Letters Patent of 1800 constituting the Supreme Court. The right formerly vested in the Supreme Court was preserved to the High Court by the Charters of 1861 and 1865, by clause 17 of the Letters Patent of 1865, and by the Government of India Act, 1915, section 106.

It is true that the Madras High Court has never before issued certiorari: but this does not affect its power to issue that writ. Such power has in fact been exercised by other High Courts which are on precisely the same footing.

Nundo Lal Bose v. Corporation for the Town of Calcutta (1).

The right to a writ of certiorari can be taken away by statutory provision only by express words, and in clear terms.

Rex v. Moreley (2), Rex v. Flowright (3), Rex v. Jukes (4), Rex v. Cashiobury Justices (5), Colonial Bank of Australasia v. Willan (6).

Section 22 of the Indian Press Act, 1910, which is said to take away the right to the writ, is not sufficiently precise in its terms; in addition to which the Madras High Court had jurisdiction to interfere under section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Nor is this a case where a certiorari was a matter of discretion only, as in Reg. v. Nicholson (7).

Here the appellant was not complaining of a public grievance, but of one peculiar to herself: she was entitled to the writ ex debito justitiæ:

Queen v. Justices of Surrey (8).

Section 22 itself in terms excepts an application to the High Court under section 17: upon an application under section 17 the application can raise any objection to the forfeiture, either in law or in fact: this includes an objection to the order to make the deposit.

The High Court erred in holding that the making of the order of May 22, 1916 (cancelling the order of dispensation and requiring appellant to make the deposit) was an administrative act upon the part of the Magistrate, and as such not open to review. The powers of a Magistrate under section 3 of the Indian Press Act, 1910, no doubt include some which are merely ministerial: but the power to cancel or vary an order of dispensation is not one of them. Such a power is something to be done according to the rules of reason and justice, not according to private opinion:

Sharp v. Wakefield (9).

It is "the exercise of a right or duty to decide."

Rex v. Woodhouse (10).

The Act differs from Act XXV of 1867 as to the class of Magistrate by whom the order is to be made: this shows a judicial act was intended.

Assuming that the High Court had, as we contend, jurisdiction to review the order of May 22, 1916, either by certiorari or under section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the order should have been set aside as invalid, and this for two reasons:—

(1) Upon the true construction of section 3 (1) of the Indian Press Act, 1910, once the Magistrate has made an order dispensing with a deposit, he has no power to order a deposit to be made. The power given by the proviso to cancel or vary an order is in qualification of the power given in the earlier part of the section: it is not in qualification of the power to dispense with a deposit, which is given by the proviso itself. If the section is ambiguous it should be construed in favour of the subject.

(2) The appellant was given no opportunity of being heard. It is a duty lying upon every one who decides anything to listen to both sides [Loreburn, L. C., in Board of Education v. Rice (11)]. Irregularity of proceedings is expressly mentioned as a ground of review in section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

ANNIE BESANT v. ADVOCATE-GENERAL, MADRAS.

Assuming that the order of May 22, 1916, requiring security was not open to review, or if open to review, was valid, we submit that the order of forfeiture of August 25, 1916, is bad. The Indian Press Act is such a severely restrictive Act that it should be construed as favourably to the subject as possible. On a fair and reasonable interpretation, none of the articles complained of falls within section 4, sub section 1. The High Court did not give effect to Explanation II, which provides that "comments expressing disapproval of Government measures without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection do not come within the scope of clause (c)." The Government admit that to advocate Home Rule for India is not in itself a ground for forfeiture: yet this is all that appellant did.

Further, we submit that the Indian Press Act, 1910, and especially section 22 thereof, is ultra vires the Indian Legislature. It contravenes the proviso to section 65 of the Government of India Act, 1858 (21 and 22 Vict. c. 106), which was in force when it was enacted. So far as it interferes with constitutional rights, it is not validated by the Government of India (Amendment) Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. V, c. 37), section 2. The object of section 65 of the Government of India Act, 1858, was to prevent the subordinate legislation from tampering with those fundamental rights on which the allegiance of the subject depends. Ameer Khan, In the matter of (12).

There are certain constitutional rights which bind the subject and the Crown one to another. The Indian Press Act violates those rights in so far as it interferes with the liberty of the press, gives the Executive Government arbitrary powers over the subject's property, and in other respects.

Sir Erle Richards, K. C, (with him Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., and Kenworthy Brown), for the Respondents.—The order of May 22, 1916, was valid. An order dispensing with security is an order under sub-sections 1 to 3 of the Indian Press Act, and may, therefore, under that very sub section be varied or cancelled. If it does not apply to an order for dispensing with security, the word "cancel" is meaningless: the only other case is when the press is no longer kept, and that is specially dealt with by section 24. The words "or may" in the proviso to section 3 (1) show that the power to cancel or vary is a substantive power, applying to all orders under the sub section, including an order dispensing with security. The Act nowhere requires the Magistrate to hear the party affected before making an order: such a requirement would often involve inconvenient delay, and that may have prevented the requirement. Under sub-section 2 the Local Government can, as a purely administrative act, require such deposit as they please in the case of an existing press; it would be strange if the position under sub-section 1 were different. It was in the appellant's power to apply to the Magistrate to cancel or vary his order under the proviso. An ex parte order is not necessarily contrary to natural justice: it is a common practice to make ex parte injunctions: all such orders are subject to the implied right to apply for their discharge.

The making of the order of May 22, 1916, was a purely administrative or ministerial act. The mere fact that the person making it was a Magistrate does not render it liable to appeal or revision, whether by certiorari or otherwise:—

Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (13), Vijiaraghavalu Pillai v. Theagaroya Chetti (14).

The statutory powers of revision given by the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, (sections 435, 439) and the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, (section 115), so far as they apply, supersede proceedings by certiorari. The rule that the right to certiorari can only be taken away by express words does not apply to these statutory provisions. The power to revise is discretionary, and this is not a case where it should be exercised if it existed: not only has there been delay, but at the time of the application the deposit had been forfeited: the order was merged in the order of forfeiture.

The High Courts' right of review under section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is excluded by section 22 of the Indian Press Act. The appellant is in (12) 6 M. L. R. 392 at pp. 450, 452.

(13) 11 M. 26 (P. C.); 14 I. A. 160; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 54; 11 Ind. Jur. 393; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 18.

(14) 25 Ind. Cas 345; 38 M. 581; 27 M. L. J. 227; 16 M. L. T. 128; 15 Cr. L. J. 593.

this dilemma, if the making of the order was a proceeding under the Act, the High Court has by section 22 no power except under section 17: if it was not a proceeding under the Act, it was a mere administrative order and the High Court cannot interfere with it at all.

Upon the merits the articles fall within section 4, sub-section 1, of the Act. The question greatly depends upon local conditions, with which the Judges of the High Court would be well acquainted. But the matter is not really one for the Board's decision, as the question comes before them on an appeal under the prerogative in a criminal matter, and in the absence of special circumstances which are not shown to exist here, the Board will not interfere, upon such an appeal, with the decision of the local tribunal.

Mr. Upjohn, K. C., replied.

JUDGMENT.

LORD PHILLIMORE.—These are two appeals for which the appellant, Mrs. Besant, obtained special leave from His Majesty in Council against two decisions of the High Court of Judicature at Madras.

They arise in the following circumstances:—There are in India two legislative Acts of the Governor General of India in Council relating to printing, one being the Printing Presses and Newspapers Act No. XXV of 1867, and the other being Act No. 1 of 1910 entitled "An Act to provide for the better control of the Press," and shortly "The Indian Press Act, 1910." Under the first Act, section 4, the person who keeps in his possession a printing press must make and subscribe a declaration before a Magistrate, stating that he has a press for printing, and where it is situated. And by section 5 no printed periodical work containing public news, or comments on public news, shall be published without the printer and publisher making a declaration stating that he is the printer or publisher, the name of the periodical and the place where the printing or publishing is conducted.

Under the second Act, section 3, sub-section 1, the person making the declaration is required to deposit before a Magistrate in money, or in certain securities, a sum not being less than Rs. 500, or more than Rs. 2,000, as the Magistrate may think fit to require.

But the Magistrate may, for special reasons which he is to record, dispense with the deposit, and he has certain powers of cancelling or varying any order made under this sub-section.

By section 4 of the Act the Local Government, when it appears to it that any printing press, in respect of which any security has been deposited, is used for the purpose of printing any newspaper which contains words, signs or visible representations of a nature deemed to be objectionable under the detailed provisions of the section which will be hereinafter specifically set forth, may, by notice in writing addressed to the keeper of the press, declare the security and all copies of the newspaper wherever found forfeited to His Majesty, and after the expiry of 10 days from the date of the issue of the notice of forfeiture, the declaration required of every keeper of a press is to be deemed to be annulled.

By section 17 :—

"Any person having an interest in any property in respect of which an order of forfeiture has been made under section 4"... ...[or under certain other sections not material to the present appeal] "may, within two months from the date of such order, apply to the High Court to set aside such order on the ground that the newspaper.....in respect of which the order was made did not contain any words, signs, or visible representations of the nature described in section 4, sub-section 1."

And by section 18 :—

"Every such application shall be heard and determined by a Special Bench of the High Court composed of three Judges....."

By section 23, anyone who keeps in his possession a press without making a deposit under section 3, when required so to do, shall be liable to the same penalty as if he had failed to make the declaration required by the first Act.

On the 2nd December 1914 the appellant, being the owner and keeper of a printing press, and printer and publisher of a newspaper called at that time, and thereafter, "New India," made the declaration required of her under the Act of 1867, and the Magistrate before whom it was made, using the power of dispensation given to him by section 3 of the Act of 1910, thought fit to dispense with the deposit of the security which under the provisions of the same section she would otherwise have had to give. The document in which the dispensation was embodied is not contained in the record of these appeals, and their Lordships have not before them the reasons which the Magistrate recorded as the grounds for granting this dispensation.

On the 28th May 1916 the appellant received a notice from the Magistrate, dated the 22nd May, in which it was stated that he, under sub-section 1 of section 3, cancelled the order dispensing with the security and required her within 14 days to deposit Rs. 2,000 as security.

In accordance with this order the appellant, under protest, as she says in one of her affidavits, deposited the security.

On the 28th August 1916 she was served with an order, dated the 25th August and made by the Governor-in-Council, reciting that 20 passages published in the newspaper and identified in the order were of the nature described in sub-section 1 of section 4 of the Act of 1910, and declaring that the security which the appellant had deposited and all copies of "New India" wherever found were to be forfeited to the Crown.

The appellant thereupon, purporting to avail herself of the provisions of section 17 of the Act, presented her petition to a Special Bench of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, praying that both the order of the Magistrate requiring security and the order of the Governor in Council should be revised and set aside. It being, however, obvious that the procedure under section 17 was not available for questioning any act of the Magistrate, the appellant the next day presented what is called a Criminal Revision Petition under sections 103 and 107 of the Government of India Act (5 and 6 George V c. 61) and section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. This application, also described in the course of the proceedings as an application for a certiorari, was also heard by the Special Bench.

After argument, both applications were refused; all the Judges agreeing that they should be refused, but not being in agreement as to the grounds on which the revision petition failed, and not being wholly in agreement as to all the articles in the newspaper which might merit condemnation.

The petitioner thereupon applied to the High Court for leave to appeal in both cases, and on this leave being refused by the High Court, applied to His Majesty in Council for special leave to appeal, and this leave having been given (as already stated) in respect of both orders, both matters are now before their Lordships.

It will be convenient to consider first the application to quash the order of the Magistrate. This question divides itself into two parts: was the procedure adopted a competent and suitable method of reviewing the order, and if it be open to review, is it to be deemed an illegal and unwarranted order?

It is convenient to consider first the nature of the order, or supposed order. The Statute contemplates that in ordinary cases security shall be deposited, and the only duty of the Magistrate is to fix the amount, having regard to the two limits, and to receive it.

Then follows the proviso: —

"Provided that the Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, for special reasons to be recorded by him, dispense with the deposit of any security or may from time to time cancel or vary any order under this sub-section."

It was contended before their Lordships that to read this proviso as enabling the Magistrate to cancel or vary an order of dispensation would be to make a proviso upon a proviso, and to collect a positive enactment out of that which was only a qualifying provision. But it is well settled that there is no magic in words of proviso, and that the plain meaning must be given to the words of the Legislature, and those words enable the Magistrate to cancel or vary any order made under the sub-section, which should mean among other orders orders of dispensation

If the Magistrate having fixed the minimum security may vary his order by imposing the maximum, there is no reason why he should not, as time goes on, think fit to require security when at first he thought fit to require none. Under the second sub-section a power of requiring a deposit, where none up to that moment had been required, is given in certain cases to the Local Government, and it is natural to suppose that what the Local Government may do in a proper case under sub-section 2, may be done in a proper case by the Magistrate under sub-section 1. It is somewhat difficult to find any case, other than this one, to which the word cancel would be properly applicable. If the normal course is adopted, and a deposit is required, and if the Magistrate thereafter thinks it too much or too little, the appropriate word for the new order is that it is one varying the old. But if he were to cancel simpliciter an order fixing the deposit at a particular sum, it is difficult to see what would happen. There must be a deposit unless there is a positive order of dispensation; the cancelling of an order fixing the deposit at say Rs. 2,000 would leave the keeper of the printing press in the position of having to apply to the Magistrate to make some further order, either fixing a new sum or dispensing with any; and till such new order had been made and complied with, the keeping of the printing press would apparently be an unlawful act, so that the cancellation of the order fixing the deposit at Rs. 2,000 would be injurious instead of beneficent to the keeper of the press. But if the Magistrate had originally thought fit to dispense with security and afterwards changed his mind, the right phrase to use would be that he had cancelled his order of dispensation.

Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that the Magistrate has power under the section to cancel an order of dispensation, the necessary consequence of which will be that security will have to be deposited according to the amount thereupon fixed by him within the limits prescribed, as would be done in normal course on the first making of a declaration.

Their Lordships are in agreement in this respect with the opinion of Ayling, J., and in disagreement with the view of Seshagiri Aiyar, J. The Officiating Chief Justice Abdur Rahim, J., agreed in principle with Seshagiri Aiyar, J., and so expressed himself in his judgment upon the other application.

It is next contended on behalf of the appellant that the act of the Magistrate in cancelling the dispensation was a judicial order, and was bad, because she was given no opportunity of being heard before an adverse order was made against her.

To this argument several answers have been given; that the order might be treated as an ex parte order which it would have been open to her to move to discharge instead of complying with it as she did under protest; that as a judicial order it was still one made by the Magistrate within the exercise of his jurisdiction, and that the omission to hear her was only an irregularity which could not be reviewed, or at any rate could not be reviewed by process of certiorari; and lastly, that the act was not a judicial act but one done in the exercise of administrative functions.

It was on this last ground that all three Judges in the High Court decided the point against the appellant; and without pronouncing any opinion on the other grounds their Lordships agree that this one furnishes a sufficient answer.

The Magistrates to whom this power is entrusted by the Act are the District Magistrates and the Chief Presidency Magistrates. Those to whom power was entrusted by the Act of 1867 were "any person exercising the full powers of a Magistrate," and were to include "Magistrates of Police and Justices of the Peace." At that time there were no Chief Presidency Magistrates.

It was argued before their Lordships that the change in the second Act, that is in especial the substitution of the Chief Presidency Magistrate for territory within his jurisdiction, showed an intention on the part of the Legislature to make the action of the Magistrate judicial and not administrative. But their Lordships do not think that this change alters the nature or character of the action of the Magistrate. It is true that the duties of the Chief Presidency Magistrate are primarily judicial; but the Magistrates outside the presidency town exercise both judicial and administrative functions, and the District Magistrate is principally an administrative officer. These two considerations appear to balance one another. The action of the Magistrate under sub-section 1 of section 3 is (like the action of the Magistrate under sub-section 1 of section 8) analogous to the action of the Local Government under the second sub section in the same clauses, and the action of the Local Government is clearly administrative.

It being once established that the normal course is to have a deposit, the action of the Magistrate in increasing or diminishing, withdrawing or imposing, is a pure matter of administrative discretion. It is only in one case that he is to record his reasons and that is when there is a departure from the normal, and the object of recording them is, as the Officiating Chief Justice rightly said, for the information of his superiors in the Government.

Further, in this connection the provisions of section 22, upon which comment will shortly be made, must not be left out of sight. If a declaration of forfeiture by the Local Government can only be questioned in one respect and by one method—it is not unreasonable to suppose that the Legislature did not intend to open the Courts of Law to enquiries as to the exercise of so comparatively unimportant an official act, discretionary and in some respects facultative as it is.

The act of the Magistrate is after all only the withdrawal of a privilege which need never have been granted. It is not like a condemnation, in which case justice requires that the person to be condemned should first be heard. It would have been in their Lordships' opinion more discreet, and it would have removed an occasion for comment and complaint, if the Magistrate had given the appellant some opportunity for making her observations before the privilege was withdrawn; it might have been a wiser discharge of his duty as an officer. But having said this, their Lordships are unable to go any further.

It results, therefore, that if the order of the Magistrate was open to examination, either upon process of certiorari or by a way of revision, the consequence of an examination would be to leave the order as it stands; and this consequence is not without its bearing upon the question, which is prior in order of reasoning, whether it was competent to the Court to enter upon any such examination. The appellant based her demand partly upon the Code of Criminal Procedure and partly upon the supposed Common Law power to grant a writ of certiorari. She did not rely upon the power of revision given by the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is not easy to see how these proceedings could be deemed criminal proceedings within the Code of Criminal Procedure. They are not proceedings against the appellant as charged with an offence. They are at the utmost proceedings which rendered the appellant, if she should thereafter commit a criminal or forbidden act, open to a particular form of procedure for a penalty.

In any view, as their Lordships have intimated their opinion that the Magistrate in withdrawing the order of dispensation was not acting judicially, it follows that this is not a case for revision under the Code of Criminal Procedure.

As to certiorari it was contended on behalf of the respondent in the High Court, that there is no power in the High Court to issue a writ of certiorari, or alternatively that the provisions of section 22 forbid recourse to this writ in cases which come under the Press Act.

As to the first point it would seem that at any rate the three High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay possessed the power of issuing this writ [see Re, the Justices of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay (17) and Nundo Lal Bose v. Corporation for the Town of Calcutta (1)]. Whether any of the other Courts which are by definition High Courts for the purposes of this Act have the power to issue writs of certiorari is another question.

Supposing that this power once existed, has it been taken away by the two codes of procedure? No doubt these codes provide for most cases a much more convenient remedy. But their Lordships are not disposed to think that the provisions of section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code and section 115 of the Civil Procedure

(17) 1 Knapp. 1 at pp. 49, 51, 55; 12 E. R. 222.

Code of 1903 are exhaustive. Their Lordships can imagine cases, though rare ones, which may not fall under either of these sections. For such cases their Lordships do not think that the powers of the High Courts which have inherited the ordinary or extraordinary jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, to issue writs of certiorari, can be said to have been taken away.

But assuming that the power to issue the writ remains, and that it might be exercised notwithstanding the existence of procedure by way of revision, section 22 has still to be considered:—

"22. Every declaration of forfeiture purporting to be made under this Act shall, as against all persons, be conclusive evidence that the forfeiture therein referred to has taken place, and no proceeding purporting to be taken under this Act shall be called in question by any Court, except the High Court, on such application as aforesaid, and no civil or criminal proceeding, except as provided by this Act, shall be instituted against any person for anything done or in good faith intended to be done under this Act."

As to this section it was contended on behalf of the appellant that as the writ of certiorari was not in terms said to be taken away the right to it remained, notwithstanding the very express but still general words of this section.

However that might be according to English Law where there is no such revision procedure as in India, their Lordships see no reason for narrowing the express words of the Indian Act. Certiorari according to the English rule is only to be granted where no other suitable remedy exists. If the order of the Magistrate were a judicial order, it would have been made in the exercise either of his civil or of his criminal jurisdiction, and procedure by way of revision would have been open.

Even were it to be said that the order was of that quasi judicial kind to which certiorari has sometimes been applied in England or in India, the Press Act may quite reasonably have intended to take it away, and there is no reason why full effect should not be given to its language.

It was contended in the High Court and before this Board that it was beyond the competency of the Indian Legislature to enact section 22 and possibly even to enact the Press Act. This argument, which was mainly founded upon the language of Norman, J., in the case of Ameer Khan, in the matter of (12), received some encouragement from the Officiating Chief Justice. But their Lordships find themselves unable to appreciate it.

The order of the High Court dismissing this application was, therefore, right, and the appeal from it must be dismissed.

If their Lordships thought that the appellant had made any way, they would have had to consider whether she was not, according to the practice prevailing in cases of certiorari, too late in making her application. Indeed, what advantage the appellant would have gained if she had succeeded upon this application is not very apparent. The power of the Local Government to make a forfeiture under section 4 no doubt depends upon there being a deposit to forfeit. But at the time the order was made, 25th August 1916, there had been in fact a deposit since 5th June; and the appellant had taken no steps to get herself relieved from the order made on the 22nd May directing the deposit, or to get it back.

Even were it contended that the deposit ought to be regarded as having been so unwarrantably exacted that it ought to count as non existent, there was nothing to show that the Local Government was or ought to have been aware of this. Further, section 22 makes the declaration of the Local Government conclusive as to there being a forfeiture.

Lastly, the appellant made no application by way of certiorari or otherwise to quash the declaration of forfeiture; and the only way in which it was attacked was by using the procedure under section 17 which, as pointed out in the High Court, is available only for one purpose, that is, of showing on the merits that the published articles were not deserving of forfeiture.

Their Lordships have now to deal with the other appeal. Section 4, sub-section 1, of the Indian Press Act is, in so far as it is material, in the following terms:—

"(1) Whenever it appears to the Local Government that any printing press in respect of which any security has been deposited as required by section 3 is used for the purpose of printing or publishing any newspaper, book, or other document containing any words, signs, or visible representations which are likely or may have a tendency, directly or indirectly, whether by inference, suggestion, allusion, metaphor, implication, or otherwise—.....

"(c) to bring into hatred or contempt His Majesty or the Government established by law in British India or the administration of justice in British India, or any Native Prince or Chief under the suzerainty of His Majesty, or any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India, or to excite disaffection towards His Majesty or the said Government or any such Prince or Chief; or.....

"(e) to encourage or incite any person to interfere with the administration of the law or with the maintenance of law and order; .....

the Local Government may, by notice in writing to the keeper of such printing press, stating or describing the words, signs, or visible representations which in its opinion are of the nature described above, declare the security deposited in respect of such press and all copies of such newspaper, book, or other document, wherever found, to be forfeited to His Majesty.

"EXPLANATION I.—In clause (c) the expression 'disaffection' includes disloyalty and all feelings of enmity.

"EXPLANATION II.—Comments expressing disapproval of the measures of the Government or of any such Native Prince or Chief as aforesaid with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means, or of the administrative or other action of the Government or of any such Native Prince or Chief or of the administration of justice in British India without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt, or disaffection do not come within the scope of clause (c)."

The notice of forfeiture issued on the 25th August 1916 stated that in the opinion of the Governor-in-Council 20 passages published in the appellant's newspaper on various dates from the 7th June to the 17th August were of the nature described in section 4, sub-section 1, and declared the security deposited by the appellant to be forfeited. The articles in question were numbered consecutively from 1 to 14, seven articles being numbered 4 and marked with consecutive letters of the alphabet. Thereupon the appellant availed herself of the remedy given to her by sections 17 and 18 and applied to a Special Bench of the High Court to set aside the order on the ground that the newspaper did not contain "any words, signs or visible representation" of the nature described in section 4, sub-section 1.

This application, as already stated, was heard by the same Judges as those who sat upon the application for a certiorari. In the unanimous opinion of the Bench, the articles numbered 2, 11, and 13 were within the terms of section 4, sub-section 1, clause (c). S. Aiyar, J., thought that article 11 was also obnoxious to clause (e). The majority of the Bench, that is to say, the Officiating Chief Justice and Ayling, J., thought articles 1, 6, 10 and 12 obnoxious to clause (c). Ayling, J., thought article 7 obnoxious to clause (e) and articles 9 and 14 obnoxious to clause (c). S Aiyar, J., thought article 8 obnoxious to clause (c). In accordance with these conclusions the Court dismissed the application made by the appellant.

The balancing of important political considerations, which is effected by adding Explanation 2 to the enacting words which are found in the earlier part of the section, has its analogy in sections 124A and 153A of the Indian Penal Code. The language is not precisely the same, but there is the same delicate balancing of two important public considerations, the undesirability of anything tending to excite sedition or to excite strife between classes and the undesirability of preventing any bona fide argument for reform.

It is perhaps not easy to see how Explanation 2, with its qualifications, adds to, or detracts from the direct language of clause (c). A similar observation might be made upon section 124A of the Penal Code. The utmost that can be said is that the addition of the explanation with its apparent repetition of the positive enactment in the guise of a qualification of the explanation shows an almost meticulous care by the Legislature to balance the two considerations, prominence being given to the first consideration in the first part of the section, and to the second in the explanation.

In applying these balancing principles it is inevitable that different minds may come to different results, one mind attaching more weight to the consideration of freedom of argument, and the other to the preservation of law and order or of harmony.

The section 124A of the Indian Penal Code has been the subject of careful consideration in the cases of the Queen Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (18), Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Queen Empress (19) [in which case this Board refused leave to appeal. See Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Queen Empress (19)] the Queen-Empress v. Ramchandra Narayan (20) and the Queen Empress v. Amba Prasad (21), and though as already stated the language of this section is not precisely the same as the language in the Press Act, these judgments are of considerable assistance towards the construction of section 4.

In substance the question under clause (c) of section 4, sub-section 1, comes to this; are the passages such as in fact to excite, or do they disclose an attempt (which implies intention) to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection towards the Government or of any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in India; and in judging the question of intent the publisher must be deemed to intend that which is the natural result of the words used having regard, among other things, to the character and description of that part of the public who are to be expected to read the articles.

As regards the question of hatred or contempt of a class or section, it was argued that the object of the article was to attack the system, not a class or section. It may be assumed, for the purposes of this case, that there may be reference to a class or section of His Majesty's subjects so couched as to show that the attack is merely upon a school of opinion, and that unless the language is such as to excite hatred or contempt of persons, it may escape condemnation. But assuming this, the appellant remains face to face with the difficulty that there is language used in certain of the articles which may legitimately be construed as tending by inference or suggestion to excite hatred or contempt in such a fashion that it may become personal.

It may well be that the primary object was a legitimate attack upon a system, but unless care is taken it becomes difficult to make a fierce attack upon a system without conveying some imputation upon the class which the system makes or which carries the system into practice. And it must be remembered that those words in clause (c) which refer to the hatred or contempt of a class or section are not limited by Explanation 2, and that there has been in this respect some departure from the policy of the Penal Code, which superadded a qualifying explanation which has not found place in the Press Act.

As to clause (c) the majority of the Judges in the High Court were brought to the conclusion that the attacks on Anglo-India or Anglo-Indians or the bureaucracy, as the case may be, were calculated whatever might have been the primary object of the writer to bring into hatred or contempt persons forming a class or section of His Majesty's subjects, namely, English Civil Servants in India, in some cases Englishmen in India generally.

All the Judges thought that several passages were calculated to bring the Government into hatred and contempt, and this after giving due weight to Explanation 2. There were also as already stated findings by Ayling and S. Aiyar, JJ., bringing some of the articles under clause (e), a clause which it should be noted is not qualified by any explanation.

Upon careful perusal of the several judgments their Lordships find that weight has been properly given to the several portions of the section. They do not find that the section has been misconstrued. There remains only the question of application in detail of the principles of the law to the language of the various articles.

When their Lordships have progressed so far, the question becomes one which partakes so much of the nature of a question of fact, that it would be difficult for their Lordships even if they were inclined to construe the natural tendency of the words differently to interfere with the conclusions arrived at by the Court in India. For the Judicial Committee, when it sits to advise His Majesty in the exercise of his prerogative in criminal cases, does so under constitutional limitations which, as has often been explained and notably in the case of Dal Singh v. Emperor (16) [and in Tilak's case (19) already quoted], preclude it from exercising the full functions of a Court of Criminal Appeal.

It should be added that for the purpose of considering not the intention to excite, but the fact whether the articles are such as to excite, the Judges in India with a far closer knowledge of the character of the people likely to read the articles have better means of judging than their Lordships in England.

Here the matter might rest. But in the particular circumstances of this case, and after the elaborate argument at the Bar, their Lordships think it well to go further and to say that if they considered it proper to look into the matter in detail, they would hold that the articles which were the subject of unanimous condemnation, and at least some of those which came under the censure of Judges in the High Court, were obnoxious to the provisions of clause (c) and possibly in some cases to those of clause (e) and that the Court was right in supporting the declaration of forfeiture Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly recommend His Majesty that both these appeals should be dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 69 OF 1919.

April 8, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Das.

KUSUM SAO—ACCUSED—PETITIONER

JANAK LAL—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195, 409—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 211—Sanction to prosecute—Additional Sessions Judge, whether competent to grant sanction in matter arising out of trial before First Class Magistrate—Discretion of Court, exercise of—False charge, prosecution for, sanction for, when to be granted.

An additional Sessions Judge is competent to grant sanction to prosecute in a matter arising out of a trial before a Magistrate having first class powers, inasmuch as an appeal would ordinarily lie from the Court of the latter to the Court of the former. [p. 220, col. 2.]

In dealing with an application for sanction to prosecute, the Court to which the application is made ought to proceed with caution and discernment, and be guided by two principles, namely, (1) whether there is a prima facie case against the person for whose prosecution sanction is asked, and (2) whether the real object of the applicant is not to satisfy his private ends or personal spite. [p. 221, col. 2.]

The mere acquittal of an accused person is not sufficient for sanctioning a prosecution under section 211 of the Penal Code, there must be something more; there must be a reasonable belief in the mind of the sanctioning Court that there was no foundation whatever for the criminal charge: in other words, there must be a belief that in instituting criminal proceedings the petitioner acted knowingly without belief in the truth of the allegations made by him or recklessly without caring whether the allegations were true or false, and the judgment of the trial Court ought to show that there was no foundation whatever for the criminal case against the persons who were acquitted. [p. 221, col. 2.]

Criminal application against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Champaran, dated the 22nd January 1919.

Mr. Gour Chandra Pal, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Syed Hasan Imam and Harnarayan Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT —This application is directed against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Champaran granting sanction to the opposite party under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to prosecute the petitioner under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code. The facts and circumstances leading up to the application for sanction have been fully stated in the judgment of the Additional Sessions Judge and I do not propose to recapitulate them. It appears that in the first instance the District Magistrate of Champaran granted such sanction. Against this there was an appeal to the Court of Session, and a point was taken before it that the District Magistrate had no power to grant such sanction as the alleged offence was not committed in, or in relation to, any proceeding in that Court or in a Court subordinate to that Court. In view of that objection a petition was filed before the Additional Sessions Judge, who heard the appeal for fresh sanction, and the Additional Sessions Judge, while holding that the District Magistrate had power to grant the sanction, acted on the fresh application made before him and himself granted fresh sanction.

At the very outset it was contended by Mr. G. C. Pal that the sanction granted by the District Magistrate was illegal. This was conceded by Mr. Hasan Imam who appeared on behalf of the opposite party, but he argued that the Additional Sessions Judge was competent to grant sanction and that he did in fact grant sanction for the prosecution of the petitioner under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code. If the Court which heard the criminal case be subordinate to the Court of the Additional Sessions Judge, that is to say, if appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie to the Court of the Additional Sessions Judge, then undoubtedly the Additional Sessions Judge had power to grant sanction in the case. Mr. Pal has taken me through the various sections in the Code of Criminal Procedure for the purpose of making his point that a Magistrate having first class powers is not subordinate to an Additional Sessions Judge. It will be noticed, however, on reference to section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure that the word deliberately used by the Legislature is "Court" and not "Judge", and the point for my determination is not whether a Magistrate having first class powers is subordinate to the Additional Sessions Judge, but whether an appeal would ordinarily lie from a Court of a Magistrate having 1st class powers to a Court of an Additional Sessions Judge. Now it cannot be disputed that an appeal would ordinarily lie from a Court of such a Magistrate to the Court of Session. If an appeal would lie from the Court of such a Magistrate to the Court of Session, such appeal can, in my opinion, be disposed of only by the Court of Session. Therefore, the point for investigation narrows down to this: what is the Court of Session? In my opinion section 409 makes it perfectly clear that a Court of Session consists of the Sessions Judge and the Additional Sessions Judge. I hold, therefore, that the Additional Sessions Judge was competent to grant sanction in a matter arising out of a trial before a Magistrate having first class powers.

The substantial question that has, however, been argued before me is that the Additional Sessions Judge did not act properly or with discretion in granting sanction in this case. The learned Judge says: "It has been laid down in the case reported as Mr. Hume, Public Prosecutor of Calcutta v. Paresh Chandra Ghosh, An Attorney, (1) that on an application for sanction the Court is not to try the guilt or innocence of the person for whose prosecution sanction is asked for, but is merely to consider whether the statutory bar imposed by section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, should be removed and the law allowed to take its ordinary course. What is, however, required to be seen is that no one be permitted to use the penal law merely to satisfy his own private ends or personal spite." As in my experience the judgment of the great and distinguished Judges who heard that case has frequently been misunderstood and misapplied, I propose to deal with that case as shortly as I can, in order to show that that case was decided on its own facts and that the learned Judges did not intend to lay down any general proposition applicable to all cases.

It is to be noted in the first place that there was in that case an enquiry as full and searching as the late Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court knew how to make it, before the learned Judges made up their mind to remove the statutory bar imposed by section 195. They held the enquiry themselves and allowed witnesses to be examined and cross-examined before them. Not content with this, they placed the papers before Mr. Hume, the Public Prosecutor, "with complete confidence," as the Chief Justice says, "in his absolute integrity."

(1) 22 Ind. Cas. 324; 19 C. W. N. 503; 41 C. 734; 15 Cr. L. J. 51.

The passage which has been cited from the judgment of the learned Chief Justice by the learned Judge has in my experience been relied on by the Subordinate Courts as completely doing away with their responsibility in the matter, although the judgment of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri in the same case makes it perfectly clear that the power to grant sanction is evidently discretionary and has got to be exercised with caution and discernment. I accept the proposition of law enunciated in the passage cited, for it seems to me that if the sanctioning Court were to try the guilt or innocence of the person for whose prosecution sanction is asked, his subsequent trial would degenerate, to use the words of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri, "into a mere formality;" but, on the other hand, if an application for sanction is regarded merely as a mechanical device for removal of the bar, the rule imposing a bar on prosecutions under certain sections specified in section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure would appear to be a meaningless absurdity. I do not read the judgments delivered in that case as overruling, either expressly or by necessary implication, the series of cases that have been decided with reference to section 195, except such as have gone too far and have laid down that an application for sanction must be conducted on the same lines as a criminal trial. When the late Chief Justice says that he prefers to take his stand upon the section itself he is, in my opinion, merely protesting against the extreme argument advanced by Mr. Norton, and not in any way throwing any doubt on the rules of prudence which have been enunciated by eminent Judges as rules to which any Court exercising its discretion would have recourse. The learned Chief Justice himself refers to one of such rules of prudence, which is not to be found in the section itself but which has been read into the section as of universal application by successive generations of eminent Judges. The truth appears to be that the Legislature has deliberately vested the sanctioning Court with absolute discretion in the matter, because it is impossible to lay down rules governing all cases and new circumstances may arise calling for application of new principles. In my judgment the case of Mr. Hume, Public Prosecutor of Calcutta v. Paresh Chandra Ghose, An Attorney, (1) has left the law exactly where it stood, and in dealing with an application for sanction the sanctioning Court must still proceed with caution and discernment and must be guided by two principles which, in my opinion, have been well established, namely, (1) whether there is a prima facie case against the person for whose prosecution sanction is asked, and (2) whether the real object of the applicant is not to satisfy his private ends or personal spite.

Now, how has the Additional Sessions Judge dealt with this matter? He says: "I am, therefore, not to see in this case as to whether the case brought by the appellant was true or false, but whether in view of the finding of the learned Deputy Magistrate who tried the case and found the principal point of the case to be false, sanction should be granted." He does not record his opinion that there is a prima facie case or, for the matter of that, any case against the petitioner. But he evidently thinks that the finding of the Deputy Magistrate was something upon which he could proceed. Now it seems to me that the Legislature has said as plainly as it knows how to say that the mere acquittal of the accused person is not sufficient for sanction for prosecution under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code. If that were enough, there would be no meaning in imposing a bar on such prosecutions, and every acquittal would be followed by an application for sanction to prosecute. There must be something more than mere acquittal; there must be a reasonable belief in the mind of the sanctioning Court that there was no foundation whatever for the criminal charge; there must be a belief that in instituting criminal proceedings the petitioner acted knowingly without belief in the truth of the allegations made by him or recklessly without caring whether the allegations were true or false. The judgment of the trial Court in this case does not show that there was no foundation whatever for the criminal case against the persons who were acquitted.

I have read the judgment of the Magistrate and the record of the case with great care and I am bound to say that they have left a suspicion in my mind as to whether the complainant had any chance whatever against the wealthy Zemindar of the place. The learned Magistrate was impressed by an entire absence of motive on the part of the accused and yet the same Magistrate records in his judgment that there is a long standing enmity between the petty shopkeepers of Madhuban Bazar and the Madhuban Babus. The question of motive is at all times a difficult matter for speculation, but in this case the finding of the Magistrate itself furnished a strong motive for the act complained against. The learned Magistrate very properly says that there being an old standing enmity between the complainant and the Madhuban Babus, the evidence of the prosecution witnesses must necessarily be received with caution. I agree with this and I would only add that the Additional Sessions Judge should have proceeded with the same caution in considering whether in this case, having regard to the admitted enmity between the parties, the statutory bar imposed by section 195 should be removed.

The whole prosecution case, however, rested on a very slender point, namely, whether the complainant had produced his books of account before the Police immediately after the alleged occurrence. As to this the prosecution case was that the complainant showed his account book to the junior Sub-Inspector who took away the book with him. With reference to this the learned Magistrate who tried the case says this:—"The fact that witness Nabijan Chowkidar has said in his evidence that he (that is to say, the junior Sub-Inspector) carried a khata and some paper to the Thana after the close of the investigation on the day of occurrence, combined with the somewhat unusual manner suggestive of interpolation in which the non production of the current account book is recorded on page 11 of the Case Diary, has given reason to suspect the veracity of the junior Sub-Inspector," and then by a curious piece of reasoning he comes to the conclusion that the account book was not in fact produced before the Police With reference to the junior Sub-Inspector, the learned Magistrate in another place says: "The conduct of the Police in this case has come in for a good deal of comment and it has been repeatedly insinuated that the Police have been conniving at the conduct of the accused from the beginning and that the report and Case Diary prepared by them are absolutely unreliable. There might be some apparent reason for such insinuation so far as certain acts of the junior Sub-Inspector are concerned, e. g., delay in despatching the Case Diary, writing above the printed head-line on page 11 regarding the non-production of the current account which gives rise to suspicion as being an interpolation and which really led the Sub-Divisional Officer to order the trial of the accused." It is also to be noted that the Sub-Divisional Officer held a local enquiry into the matter and he expressed his deliberate conviction that the account book was actually produced and was taken away by the Police Officer. He says in his report that the entire bazar appeared to be almost deserted and that the bazar people were afraid to tell the truth and did not want to come forward.

A perusal of the record of the criminal case has convinced me that in the unequal contest between a petty shopkeeper and the Madhuban Babus the latter had all their own way. I am unable to hold that there was no foundation whatever for the criminal case instituted by the complainant and I think that this matter should have been taken into consideration by the learned Additional Sessions Judge in granting sanction for the prosecution of the petitioner.

In the next place, the Additional Sessions Judge does not exclude the possibility of a personal spite on the part of the Madhuban Babus. With reference to this he makes the following extraordinary observation:—"In such a circumstance I think it would be serving a public interest that the matter should be threshed out and if the appellant be found guilty he may be punished so that such things may not occur in future. And if he be found innocent the Babus' men will take a lesson so as never more to assume an air of injured innocence. Under these circumstances I think the sanction granted by the learned District Magistrate should stand." I am clearly of opinion that sanction should not be so light-heartedly given in order to enable the parties to have a trial of strength. I do not think that the liberty of any person should by any act of the Court be jeopardized so that the person who asks for sanction "may take a lesson."

In my opinion, the learned Additional Sessions Judge has failed to exercise his discretion as it should have been exercised and I would, therefore, revoke the sanction granted by him and by the District Magistrate and direct that no further proceedings be taken in the matter.

Sanction revoked.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 375 OF 1919.

PAGLI AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1899), s. 495—Tea-dust, whether article of food or drink—Food, what is.

The accused were charged with an offence under section 495 of the Calcutta Municipal Act for selling as tea-dust some substance which was found not to contain any tea:

Held, that tea-dust came within the purview of the words "article of food or drink" in section 495 of the Calcutta Municipal Act. [p. 224, col. 1.]

The word "food" includes any article which ordinarily enters into or is used in the composition or preparation of food, and includes flavouring matters and condiments. [p. 224, col. 1.]

Criminal application against the order of the Municipal Magistrate, Calcutta.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mookerjee (with him Babu Satindra Nath Mookerjee), for the Petitioner.—This Rule was obtained on behalf of the Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation against an order of acquittal passed by the Municipal Magistrate of Calcutta. The accused-opposite party have a tea shop. They sold to the Food Inspector some foreign dust as tea dust. The learned Magistrate, without either taking evidence or examining the accused, acquitted them, holding that tea was not an article of human food or drink, relying upon the English Food Hoarding Order. I submit 'food' was not defined in that Order. The case of Hinde v. Allmond (1) is not applicable to the present case. Tea has been held to be 'food.' See 82 Justice of the Peace 548 (notes). There is nothing to show that tea cannot be treated as food and drink. The fact that tea has been considered to be an article of food and drink in England supports my contention. The present case clearly falls within the purview of section 495 of the Calcutta Municipal Act. The learned Magistrate ought not to have discharged the accused without taking any evidence or examining the accused. I would, therefore, ask your Lordships to set aside the order of the Magistrate and order a fresh trial of the accused under section 495, Calcutta Municipal Act.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—This is an application made on behalf of the Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation against an order passed by the Municipal Magistrate of Calcutta acquitting two persons of an offence under section 495 of the Calcutta Municipal Act. That section provides that no person shall sell to the prejudice of the purchaser any article of human food or drink which is not of the nature, substance or quality of the article demanded by such purchaser. It is alleged in this case that the accused persons sold to the Food Inspector as tea-dust some substance which, on analysis, was found not to contain any tea. When the case came on for trial the learned Magistrate, without examining the witnesses or the accused, acquitted the latter on the ground that tea-dust does not come within the purview of the words "article of human food or drink." He wrote a judgment which shows that he had in his mind the words of the learned Judges who decided the case of Hinde v. Allmond (1). That judgment was passed under the very special rules of the Food Hoarding Order; and it was pointed out in the course of the judgment that the word "food" in that Order was not identical with the description of the word "food" as given in the "Sale of Food and Drugs Act of 1875" because the word "drink" was omitted from the Order. The definition given in the Act of 1875 in that Court is that 'food' shall include every article used for food or drink by man other than drugs or water; and when the Act was amended in 1899, an addition was made to this effect that food shall include also any article which ordinarily enters into or is used in the composition or preparation of food and shall include flavouring matters and condiments. It appears to me that the learned Magistrate has erred in seeking for guidance as to the meaning of the words "Article of human food or drink" in a case that arose from a prosecution under the Food Hoarding Order. That Order was promulgated in very peculiar circumstances to achieve an object very different from that of Chapter XXXV of the Calcutta Municipal Act, and as I have already mentioned, the words used in the order are different from those of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, and of section 495.

If there is any difficulty in determining the true meaning of the words "Article of human food or drink", I think that the definition given in the Sale of Foods and Drugs Act makes the meaning plain, and I hold that tea-dust comes within the scope of section 495 of the Calcutta Municipal Act. As it appears that no evidence has been given and the accused have not been examined, the case must be sent back to the lower Court to be tried with reference to the above remarks.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

Case sent back.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 300, 302—Murder—Death caused by lathi blow—Offence—Burden of proving exception.

In order to take a case out of the category of murder, it is for the accused to show that his act was covered by one of the exceptions to section 300 of the Penal Code.

If a man takes a lathi and deliberately assaults another on the head with the result that the skull is fractured, that act is murder unless the accused can show that it was removed from the category of murder by one of the exceptions to section 300.

Criminal appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Aligarh, dated the 25th March 1919.

Mr. Uma Shankar Bajpai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerjee (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Notice was served on Piare to show cause why he should not be convicted of an offence punishable under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code. Piare has been defended in this Court by a learned Vakil, and we have heard what is to be said in his behalf. The evidence shows that the man Bansi went to the house of Piare to collect rent due from Piare, but when there he was assaulted by Piare, who went into his house, fetched a lathi and dealt him one blow on the head. Bansi dropped down and two others, who were assisting Piare, joined in assaulting Piare. We are not concerned with them at present. The learned Sessions Judge appears to us to have quite misunderstood the case. The post mortem shows that the blow inflicted by Piare was so severe that it caused a fracture, at the base of the skull. It was for Piare to show that the blow which he struck under these circumstances was not an act of wilful murder. He has not brought it under any exception to section 300. If a man takes a lathi and deliberately assaults another on the head with the result that the skull is fractured, that act is murder unless the accused can show that it was removed from the category of murder by one of the exceptions to section 300. We alter the conviction to one under section 302 and the sentence will be a sentence of transportation for life with effect from the 25th of March 1919.

Conviction altered.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 11, 12—Landlord and tenant—Ejected tenant, lease to relation of, whether continues tenancy.

Where a tenant is ejected by his landlord and a lease of the holding is given to a relation of the ejected tenant such lease does not amount to a continuation of the tenancy, in spite of the fact that the ejected tenant continues to cultivate either as sub-tenant or partner in cultivation.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Rohilkhand Division, dated the 29th July 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, S. M.—I am unable to agree with the Commissioner in this case. The facts are admitted. The appellant-landlord in 1315 ejected Jhanjhu in the 12th year of his tenancy. He then gave a seven years' lease to Kanha, another member of the family. Jaithu, the son of Jhanjhu, the former tenant, is actually cultivating it. He and Kanha both say that he, Jaithu, has been cultivating it all along, in fact ever since his father Jhanjhu cultivated it before ejectment.

It is not suggested that anyone but Jhanjhu was the tenant in 1315 when he was ejected. The landlord was within his legal rights in preventing accrual of occupancy rights by ejecting Jhanjhu. There was no obligation on him to eject Jaithu, son of Jhanjhu, also because he happened to be helping his father in cultivation. He did not let in either the father or the son—he let in Kanha, another member of the family—it is immaterial that he may have known that Kanha could let the son go on cultivating as his sub tenant or partner in cultivation It is, I consider, a perverse view of law that a lease to a relation is a continuation of an ejected tenancy. The case is one of a class in which sympathy with tenants is often pressed much too far.

The case is in fact a blend of examples (ii) and (iii) cited at page 102 of Agarwala's Commentary on the Tenancy Act, 5th Edition, cases in which a landlord can avoid pitfalls when seeking to prevent accrual of occupancy right. I hold that Jhanjhu's ejectment in 1315, followed by a lease to another member of the family Kanha, was a complete break and that neither Kanha nor Jaithu, defendants-respondents, can count any period prior to 1316. I would allow the appeal, set aside the Commissioner's order and restore that of the Assistant Collector decreeing ejectment with costs to appellant throughout.

HOPKINS, J. M.—I think there were good reasons for holding that Kanha, to whom the land was leased after Jhanju's ejectment in 1315 Fasli, was only a dummy. But as Jhanjhu and his son Jaithu were re admitted under cover of the lease in the name of Kanha, they were bound by that lease. It was a registered lease for a term of seven years and the period of 12 years necessary for the acquisition of occupancy rights did not begin to run until the expiry of its term under section 12 of the Tenancy Act. On these grounds I concur in the order proposed.

Appeal allowed.

Appeal, second—Discretion, exercise of, interference with, by Appellate Court—Decision based on erroneous grounds—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Appeal filed beyond time—Extension of time—Sufficient cause—Delay in taking steps, effect of.

Where the law leaves a matter to the discretion of a Court, and the Court decides to exercise that discretion, and does exercise it, but bases its decision upon entirely erroneous grounds, the discretion cannot be said to have been exercised in a legal and proper manner and cannot be allowed to stand. [p. 227, col. 2.]

Parties ought not to be encouraged to defer till the very last moment the taking of a step in the course of an action for which a limit of time is prescribed by rules, and no indulgence ought to be shown to a party who so puts off taking action, if by an unexpected accident he exceeds the time limit. Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Sambalpur, dated the 22nd November 1917, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Sambalpur, dated the 28th August 1916.

Messrs. Janki Nath Bose and Satish Chandra Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. N. Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C.J.—In this case the plaintiffs sued the Gangpur Light Tramway Company, Ld., and Mr. Pritchard, their manager, to recover a sum of Rs. 3,945, the principal amount of a loan, together with interest for money lent to Mr. Pritchard, alleging that the money was borrowed by him as manager on behalf of the Tramway Company. They succeeded before the Subordinate Judge in obtaining a decree against both Mr. Pritchard and the Company. That judgment was dated the 28th August 1916 and, with a view to appeal, the defendant Company, on the same day, applied to obtain copies of the judgment and decree. On the 2nd September they were notified by the office of the requisite number of folios and stamps required. These folios and stamps were supplied in due course, and the copy was ready for delivery on the 9th September. According to the rules the defendants had 30 days for appealing reckoned from the 9th September, but from the 26th September to the 29th October the Courts were closed in consequence of the vacation, so that the time was, therefore, extended until the first day after the opening of the Court after the vacation, viz, the 30th October. The result was that instead of having only 30 days for lodging their appeal the defendant Company did, in fact, have over 50 days altogether. Notwithstanding this, however, their memorandum of appeal was not filed until the 8th November, which was eight days after the time when it ought to have been filed.

When the appeal came on for hearing before the District Judge he had to consider, in the first instance, whether he should, in the circumstances which were disclosed, extend the time for filing the appeal in favour of the defendant Company. The case put forward by the defendants before the District Judge is contained in two affidavits, one made by the Managing Agent of the Company, Mr. Bhupendra Nath Basu, and another made by Mr. Kali Das Lahiri, who is the Head Assistant of the Company in Calcutta. The first affidavit does not throw very much light upon this question. In effect it says that the Managing Agent left Calcutta for Simla to attend a meeting of the Viceroy's Council on the 2nd September and was detained there until the 27th September and arrived back in Calcutta on the 29th September. That he instructed his Head Assistant to take the opinion of the Directors as to the course to be taken with a view to an appeal, that so far as he was concerned he left the matter there and went away to Darjeeling for the Puja holidays and came back again on the 29th October, which was the last day of the vacation. Between the time that he went to Darjeeling and the time when he came back he does not appear, so far as the affidavit is concerned, to have communicated at all with Mr. Kali Das Lahiri to see what steps were being taken with a view to prosecuting the appeal. He seems to have left everything in that gentleman's hands.

The second affidavit, that of Mr. Kali Das Lahiri, the Head Assistant, is to this effect. He corroborates what is said in the previous affidavit, and he says that he did consult the Directors; on the 16th October he obtained their consent to appeal, and they directed him to file the appeal. As the Courts were closed until the 30th October he could not file the appeal until that day arrived; but until the 29th October no steps at all were taken, either to consult his Vakil or legal adviser at Sambalpur where the appeal had to be filed, or to have the necessary memorandum of appeal prepared. Although it is not definitely stated in his affidavit I think perhaps, it may be inferred in his favour that he intended, on the 29th October, to leave Calcutta and go to Sambalpur for the purpose of having his appeal filed in the ordinary way; but I should like to mention, in passing, that in so doing he was running things very fine. It is, we are told, about a day's journey and rather a difficult journey by train from Calcutta to Sambalpur, and if he had left on the 29th October he could not have arrived at Sambalpur till the following day, which was the last day for filing the appeal. There he would have had to consult his legal adviser, and the memorandum of appeal would have had to be prepared and filed on the same day. It is just possible that he may have been able to do that, but the reason which he alleges for not proceeding to Sambalpur on the 29th October is that he was taken ill on that day and was confined to his bed until the 1st November. He says that he was so ill in fact that it was impossible for him to communicate his inability to go to Sambalpur to Mr. Bhupendra Nath Basu, the Managing Agent. He does not say in his affidavit that he was so ill that he was unable to instruct anybody else to proceed to Sambalpur on his behalf to take the necessary steps for filing the appeal. I suppose all that was necessary for the purpose would be the documents in the case, which would have to be laid before his Pleader in order to put him in possession of the necessary facts for filing the appeal. These, it seems to me, could easily have been handed over to somebody else on his behalf; and although there is a Doctor's certificate to say that he was ill of colic for four days from the 29th October, this does not in itself seem to me to be a sufficient reason for failing to file the appeal in time.

Had it been necessary for me to decide this question and to use my discretion in the matter, I should certainly have come to the conclusion that no sufficient reason had been made out, but the learned Judge who had to determine this question arrived at the conclusion that sufficient cause had been shown for the delay. If the matter had stood there I should have been very loth, whatever my own view of the matter, to interfere with his discretion; but the learned Judge seems to me to have based his decision upon entirely erroneous grounds. Although he was entitled and in fact it was his duty to exercise his discretion, if one finds that the conclusions of fact at which he arrived which were the basis of his decision were not such as could possibly support that decision, then I think this Court is entitled, and, indeed, is bound, to say that that discretion was not exercised in a legal and proper manner. What the learned Judge found was this. He accepted the facts set out in the affidavits as he was entitled to do and came to the conclusion that the Head Assistant was prevented from travelling from Calcutta to Sambalpur on the 29th October. But he goes on and says:—

"Although it appears remiss on his part not to have taken steps to have had the appeal forwarded by other means, it would be a hardship on the appellants to debar them owing to the carelessness of a servant from the appeal."

Now having read that part of the learned Judge's judgment it seems to me that the conclusion at which he arrived was in fact not that the illness of the Head Assistant prevented this appeal from being filed in time, but that if the Head Assistant had exercised ordinary diligence notwithstanding his illness the appeal might have been filed within the proper time, and it was only through his remissness that this course was not adopted. Then the learned Judge goes on and says it would be a hardship on the appellants to debar them owing to the carelessness of a servant from the appeal. I entirely dissent from the view taken by the learned Judge. If parties in this Court choose to entrust these matters to their servants then they must take the consequences of any remissness or negligence which may be exhibited on the part of their servants, and they cannot come to Court and say: "This is a very hard case. Had my servant done his duty as I expected he would, then my appeal would have been in time, therefore, I pray that some indulgence may be shown to me." That is not a ground upon which the Courts ought to exercise in their discretion any indulgence in favour of litigants, and, therefore, I think that the decision of the learned District Judge in allowing the time to be extended for filing this appeal cannot possibly stand.

There is one other matter I should like to draw attention to. It is a matter which is continually being brought to the notice of the Courts in this country, and that is this. It almost invariably happens that one party or the other intending to appeal or to take some other step in the course of an action for which a time limit is prescribed by the rules, waits until the very last moment before taking that step. Sufficient time in all these cases is granted to the parties for doing whatever may be necessary for furthering their suit, and if they choose to put off until the very last minute either the filing of the appeal or the taking of any other steps which are a necessary part of the prosecution of their case they run a very great risk, and it does not seem to me that it is sufficient for a party to come to Court and say that if everything had gone absolutely smoothly, and if no unexpected accident had happened, he would have been in time in taking the steps required for his appeal. One is not entitled to put things off to the last moment, and hope that nothing will occur which will prevent them from being in time. There is always the chapter of accidents to be considered, and it seems to me that one ought to consider that some accident or other may happen which will delay them in carrying out that part of their duties for which the Court prescribes a time limit, and if they choose to rely upon everything going absolutely smoothly and wait till the very last moment, I think they have only themselves to blame if they should find that something has happened which was unexpected but which ought to be reckoned with, and are not entitled in such circumstances to the indulgence of the Court.

For these reasons I think this appeal must be allowed upon the first point which has been raised. It is, therefore, not necessary to go into the merits of the appeal, whatever these merits in this particular case may be. The appeal will be allowed with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court. The judgment of the District Judge will be set aside, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge against the appellants as well as the other defendant will be restored.

ROE, J.—I agree. The District Court's order made upon the facts found is directly contrary to the principle that the master is responsible for the negligence of his servant. I also desire to associate myself entirely with the views of the learned Chief Justice with regard to the most objectionable practice of putting off to the last moment what ought to be done at leisure. Those who take this course must accept the consequences of an accident at the eleventh hour.

Appeal allowed.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 4 (3), (5), 95 (b)—Lessee of right to cut grass, whether tenant—Occupancy rights, acquisition of—Ejectment—Suit for declaration of class of tenancy, maintainability of.

Under section 4 (3), read with section 4 (5), of the Agra Tenancy Act the lessee of a right to cut thatching grass is a "tenant", though not a tenant of an agricultural holding. He cannot acquire occupancy rights or be ejected by a Revenue Court, but he can sue for a declaration as to the class of tenant to which he belongs under section 95 (b) of the Act. [p. 229, col. 1]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 22nd April 1918, in the case of declaration of tenancy.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, S. M.—The respondent sued the appellent Sher Alam Khan in the Civil Court as a trespasser. The Civil Court, under section 202, Tenancy Act, directed appellant to file a suit in the Revenue Court within three months to obtain a decision as to whether he was a tenant or not. The Civil Court evidently regarded the plot in suit No. 190/48, area 4 acres, to be an agricultural holding. The Commissioner finds, and it is clear from the pleadings, that it was let to the appellant for cutting thatching grass. This, it has been held, is not an agricultural purpose (the subject is discussed at page 12 of Mr. Agarwala's Commentary on the Tenancy Act, 5th Edition). So far the Commissioner's appellate finding is correct, but he goes on to decide that the appellant could not in consequence bring a suit under section 95, which, in his opinion, covers agricultural holdings only. Here I am unable to agree with him. Section 4 (3) and section 4 (5) read together show that the lessee of a right to cut thatching grass is a "tenant", though he is not the "tenant" of an agricultural holding in view of the definition of "holding" and "land" in section 4 (9) and section 4 (2) of the Act. He cannot acquire occupancy rights or be ejected under section 58 by a Revenue Court (the proper forum for his ejectment is the Civil Court), but he is the tenant all the same within the meaning of the term in section 4 (5) and it is going too far to hold that this is not the sense in which the term is used in the opening words of section 95. We must assume that if the framers of the section intended it to apply to agricultural tenants exclusively they would have said so and as they did not, a man who is tenant under section 4 (5) read with section 4 (3) can have his class declared under section 95 (b). It is pointed out to me by appellant's Counsel that the Board expressed an opinion to this effect in the course of their judgment of April 1918 in Chhote Lal v. Rani Dhan Devi Kuar, Jaunpore district, and I think it is correct, though I admit that the wording of section 95 as a whole looks as if the tenant under section 4 (5) read with section 4 (3) was forgotten.

I would set aside the Commissioner's appellate order and restore that of the Assistant Collector declaring appellant to be a non-occupancy tenant under clause (c) of section 6, Tenancy Act. Costs to appellant throughout.

LOVETT, S. M.—I agree.

Mortgage—Redemption of proportionate share, when permissible.

When a mortgage is split up by the mortgagee buying up the equity of redemption from some of the heirs of the original mortgagor, anyone of the heirs of the mortgagor is entitled to redeem his share of the mortgaged property on the payment of a proportionate sum due on his share. [p. 230, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Badaun, dated the 3rd February 1917.

Mr. S. Agha Haidar, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The three appeals Nos. 548, 734 and 834 are connected and arise out of one and the same suit brought by Mewa Ram for redemption of certain property. The claim was resisted on the grounds, among others, that the suit was premature and that the mortgage sought to be redeemed was barred by limitation. The learned Munsif decreed the claim for redemption on the payment of Rs. 325, $\frac{1}{4}$th of the mortgage money. Both parties appealed to the Court of the District Judge. The learned Judge varied the decree of the first Court by decreeing the claim of the plaintiff for some property in excess of that which was sought to be redeemed and upon payment of the full amount of the mortgage money. There are three appeals before us, as already stated, from the two decrees of the lower Appellate Court. No. 548 is the appeal of the plaintiff and the other two appeals are by Ganga Ram, the chief contesting defendant in the case. We shall dispose of the three appeals together. Mewa Ram, the plaintiff, contends that the lower Appellate Court should not have increased the sum for redemption or the property sought to be redeemed. He sued for the redemption of 2 biswas and 10 biswansis out of the mortgaged property, but when the case went to trial before the first Court it was found that he was entitled to redemption of 1 biswa 5 biswansis only, that is $\frac{1}{4}$th of the mortgaged property. If the learned Judge of the Appellate Court was of opinion that he, Mewa Ram, was entitled to redeem more than 1 biswa 5 biswansis, redemption should have been allowed on the payment of the proportionate sum payable on the property allowed to be redeemed. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court seems to have allowed redemption to Mewa Ram of $8\frac{1}{3}$ biswansis in addition to 1 biswa 5 biswansis. The decree for redemption, however, was granted on payment of Rs. 1,300, the full amount of the mortgage money. The learned Counsel for Mewa Ram is unable to explain how his client is entitled to redemption of any property in excess of 1 biswa 5 biswansis. The learned Counsel for Ganga Ram objects, and we think rightly, to that portion of the decree of the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court which allows Mewa Ram to redeem $8\frac{1}{3}$ biswansis in addition to 1 biswa 5 biswansis. The contention for Mewa Ram with regard to the amount payable by him is, in our opinion, correct. Ganga Ram himself has been buying from time to time the equity of redemption from the other heirs of the original mortgagor. The mortgage seems to have been split up. Mewa Ram is, therefore, entitled to redeem on the payment of the proportionate sum due on his share. His share is $\frac{1}{4}$th and, therefore, he is entitled to redemption of 1 biswa 5 biswansis on the payment of Rs. 325. In the other two appeals the principal points urged are that the suit of Mewa Ram is premature inasmuch as one of the conditions of the deed of mortgage is that redemption will only be allowed in the month of Jeth; that no tender was made by Mewa Ram in the month of Jeth and hence the suit is premature and ought to fail. The second contention on behalf of Ganga Ram is that the claim of Mewa Ram for redemption of the mortgage of 1850 is obviously barred by limitation, unless he can show that there was an acknowledgment before the expiry of the limitation period by the mortgagees or their legal representatives; that Mewa Ram has not proved the acknowledgment of at least some of the legal representatives of one of the mortgagees. Hence the claim is barred by limitation. In support of the first contention the case of Gokul Singh v. Saheb Singh (1) is cited. We think that the facts of that case are quite different from those of this. In the present case the plaintiff came into Court on the allegation that the mortgage had been satisfied by the usufruct of the property long before the suit. As to the plea of limitation, we think that the wajib-ul arz was attested by Shib Lal, one of the original mortgagees, and by the two major sons of Khem Karan. Under these circumstances we think that the claim is not barred by limitation. The result is that the appeals of Ganga Ram fail with the exception of the objection as to the redemption of $8\frac{1}{3}$ biswansis in excess of 1 biswa 5 biswansis; and the appeal of Mewa Ram succeeds with regard to the amount of redemption money. We accordingly modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court by decreeing the claim of Mewa Ram for redemption of 1 biswa 5 biswansis on the payment of Rs. 325. The appeal of Mewa Ram is, therefore, allowed with costs. The appeals of Ganga Ram fail with the exception of the modification above mentioned. With regard to the costs of the appeals of Ganga Ram, that is appeals Nos. 734 and 834, we direct that the parties should receive and pay costs in proportion to success and failure. We understand that in pursuance of the decree of the lower Appellate Court the appellant has already paid into Court a sum in excess of that now awarded by this Court. Such excess must, therefore, be repaid to him and he will be entitled to redemption forthwith.

Decree modified.

U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s 44—Settlement Record, continuous entry in, whether controvertible.

GOBIND RAMANUJ DAS v. DEBENDRABALA DASI.

Continuous entries in a Settlement Record are not incontrovertible and can be shown to be incorrect.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 10th August 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—The tenancy is a very old one dating back to the 1846 and 1838 Settlement, and the Commissioner in first appeal, on the basis of a compromise in a partition case in 1861 and a parwana to the respondent's ancestor in 1869, found that respondent held a portion as muafi or at a nominal rent. He, therefore, remanded the case to find out what land corresponded to land held by the respondent in 1838. The Assistant Collector who made the remand enquiry had a difficulty in making the comparison owing to difference in nature and scale of the older maps, but he found that at any rate some of the plots corresponded and the Commissioner has found substantial agreement between the plots in suit and those occupied in 1838. This is a finding of fact and I am not prepared to interfere with it in second appeal. If this were an Oudh case, I should hold that the respondent had sufficiently made out his case that the Zamindar had in the past given him land at a favourable rate of rent and that he was now an old tenant "at a favourable rate of rent" under the Oudh Rent Act. He was given it originally in sir land, and that accounts for the sir entry not having been corrected in the Settlement. The appellant landlord's strongest point is this continuous entry, having regard to section 12 (a), Land Revenue Act, the definition of sir. But it is settled law that such entries are not like the laws of the Medes and Persians incontrovertible—they can be shown to be incorrect—and I agree in the view of the case in this matter which the two Commissioners before whom this case came have taken. No other land is suggested as constituting the respondent's favourable grant and it is most unlikely that he would ever have given it up. I think a right and equitable decision has been come to in finding him an occupancy tenant of the land in suit and I decline to interfere.

Where consent has not been given, the institution of a suit by the landlord to recover the amount of the fee payable to him for registration of a transfer is not an indication of consent, nor does any cause of action arise, and the plaint cannot be amended by adding a statement that the landlord is willing to acknowledge the transfer as valid against himself. Appeal from a decision of the Sub-Deputy Collector of Puri, dated the 4th June 1918.

Sir Rash Behari Ghosh, Messrs. J. N. Bose and M. S. Das, for the Appellant.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter, Messrs. K. N. Chatterji and S. N. Chatterji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decision of the Sub-Deputy Collector of Puri, dated the 4th June 1918, decreeing the suit of the plaintiff, who represents the Paikpara Estate, against the defendant-appellant, Mahant Gobind Ramanuj Das, for a sum of Rs. 14,289-3-0, being the fee payable under section 16 of the Orissa Tenancy Act for the registration of the appellant's name in the respondent's registers, and interest on that sum at $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum.

No oral evidence was adduced by either party at the trial, and the only documentary evidence put in was the deed of transfer and certain settlement papers relating to the property. The facts, therefore, must be taken from the admission in the pleadings. The plaint, in so far as it is material, alleges that the property in question constitutes the Zemindari of the plaintiff; that the defendant purchased the property in suit under a registered kobala from certain persons who were miadi sarbarakars under the plaintiff, and on the 5th October 1917 applied for mutation of names in the plaintiff's sherista, praying also for exemption of mutation fees; that the plaintiff's officers in Puri asked the defendant and his officers to pay the mutation fee of Rs. 14,289-3-0 and that the defendant has not yet paid the same and is in possession of the property; that the defendant is liable to pay this sum to the plaintiff according to law and that the plaintiff is entitled to have it. It then alleges that the proportionate rent of the miadi sarbarakari tenure payable by the defendant is Rs. 2,381-8-6, the mutation fee claimed being six times that sum. It further alleges that the cause of action arose on the 12th July 1916 when the plaintiff came to know of the defendant's purchase.

The material part of the written statement alleges that the suit should be dismissed for want of cause of action; that the plaintiff is not entitled to the mutation fees claimed and the defendant is not liable to pay any mutation fee or any portion thereof. It denies that the defendant applied for exemption of mutation fees, but does not deny that he applied for mutation of names or that the plaintiff's officers in Puri asked the defendant and his officers to pay the mutation fee, nor does it deny that the property is in possession of the defendant. Upon these pleadings the following issues were framed:—

(1) Is the suit maintainable?
(2) Has the plaintiff any cause of action to bring the suit?
(3) Is plaintiff entitled to the fees claimed?
(4) Can plaintiff recover any amount from the defendant by suit?
(5) Is plaintiff entitled to any and what relief?

The learned Sub-Deputy Collector found on the first issue that the suit was maintainable under section 250 of the Orissa Tenancy Act. On the second and fourth issues he found that the landlord's offer to register the transferee's name, if the latter pays the requisite fee, is sufficient to give rise to a cause of action. On the third, that the fee payable was under section 16, clause (b), six times the annual rental, and on the fifth issue that interest at $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent might be allowed.

Sir Rash Behari Ghosh for the appellant urged, in the first instance, that the Sub-Deputy Collector had no jurisdiction to try the suit; secondly, that section 16 of the the Orissa Tenancy Act does not apply to the transfer of a tenure which is not transferable without the consent of the landlord or, at all events, not until that consent has been obtained and the transfer thereby completed. On this point he argued that even if the section is applicable to a case in which the tenure is not transferable without the consent of the landlord, the plaintiff cannot bring a suit to recover the registration fee because when the Statute imposes an obligation on any person and prescribes the mode in which that obligation is to be discharged, the discharge of the obligation can only be enforced in the manner prescribed by the Statute. He next contended that the landlord cannot maintain a suit to recover a fee unless there has been an application for registration in his sherista. He further argued that the suit is premature for the reason that until a reasonable time had been given for the application for registration, it could not be said that the transferee of a tenure was liable for the fees leviable under section 16; and lastly, that the plaintiff is not entitled to claim interest.

We may deal first with the contention that section 16 does not apply to a transfer of a tenure which is not transferable without the consent of the landlord, for if this ground succeeds the suit must be dismissed upon this issue, and it will be unnecessary to discuss the remaining points covered by the argument on behalf of the appellant. Section 16 runs as follows:—

(1). In cases other than those covered by section 15, when any tenure or portion of a tenure is transferred by sale, gift or exchange, the transferee or his successor-in interest shall apply to the landlord to whom the rent of the tenure or portion thereof is payable for registration of the transfer, and the landlord shall, in the absence of good and sufficient reason to the contrary, allow the registration of the transfer. The fee payable on such transfer shall be—

(a) In the case of a sale, Rs. 25 per centum of the consideration money, or the fee specified in clause (b), whichever is greater, and (b) in the case of gift or exchange, a fee six times the annual rental of the tenure or portion thereof, as the case may be, or, if rent be not payable in respect of the tenure or portion, then a fee of Rs. 10.

We must accept, on the pleadings before us, the fact that an application for registration has been made by the defendant in respect to the tenure, which is a sarbarakari tenure. A sarbarakari is a sub-proprietor, and as such is by section 6 (iii) deemed to be a tenure-holder for the purposes of sections 14 to 20 of the Act. This class of tenure is excluded from the operation of section 15. On a transfer of a sarbarakari tenure the transferee is, therefore, required by section 16 to apply to the landlord to whom the rent of the tenure or a portion thereof is payable for registration of the transfer. We have no doubt that that section would be applicable in cases in which a transfer is complete and valid as against the landlord, but a transfer of such a tenure as that under consideration is not complete and valid as against the landlord until the landlord has given his consent to it

It must, therefore, be determined whether such consent was given because if it was not, it follows that in our view there was no transfer of the tenure within section 16 (1). On a reference to the plaint it will be observed that it is not suggested that such consent has been given. All that is said is that the plaintiff's officers in Puri, upon the application for registration, asked the defendant and his officers to pay the larger mutation fee, which was refused. There is in this no suggestion that they, the officers in Puri, had authority to give consent, much less that they gave such consent.

The sequence of events contemplated by section 16 (1) seems to be that first the transferee shall apply to the landlord for registration, and that the landlord shall then allow the registration, and that upon his allowing the registration a fee shall become payable. The landlord is within his rights in refusing his consent in the case of a non-transferable tenure. If he should refuse no registration can be enforced by the transferee, and sub-section (3) of section 16 will not avail him. It should be inferred from the pleadings that registration was asked for and refused, which is tantamount to refusal of consent. How then can it be said that the landlord who has refused to consent to the transfer can claim that which is only payable on a transfer taking place? In the argument before us the learned Vakil for the appellant has intimated that he is quite willing to pay the fee prescribed in section 16 (1) (a) viz., 25 per cent. of the purchase price, amounting to Rs. 3,000, contending that the alternative fee prescribed by sub clause (b), viz., six times the annual rental does not apply as no rent is payable to the landlord by a sarbarakar but only revenue. This is, no doubt, the real dispute between the parties. The respondent, however, refused to accept this and contends that the matter is concluded by the pleadings. No doubt, the plaint alleges that rent is payable by the defendant, and there is no specific denial of this in the written statement. The appellant, therefore, takes his stand upon the position that there has been no transfer within the meaning of the section. There are many cogent reasons for holding that until the landlord's consent to registration has been obtained no fee is payable. Dr. Mitter, however, contends that registration being compulsory the landlord may, as soon as the transfer becomes known to him, although incomplete until his consent is obtained, call upon the transferee to apply for registration and deposit a fee. That does not seem to be the meaning of the section, for there may be many cases in which a transferee might have good reasons for not making such an application, as, for instance, he might know that his application would be rejected, and in that case the making of an application would merely put the tenants of the estate upon notice that the transferee's position was a precarious position, and result in their taking advantage of the fourth clause of section 16 to refuse all payment of rent; or, again, it might be that the fee known to be payable would be so large that it would be better to risk the consequences of failure to make an application rather than to pay the requisite fee. It might turn out that the transferee had made a bad bargain and did not wish to complete his title by paying a large registration fee to the landlord, and it would be unreasonable to hold that in such a case he should be obliged to apply for the landlord's consent and thereby complete his title against his will, rendering himself liable to a further outlay for registration fees. It has been held in the case of Mritunjoy Praharaj v. Sree Jagannath Jeu (1) that a landlord is entitled to sue for the fee leviable upon an application for the registration of the transfer of an occupancy holding, even when the transferee has failed to make any application for such registration.

It should be noted, however, that the procedure to be followed in cases of the transfer of occupancy rights under section 31 is somewhat different from that prescribed by section 16. Under section 31 the ultimate arbiter upon the application of the transferee is not the landlord as in the case of a non transferable tenure, but the Collector, who shall decide whether the transfer shall be registered or not even in cases where the landlord objects; but, assuming that the decision given in that case in respect to the payment of registration fees under section 31 applies equally to the landlord's rights under section 16, it was there held that the landlord's right to levy a fee was contingent upon his consent to the transfer. This appears clear from the following passage from the judgment :—

" It is the duty of the tenant to apply to the landlord for his consent, and once the landlord has given his consent the tenant is clearly liable to pay the fee prescribed by the Act. In this case the landlord has voluntarily consented to a transfer of the tenancy to the defendant, and once he has done this his right to sue arises, even though the tenant may not have expressly applied for registration."

In the case now under consideration it does not appear that the landlord ever consented to the transfer. It seems clear on the sequence of events contemplated by the section that until the consent has been given no cause of action will arise. We are asked by Dr. Mitter to hold that the filing of the suit is in itself an indication of the landlord's consent; and it is suggested by him that if it is necessary definitely to state in the plaint that the landlord had given his consent to the transfer, he was prepared to make an amendment to his plaint to the effect that the landlord was willing to acknowledge the transfer as valid against himself. But he was not in a position to add to the plaint a statement to the effect that before the filing of the suit any intimation had been given to the defendant of the plaintiff's consent to the transfer. It is well settled that a cause of action must be antecedent to the institution of the suit and cannot arise from the pleadings themselves. It follows that the landlord's consent not having been given before the institution of the suit there was at the time of the institution of the suit no cause of action, and that the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed. It is not necessary, therefore, to consider the remaining issues. The objection to jurisdiction was not pressed, and we would note only that our attention has been drawn to a Notification in the Bihar and Orissa Gazette, vesting Babu Raghabananda Das by the Local Government with powers to discharge any of the functions of a Deputy Collector under the Act. He is, therefore, a Deputy Collector within the meaning of section 3 (4) and (6) and is, therefore, a Collector within the meaning of that section and, therefore. had jurisdiction to try this suit. We note further that upon the question of interest Dr. Mitter admits that he is unable to support the judgment of the Sub-Deputy Collector.

The result of our findings is that the suit must be dismissed as disclosing no cause of action The appeal will be allowed, the judgment and decree of the Sub-Deputy Collector will be set aside, and in lieu thereof judgment will be entered for the defendant with costs here and in the Court below.

The period of limitation applicable to a suit upon a bill of exchange or promissory note, accompanied by a writing postponing the right to sue for a definite period, is contained in Article 80 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and the period commences to run from the date when such bill or note becomes payable. [p. 236, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decision of the Additional District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 25th May 1917.

Mr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit on the basis of a promissory note dated the 13th of June 1913. The defendant No. 1, one Shama Charan, owed money to the Kayastha Trading and Banking Corporation, Limited, Gorakhpur, and in liquidation of this debt he executed the promissory note for Rs. 700 on the 13th of June 1913 in favour of his creditor. This promissory note was payable on demand, and on the same day the executant of the promissory note wrote a letter to the Manager of the Kayastha Trading and Banking Corporation asking that the period for suing on the promissory note should be postponed for one year, within which time he promised to pay the amount due on the promissory note. The promissory note was subsequently assigned to defendant No. 3, a relation and benamidar of the plaintiff. The suit was filed on this promissory note on the 25th of November 1916. If the period of limitation is calculated from the date of the execution of the promissory note then the suit would be barred by time; but it is argued on behalf of the appellants that the period of limitation has to run from the date of the expiry of one year after the date of the execution of the promissory note as provided by the writing which accompanied it. This was the view taken by the Court of first instance. But the lower Appellate Court was of opinion, relying on the decision in Somasundaram Chettiar v. Narasimha Chariar (1), that the suit was barred by limitation. That Court overlooked entirely the proviso in Article 73 to the Limitation Act, which specially lays down that the period of limitation starts to run on a bill of exchange or promissory note from the date of the bill or note, provided that it is not accompanied by any writing restraining or postponing the right to sue. In this case the promissory note was clearly accompanied by a writing restraining or postponing the right to sue for one year, and, therefore, the Article of the Limitation Act applicable to the suit is not Article 73 but Article 80, which lays down that the period of limitation for a suit on a bill of exchange, promissory note or bond begins to run from the date when the bill, note or bond becomes payable. In this case, therefore, the period of limitation began to run from the 13th of June 1914 and the suit was not barred by time. The ruling referred to by the learned Additional Judge in Somasundaram Chettiar v. Narasimha Chariar (1) was overruled by a Full Bench decision of the same High Court in Annamalai Chetty v. Velayudu Nadar (2). No other question was involved in this case. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Landlord and tenant—Non-occupancy tenant obtaining mortgage of holding, effect of—Redemption—Tenant, position of.

Where a non-occupancy tenant of a holding obtains a mortgage of the holding, his tenancy falls into abeyance during the existence of the mortgage and, although he cannot reckon the period of the mortgage towards the acquisition of occupancy rights, on redemption he reverts to his position of tenant and is not a trespasser.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 9th October 1918, in the case of determination of tenure.

JUDGMENT.—The fields in suit are Nos. 1048 and 1155.

As regards No. 1155, the respondent was a 5 years' non-occupancy tenant at the settlement of 1307 Fasli at a rent of Rs. 2-12-0. Afterwards the fields were mortgaged to him. The mortgage was redeemed a year or two ago and he is still on the land. The appellant urges that he is a trespasser, but in the absence of rulings to the contrary I must go by the rulings quoted at page 86 of Agarwala's Tenancy Act, 5th Edition, and hold that respondent's tenancy was merely in abeyance during his mortgage and although he cannot count the period of the mortgage towards acquisition of occupancy rights, he has nevertheless reverted to his position of a tenant and is not a trespasser. I, therefore, agree with the Commissioner as regards this number.

As regards the other number 1048, the Commissioner has assumed that the case is the same, but I can find nothing on the record to show that as regards this number respondent was a tenant in the 1307 Fasli Settlement. The settlement extract is for No. 1044, not No. 1048, and the Assistant Collector seems to have been muddled also, as he first speaks of No. 1155 only being recorded as respondent's tenancy at settlement and afterwards speaks of two numbers. It is possible that No 1044 in the settlement extract is a clerical error for No.

1048. I would, therefore, call for a report as to whether No. 1048, the second number in suit, was recorded in respondent's tenancy at the 1307 Settlement. If so, respondent is a tenant of it similarly to No. 1155, and if not, he is a trespasser holding over after his mortgage has expired.

No fresh date will be fixed.

Babu Abinash Chandra Banerjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this Rule held a permanent under-tenure in a taluk. It was sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent under the provisions of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Tenancy Act and the petitioner applied under Order XXI, rule 89, of the Civil Procedure Code to have the sale set aside on deposit of money under that section.

The case comes from the District of Backergunge.

Section 170 of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Tenancy Act does not exclude the operation of section 310A (corresponding to Order XXI, rule 89, of the present Code of Civil Procedure) to a tenure or holding attached in execution of a rent decree, as is done by section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code, therefore, applies to a sale held for arrears of rent in Eastern Bengal and Assam, and the question for consideration is whether an under-tenure comes within that rule. Order XXI, rule 89, says: "Where immoveable property has been sold in execution of a decree, any person, either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale, may apply to have the sale set aside." We think that a person holding a permanent under-tenure in the property sold holds an interest therein. His rights are undoubtedly affected by the sale; in fact it can be annulled by the purchaser. In the case of Paresh Nath Singha v. Nabogopal Chattopadhya (1) it was held by the majority of the Full Bench that a mortgagee of a tenure or holding sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of it is entitled to make an application under section 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure as being a person whose immoveable property has been sold within the meaning of that section. That case is one of a simple mortgage, but it lays down the principle that a person having an interest in the property is entitled to come in under section 310A.

(1) 29 C. 1 (F. B.); 5 C. W. N. 821.

It is to be noted that under section 310A, the words were "any person whose immoveable property has been sold," and the Order XXI, rule 89, which has replaced that section says: "any person either owning such property or holding an interest therein etc." We think that these words are more comprehensive than the words of section 310A. In the case of Narain Mandal v. Sourindra Mohan Tagore (2) Brett and Mookerjee, JJ., held that when a mokarari tenure is sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, a dar-mokarariдar has a right to come in and make a deposit under section 310A of the Civil Procedure Code, being a person whose immoveable property has been sold within the meaning of that section. In the case of Chandra Kumar Nath v. Kamini Kumar Ghose (3) Maclean, C. J., and Fletcher, J., following the case of Narain Mandal v. Sourindra Mohan Tagore (2) held that an under-raiyat can apply under section 310A of the Civil Procedure Code as being a person whose immoveable property has been sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of the superior holding.

In any case, we do not think that the scope of Order XXI, rule 89, is narrower than that of section 310A of the old Code, under which it has been held that a person in the position of the petitioner can apply under that section.

Reliance is placed on behalf of the opposite party on the decision of the case of Administrator General of Bengal v. Mahomed Kholil (4). That case was decided before the Full Bench case of Paresh Nath Singha v. Nabogopal Chattopadhya (1) and, therefore, cannot be accepted as an authority in support of the contention raised on behalf of the opposite party; and upon this ground the learned Judges in the case of Narain Mandal v. Sourindra Mohan Tagore (2) distinguished that case.

In the case of Abdul Aziz v. Tafajaddin (5) the learned Judges (Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ.) observed that "the rule formulated in rule 90, Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code, has a wider scope, and is of a more comprehensive character than the rule laid down in section 311 of the Code of 1882", because the expression "a person whose interests are affected by the sale" in Order XXI, rule 90, of the present Code has obviously a wider import than the expression "a person holding an interest in the property sold" in section 311 of the old Code. That may be so; but that does not affect the construction of Order XXI, rule 89, in any way: and so far as the scope of the present rule 89, Order XXI, goes, we think that it is at any rate not narrower than that of section 310A of the old Code. We are accordingly of opinion that the petitioner had locus standi to make the application under Order XXI, rule 89.

The order of the Court below must be set aside and the case sent back to the Court of first instance for disposal of the application according to law.

Costs, one gold mohur, to abide the result. The Rule is made absolute.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 21—Mandidhari rights, purchaser of, position of—Right, whether transferable.

Mandidhari rights are not transferable, and a purchaser of such rights is in no higher position than a non-occupancy tenant. The fact that the purchaser of such rights has redeemed a prior mortgage of the same and has entered into cultivation himself would not improve his position. [p. 239, col. 2.]

Application for revision of the order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 8th April 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision. The applicant suggests no flaw in jurisdiction such as would justify interference in revision under the strict wording of section 185, Tenancy Act.

It is not a case in which I can stretch the section on the ground of equity. The fields were the Mandidhari of Partab Singh, etc. They were in occupation of Bhauna, their mortgagee, since long. The applicant purchased their Mandidhari rights in 1902. He could not do so under the law—Mandidhari rights not being transferable. The authority* for this is to be found quoted in note 14 on section 21 in Agarwala's Tenancy Act, 5th Edition. Had the applicant redeemed the prior mortgage and entered into cultivation himself when he made this illegal purchase of Mandidhari rights in 1902, he would have acquired occupancy right now by lapse of time. But the land remained in cultivation of the mortgagee Bhauna till 1908. The applicant then paid off Bhauna mortgagee and has cultivated himself since then, but his position can be no higher than that of a non occupancy tenant since 1908.

The Commissioner is right.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Ramnad, in Appeal Suit No 61 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Special Deputy Collector, Ramnad at Manamadura, in S. S. No. 462 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff could not revert to waram as Exhibit I, the grant by Kolandaiswamy to defendant, was a permanent patta. It provides for a fixed rent, and that is what the defendant is bound to pay. The words in the document 'for ever and ever' and the use of words of inheritance clearly show that the document conveyed an absolute estate.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.—Kolindaiswamy Devar, the grantor under Exhibit I, was himself a lessee for a period of 30 years. He could not grant a larger interest than he himself had. Under section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act a grantor must be deemed to convey only what he is capable of granting. In considering the nature of the interest taken by the grantee, the extent of the grantor's interest may be taken into account: Boddington v. Robinson (1).

JUDGMENT.—One Kolandaiswamy Devar obtained a lease for 30 years of the village in dispute from the Zamindar of Sivaganga in 1882. In 1886 he executed Exhibit I to the defendant. Exhibit F is the muchilika from the defendant to Kolandaisawmy. In March 1887 the suit village and other villages were permanently assigned to Kolandaisawmy by the Zamindar. The right of the assignee was purchased in Court-auction by the present plaintiff and he sues to recover arrears of rent from the defendant. The defendant pleaded that under Exhibit I he was bound to pay only the rent provided in the document and that plaintiff was not entitled to demand waram.

The main issue in the case was whether Exhibit I conferred a permanent right on the defendant. Both the Courts below were of opinion that it was not a permanent patta and that it was open to the plaintiff to revert to waram.

We are unable to agree with this conclusion. The document on the face of it fixes a permanent rate of rent for all time to come. The words "for ever and ever" occur in three places and are coupled further with words of inheritance, namely, the property shall descend to heirs. We are unable to hold that Exhibit I is merely a lease for a fixed period.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar for the repondents referred to Boddington v. Robinson (1) and contended that the nature of the estate possessed by the grantor is a conclusive test of the nature of the grant made to the grantee. That decision does not support this extreme contention. No doubt, in considering the extent of the interest granted by a person, the nature of his right may be taken into account. Generally, if the language of the grant is ambiguous, such considerations may be of avail. But where the language is unambiguous and clear, we do not think in construing a grant the extent of the right possessed by the grantor should have any weight. Section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act was also relied on. That section lays down that the grantor must be deemed to have conveyed only what he was capable of conveying. It is not a canon of construction but a rule relating to the legal effect of a grant. The observations of the Judicial Committee in Radhakant Lal v. Musammat Nazama Begum (2) support this view. For these reasons we are of opinion that, prima facie, the terms of a document must be looked at to ascertain the nature of the estate granted by it and it is only where there is any doubt about its import that other considerations can be taken into account. In our opinion Exhibit I conveyed an absolute estate.

The further question is whether it is binding upon the plaintiff. On the one hand, Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar for the defendant relied upon section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act and upon section 26 of the Estates Land Act. On the other hand, Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar referred to the well known principle enunciated in Patman v. Harland (3) by Jessel, M. R., that where a man has notice of the document, he must be deemed to have notice of the terms of the document and contended that as both parties were cognizant of all the facts, no question of estoppel either under section 115 or section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act can arise. Without expressing any opinion whether constructive notice of the contents of a document would disable a party from relying upon an actual representation, we think that further facts ought to be ascertained in this case before applying the law. In the first place, we must know whether the facts alleged in paragraph 7 of the written statement are true and also whether the defendant was otherwise actually aware of the nature of the estate which Kolandaiswamy had at the time of Exhibit I. Also before applying section 26 of the Estates Land Act, Courts must know what was the state of the property at the time of Exhibit I and why a permanently low rate of rent was fixed at the time of the grant. It is only on the ascertainment of these facts that the law can be applied. The issues that must be tried are:—

1. Whether the plaintiff made any representation as stated in paragraph 7 of the written statement?

2. Whether the defendant was aware that Kolandaiswamy had only a limited estate?

3. Under what circumstances and why a favourable rate of rent was fixed in Exhibit I?

4. Whether by operation of section 26 of the Estates Land Act or by the principle of estoppel enunciated in section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, the plaintiff is precluded from reverting to waram?

As the determination of these issues would involve the taking of further evidence and as the case was disposed of on a preliminary point, we think, in the circumstances of the case, it is desirable that the decrees of both the Courts should be reversed and the case should be remanded to the Court of first instance for disposal in the light of the above observations. Parties may be permitted to file additional statements. The Court may also frame further issues, if necessary, and give further opportunities to the parties for adducing evidence. We order refund of Court-fee; costs to abide.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 193 (a)—Appeal, whether lies from order.

Orders, as opposed to decrees, under the Agra Tenancy Act are not appealable

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 3rd September 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—The Assistant Collector dismissed the suit on a preliminary point that demarcation should precede suit. The Commissioner in first appeal overruled this, holding that there was sufficient definition in the plaint. He remanded the case for disposal on the merits. This was an order under rule 23, Order XLI, Civil Procedure Code, and is classed as an order in rule 1 (a), Order XLIII, Civil Procedure Code. It was not a decree within the definition of decree in section 2, Civil Procedure Code.

There are no appeals from orders, as opposed to decrees, under the Tenancy Act, inasmuch as section 193 (a), Tenancy Act, rules out Chapter XLIII, Civil Procedure Code, relating to appeals from orders. This appeal, therefore, does not lie and the appellant must await the final determination of the suit in the lower Court.

Different views have been taken on the question as to whether demarcation must in all cases precede a suit for ejectment—there are, I am aware some decisions supporting the line taken by the Commissioner, and I am, therefore, not prepared to consider whether I can or should exercise interference at the present stage by revisional jurisdiction.

Appeal dismissed. Costs on appellant.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXVI, r. 9—Local investigation—Court, power of, to make local inspection—Duty of Court—Appeal, second—Appellate Court, judgment of, based on result of local inspection made by trial Court, legality of.

Order XXVI, rule 9, of the Civil Procedure Code gives no power to a Court to itself hold a local inspection. A Judge can only hold such inspection for the purpose of understanding the evidence and for no other purpose. He must decide the case on the evidence adduced before him, and, if he finds that complete justice cannot be done without a local investigation, he has power, under the rule above quoted, to appoint a commission for this purpose; the fact that the plaintiff has not applied for this to be done, does not relieve the Judge of the duty imposed upon him of having before him all the material available which is necessary for the determination of the point at issue between the parties. [p. 243, col. 1.]

The judgment of a lower Appellate Court, based entirely upon a local investigation conducted by the Judge of the Court of first instance himself, cannot be sustained in second appeal. [p. 243, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Monghyr.

Mr. Harendra Nath Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. Jagannath Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the appellants for ejectment of the respondent from the land in dispute, on the ground that the defendant has used the land in a manner which renders it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy. In other words, the suit was a suit under the provisions of section 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Now the complaint of the plaintiffs is that the defendant has erected a structure on 6 cottahs of agricultural land which the defendant purchased from one Phagu, who was the original tenant. The defendant on the other hand maintains that the structure was not raised on the 6 cottahs of land which he purchased from Phagu, but on one cottah of land which was let out to the defendant for building his house and which adjoins the six cottahs.

The Court of first instance thought that it was difficult to say exactly whether the disputed houses stand over the disputed land or over one cottah of land which was settled with the defendant. He, however, held a local inspection and, as a result of his local inspection, came to the conclusion that a portion of the house stood on the 6 cottahs of land but that the remaining portion of the house stood on the one cottah of land. In the result he granted a modified decree to the plaintiffs. There was an appeal by both parties to the lower Appellate Court. The respondent complained that the Court of first instance was incompetent to grant any decree at all in favour of the plaintiffs. The respondent's appeal succeeded before the lower Appellate Court. The appellants on the other hand maintained that the lower Appellate Court should have granted them a decree for ejectment under section 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The lower Appellate Court says this: "The learned lower Court made a careful local enquiry and was satisfied that these other structures do not stand on the 6 cottahs. I do not see how the appellant's contention can be accepted." It is clear to me, therefore, that the lower Appellate Court relied entirely upon the local investigation conducted by the Court of the first instance.

The question, whether a Court is entitled, under the new Civil Procedure Code, to hold a local enquiry himself has been raised in several cases, but so far as I know, has not yet been decided. So far as the English cases are concerned, it is clear that a Court is not entitled to hold a local inspection inasmuch as it may hamper the Court in coming to a conclusion on the evidence before it. But the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 did undoubtedly, empower a Court to hold a local inspection but Order XXVI, rule 9, which, in my opinion, is a complete code on the subject, gives no power whatever to a Court to hold a local inspection. The point is an interesting one and it is interesting to compare the wording of section 392 of the Code of 1882 with the wording of Order XXVI, rule 9. Section 392 of the Code of 1882 provided as follows:—

"In any suit or proceeding in which the Court deems a local investigation to be requisite or proper for the purpose of elucidating any matter in dispute, or of ascertaining the market value of any property, or the amount of any mesne profits, or damages or annual nett profits, and the same cannot be conveniently conducted by the Judge in person, the Court may issue a commission to such person as it thinks fit directing him to make such investigation and to report thereon to the Court."

Order XXVI, rule 9, however, provides that: "In any suit in which the Court deems a local investigation to be requisite or proper for the purpose of elucidating any matter in dispute, or of ascertaining the market-value of any property, or the amount of any mesne profits, or damages or annual net profits the Court may issue a commission to such person as it thinks fit directing him to make such investigation and to report thereon to the Court."

It will be noticed that the words occurring in section 392, viz., "and the same cannot be conveniently conducted by the Judge in person" have been altogether omitted in Order XXVI, rule 9, and it is with reference to this that Mr. Justice Mookerjee in the case of Rai Kishore Ghose v. Kumudini Kanta Ghose (1) says as follows: "It may be pointed out, however, that Order XXVI, rule 9, of the Code of 1908, which corresponds to section 392, omits the words 'and the same cannot be conveniently conducted by the Judge in person' and when rule 9 requires to be construed, it may be a matter for argument that the intention of the Legislature was to adopt the English rule." The English rule, as I have said before, does not allow a Judge to hold a local inspection himself.

But whether under the new Code a Judge is entitled to hold a local inspection or not, it is perfectly clear that he can only hold it for the purpose of understanding the evidence and for no other purpose. He must still decide the case on the evidence adduced before him and if he finds that it is impossible to decide the case on the evidence before him, he has ample power under Order XXVI, rule 9, to issue a commission to such person as he thinks fit to make such investigation and to report thereon to Court. The complaint of the Courts below has been that the plaintiffs did not apply for issue of commission, but, in my opinion, if the Court thought that it was impossible for it to determine the question at issue between the parties without a local investigation, it was not only competent to him to issue a commission but it was his duty to do so, and there can be no doubt that the Court of first instance undoubtedly thought it could not do complete justice between the parties without local investigation. The fact that he himself conducted the local investigation shews conclusively that in his opinion complete justice could not be done without such an investigation.

The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the respondent argues that the Court of first instance decided this case not only on the result of his local inspection but on the evidence adduced before it. I am unable to agree with the learned Vakil on this point. But whatever may have been the opinion of the Court of first instance, it is to my mind clear beyond doubt that the lower Appellate Court based its decision on the local inspection held by the Munsif and on nothing else. In my opinion this judgment cannot be sustained. I would, therefore, allow this appeal and remit the case to the lower Appellate Court with a direction that the lower Appellate Court should remit it to the Court of first intance in order to enable it to decide the questions at issue between the parties. If the Court of first instance thinks that it is unable to decide the case without a local investigation or if the plaintiff makes an application before it for the issue of a commission, then the Court of first instance will have power under Order XXVI, rule 9, to issue a commission to such person as it thinks fit for the purpose of holding a local investigation and to make a report to the Court.

The appellants are entitled to the costs of this appeal and of the appeal to the lower Appellate Court. The costs incurred in the Court of first instance will abide the result and will be disposed of by that Court.

The parties will not be permitted to adduce any further evidence before the Court of first instance either on the question of damage or on any other question at all.

Appeal allowed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19, Sch. I, Art. 61—Joint mortgage-bond—Payment by plaintiff—Contribution, suit for—Limitation, commencement of—Acknowledgment of liability under bond, effect of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VII, r. 6—Plaint—Suit barred by limitation—Ground saving limitation, whether should be specifically pleaded.

A suit to recover excess payments made by the plaintiff towards a joint mortgage-bond executed by himself and the defendant, is a suit for contribution and must be brought within the period of limitation prescribed by Article 61 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, the period counting from the date of the last payment made by the plaintiff; any payment made by the defendant subsequently thereto would be of no avail to the plaintiff. [p. 244, col. 1.]

Where a plaintiff, who is about to get a mortgage-bond assigned to himself, receives a notice from the defendant that "if you get an assignment, out of the sum of Rs. 100 that may still be due my liability will be only Rs. 50", the notice does not amount to an acknowledgment of liability to the plaintiff. It is only an acknowledgment of liability under the bond.

Where a suit is brought after the prescribed period of limitation, it is incumbent on the plaintiff, under Order VII, rule 6, of the Civil Procedure Code, to state explicitly the ground on which the bar is saved.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of Small Causes, Trichinopoly, in Suit No. 2804 of 1917.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Ayyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Venungopala Chettiar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—I am unable to agree with the learned Small Cause Court Judge on the question of limitation. The facts are not in dispute. The plaintiff and the defendant had jointly executed a deed of mortgage to one Appaniengar. The amount secured by the mortgage was Rs. 300, which came to nearly Rs. 533 with interest thereon. The plaintiff paid admittedly Rs. 303 and the defendant only Rs. 227. This is a suit to recover from the defendant contribution for the amount which the plaintiff had paid in excess of the amount due from him. There were various pleas in the lower Court and I need not refer to all of them now. The only point is whether this suit was within time as one for contribution. The last payment by the plaintiff was made in January 1914 and the suit was instituted on the 2nd July 1917. Prima facie, it was more than three years since the accrual of the cause of action. The learned Judge in the Court below was of opinion that as the defendant made payment under the bond in September 1914, the bar of limitation was saved. He is clearly wrong in this view. It is not the payment of the defendant that matters, but it is the payment by the plaintiff that gives him the right to sue, as the plaintiff's claim is in respect of the excess payment made by him. To such a suit, Article 61 of the Limitation Act is clearly applicable and under that Article the suit must be brought within three years of the date of payment. If any authority were needed for this view, I may refer to the order of reference made by Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., in Rajah of Vizianagram v. Rajah Setrucherla Somasekhararaz (1). The learned Vakil for the petitioner did not support the judgment of the lower Court on this point. What he contended was that the claim against the defendant was saved by the acknowledgment under Exhibit IV. It was a registered notice sent on the 26th July 1914, before the defendant had made the last payment. At that time, defendant heard that the plaintiff was about to get the mortgage bond assigned to himself and he sent this notice saying that, "if you get an assignment, out of the sum of Rs. 100 that may be still due my liability will be only Rs. 50." This is not an acknowledgment of the liability to the plaintiff. It is only an acknowledgment of the liability under the bond. Apart from this there is another fatal objection to regarding Exhibit IV as an acknowledgment, because under Order VII, rule 6, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff who brings the suit after the prescribed period of limitation to state explicitly the ground on which the bar is saved. He has not stated that. There is no issue about it and there is no evidence connecting Exhibit IV with the liability which the defendant was under to the plaintiff. For all these reasons, Exhibit IV cannot be regarded as saving limitation. As I already mentioned, the suit was brought more than three years after the last payment made by the plaintiff and as such it is barred by limitation. The decree of the Subordinate Judge must be reversed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 48—Priority—Gift by registered deed—Previous oral sale with knowledge of donee—Donee, whether can claim priority.

Plaintiff sued for possession by partition of half of a house, alleging that it had been given to her orally by her father-in-law as part of her dower. The defendants, the widow and daughters of the deceased father-in-law, pleaded a subsequent gift by registered deed of the entire house by him in favour of his wife, and contended that the oral transfer in favour of the plaintiff, even if proved, could not prevail. It appeared that the defendant widow was present at the nikah when the half share in dispute was given to the plaintiff:

Held, (1) that inasmuch as the oral transfer made in favour of the plaintiff was in consideration of a portion of her dower, it was a sale rather than a gift; [p. 246, col. 2.]

(2) that as the defendant widow had notice of the oral transfer previously made, it was not open to her to claim the benefit of the rule laid down in section 48 of the Registration Act. [p. 246, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 21st March 1918, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 1st January 1918, decreeing the claim.

JUDGMENT.—One Ghulam Hussain was married to Musammat Rahmat Nur. He had a son Nazar Hussain and two daughters Sardar Begam and Shahjehan Begam. His mother's name was Murad Begam. While yet his son Nazar Hussain was a minor, Ghulam Hussain got him married to Yakub Jan who too was a minor. This lady Yakub Jan has filed the present suit on the allegation that at the time of the marriage Ghulam Hussain gave her half of the house in dispute with Rs. 100 as part of her dower, that she came and occupied a portion of the house and lived in it for some time, that on the death of Ghulam Hussain unpleasantness having arisen between the members of the family who resided in the house, the plaintiff locked up the portion of the house occupied by her and left it and took residence with her husband in another house, that recently Musammat Rahmat Nur broke open the lock and took possession of the portion of the house in which the plaintiff used to live. She claimed possession over half of the house by partition. Ghulam Hussain's mother Murad Begam, Musammat Rahmat Nur and the two daughters of Ghulam Hussain, the father-in-law of the plaintiff, were made defendants to the suit. Nazar Hussain admitted the claim of the plaintiff. Rahmat Nur principally contested the claim and two main pleas were urged on her behalf, namely, (1) that the story of the transfer of the house in favour of the plaintiff as part of her dower was untrue and (2) that inasmuch as the transfer was made only orally and not by a registered deed, it could not prevail as against the deed of gift of the entire house made in her favour by Ghulam Hussain on the 13th July 1915, as it was a registered document and to be preferred under section 48 of the Registration Act. After the nikah (marriage ceremony) an entry relating to the marriage and to the giving of the house as part of the dower was made in the register of marriages. As regards this also a plea was put forward in defence in the alternative that as this entry was unregistered, it was inadmissible in evidence and the fact of the transfer could not be proved.

The Court of first instance framed two issues, namely, whether Ghulam Hussain deceased did give half share of the house in suit to the plaintiff in part payment of her dower, (2) if so, what was the effect of the deed of gift, dated the 13th July 1915, on the plaintiff's right.

On a consideration of the evidence on the record, the Court of first instance came to the conclusion that the transfer relied upon by the plaintiff was established. As regards the question of the want of registration of the entry in the marriage register, that Court held that the transfer which was relied upon was an oral one and the entry in the register was simply a memorandum of the arrangement or contract that had been effected between the parties. It, therefore, held that no registration was necessary. On the second issue it came to the conclusion that at the time Ghulam

Hussain executed the deed of gift on the 13th July 1915 in favour of Musammat Rahmat Nur, he was living under her influence and complete control and was ill. Therefore, the document was of no avail as it was not executed with the free will of the executant. In the alternative the Court also held that even if the executant was free and had willingly executed the deed relating to the entire house in favour of Rahmat Nur, he had no power or right to execute this deed of gift affecting the half share which had already been transferred to the plaintiff. Upon this finding the Court of first instance decreed the claim of the plaintiff. Musammat Rahmat Nur, Murad Begam, and the two daughters of Ghulam Hussain, namely, Sardar Begam and Shahjahan Begam preferred an appeal to the lower Appellate Court.

As regards the question of the transfer of half the house to the plaintiff in part payment of her dower, the lower Appellate Court agreed with the decision of the Court of first instance. It also agreed with the first Court as to the finding that the entry in the marriage register did not require registration, inasmuch as it only amounted to a memorandum of an oral agreement or contract.

As regards the question whether Ghulam Hussain was under the influence and control of Musammat Rahmat Nur the learned Judge came to a different conclusion. He held that the evidence on the record did not justify a finding that any kind of control or influence had been exercised by Rahmat Nur on Ghulam Hussain. As regards the effect of the deed of gift of the 13th July 1915 in favour of Rahmat Nur, he was of opinion that having regard to the provisions of section 48 the registered deed of gift was preferable to the oral transfer made in favour of the plaintiff. The learned Judge of the Court below treated the oral transfer in favour of the plaintiff as a transaction amounting to gift and held that as it was not followed by possession, it could not take effect as against the registered deed in favour of Rahmat Nur.

Taking this view the lower Appellate Court set aside the decree and judgment of the Court of first instance and dismissed the suit of the plaintiff. She has come up in second appeal to this Court,

The first question that has been argued before me by the learned Counsel for the appellant is that as found by the lower Appellate Court itself the plaintiff did get into possession after her marriage and that in any case she being a minor, the possession of Ghulam Hussain under whose guardianship she was living in the house must be looked upon as the possession of the minor. In my opinion there is force in this argument, but I need not base my judgment upon this ground alone. In my opinion the oral transfer made in favour of the plaintiff of half the house was in consideration of a portion of her dower. In other words, the transfer was made for consideration. Such a transfer more appropriately comes under the definition of a sale than that of a gift. The learned Judge of the Court below has relied upon the provisions of section 48 of the Registration Act in holding that the deed of gift in favour of Musammat Rahmat Nur was to be preferred and that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed as against her. There is evidence in this case, and it has not been denied, that Musammat Rahmat Nur was present at the nikah when this half share was given to the plaintiff as part of her dower by her father-in-law Ghulam Hussain. The Court of first instance found clearly that the transfer in favour of the plaintiff was made with the knowledge of defendant No. 1, namely, Musammat Rahmat Nur. This finding is justified by the evidence on the record. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court, while applying the provisions of section 48 of the Registration Act, lost sight of the fact that as Musammat Rahmat Nur had had notice of the oral transfer, it was not open to her to claim the benefit of the rule laid down in section 48. There is authority for this proposition in reported cases, for example, see Punjab Law Reporter of 1916, (same case 29 Indian Cases page 305) [Hardit Singh v. Behari Lal (1)]. In my opinion the decree passed by the Court of first instance was a right decree. I set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore those of the first Court with costs in all Courts.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Appellants.—The appellants, defendants, are entitled to the compensation money They have been paying a uniform rate of rent from generation to generation, at least from 1866. There is also the circumstance that the cultivators have been in continuous occupation. Also there have been instances of alienation by cultivators, and in one case a mortgage document was written by the hukdar's kariasthan.

The tenants had judgments in their favour supporting their claim to occupancy rights.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Respondents.—The rate of rent cannot be said to be nominal. In 1868 only the commutation from waram was made. Payment of Rs. 2-7 0 per acre of nanja after deducting kist is not low. There has not been continuous possession from generation to generation, or such long possession as will tend to an inference in favour of the rights. The majority of the cultivators agreed to hold their lands as tenants at-will. The judgments relied on are not available to them as res judicata, as the tenants have offered no proof that they derived their title under the tenants in those suits. Lastly the onus is heavily on the appellants, who are cultivators under ryotwari patta-holders to show that they have acquired occupancy rights, and they have not discharged it.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—The question is whether the compensation awarded under the Land Acquisition Act for certain lands in a village in Tinnevelly should be apportioned between the Pattadar, a registered holder, which in this case is a temple, and the Ryots under it on the basis that the Ryots have occupancy rights in the lands, a claim which the District Judge has rejected.

The fifth report speaks of a practice in Tinnevelly under which land, which had been under cultivation by the Mirasidars or hereditary owners and had afterwards been left uncultivated by them, was cultivated by others who paid them 13 per cent. of the produce as Swami Bogam and divided the rest between the Government and themselves. There was a somewhat similar usage in Chingleput. Mr. Venkatarama Sastri for the respondent in this case says that it has not been proved that these lands were cultivated by the tenants in this way. All that we know is that in 1817 a pious founder acquired at a revenue sale a five-sixths interest in the lands in this village, and that he acquired the remaining one-sixth under Exhibit JJ. Exhibit JJ. is a sale of the one-sixth share of the land and does not refer to the existence of any persons on the land in the enjoyment of occupancy right. As regards the remaining five-sixths also, the presumption would appear to be that at the revenue sale what was purchased was the land. It may be that some, at any rate, of the predecessors of these tenants were on the land at that date but of that there is no evidence. Exhibit CO/1835 is an order of the Board of Revenue to the Collector to resume the villages owing to diversion of the revenues to private purposes. It probably meant that the Collector was to manage under Regulation VII of 1817. Exhibit DD of 1842 ordered the villages to be banded over to the founder's son, who is to make arrangements to "manage the cultivation" and other business. Mr. Venkatarama Sastri relies strongly on this expression as negativing the existence of hereditary cultivators and showing that the trustee on behalf of the temple had the right to cultivate the land himself. If so, this would be against the claim to occupancy right. Exhibit FF is a Cadjan Muchilika executed by the tenants in 1856, in which they acknowledge they have received an Adaolai or lease from the temple. If they do not observe its terms they are to be liable to eviction. They are to wait on the trustee every three years and to receive an Adaolai like the one that had been granted to them, and in default were to abide his pleasure. This document does not seem to be conclusive either way, and was found not to have been proved by Mr. Goldie, the District Judge, in the appeal referred to below. Exhibit GG of October 1857 and the following documents show that there was a dispute as to the proper entries to be made in the village accounts. Till 1856, the Patta had been in the name of the temple and the names of the cultivators had been shown as in actual enjoyment but apparently without reference to separate plots. As he considered the cultivators had only the right of cultivation, the Karnam in the new accounts had not entered their names. The trustee was anxious that his name should be entered, but the Collector's Assistant thought it better that he should be shown as being in enjoyment as Hukdar. Exhibit GG 1, the register of personal complaints of 17th January 1859, shows that in that year the cultivators complained that "though the village had all along belonged only to the Ryots." it had been registered in the name of the trustee. The order refused to cancel the right of the Hukdar in the Patta or to register them as in enjoyment and referred them to a civil suit. Exhibit HH is a Razinamah setting forth a complaint made by the Hukdar's lessee against the Ryots which was settled in the lessee's favour Exhibit 2, dated 12th October 1859, shows that the Hukdar filed a revenue suit against the tenants to enforce the acceptance of Adaolais, which was dismissed by the acting Collector for default. At the same time he passed an order with reference to the Ryots' claim to be entered as in enjoyment. They had admitted that the lands were the property of the Pagoda, but objected to the entry of the Hukdar as in enjoyment. The Collector observed that the entry of his name in the column of remarks tended to create disputes and mislead the authorities to the possible prejudice of the Royts' rights in the soil. He accordingly directed the trustee's name to be struck out and the names of the Ryots entered. For arrears of revenue the Ryots' crops were not to be liable but the land. This order was apparently confirmed by the Collector, and thereupon the Hukdar filed Original Suit No. 28 of 1859 in the Tinnevelly Munsif's Court. The plaint Exhibit A alleges in paragraph 4 that prior to 1856 the Hukdar had been in the habit of leasing the village to defendants Nos. 2, 5, 18, 43 and 46 who were cultivators in the village, and that these lessees let out the land to the other defendants for cultivation and cultivated it. It was very common for the landlord to arrange with a few leading villagers for the cultivation of the village and leave them to make their own arrangements with the other villagers and as pointed out in Chidambara Pillai v. Thiruvengadathiengar (1) this, if established, would negative the existence of occupancy right. The plaint also relied on Exhibit FF in the present suit, the Muchilika executed on 25th November 1856 by 33 defendants said to be the leading villagers, and alleged that the 7th defendant had refused to execute the Muchilika and induced the other tenants not to pay their rents. Several of the defendants asserted that the lands had been reclaimed by them, and alleged that the temple was only entitled to the Swami Bogam. 71 defendants admitted the plaintiff's claim. The principal Munsif gave a judgment for the plaintiff. The District Judge confirmed the decrees as regards the 71 who had admitted the plaintiff's claim, but reversed it for misjoinder as regards the other defendants. Exhibit A4 of 12th June 1861. Eighty-eight of the other defendants then compromised the case in the District Court, Exhibits B to B4 series, to avoid the expense of suits on the terms of accepting the decree of the Munsif's Court directing them to surrender possession. Twenty-eight defendants held out and after decrees had been passed against them by the Munsif succeeded in getting those decrees reversed by the District Court in Appeal Suit No. 110 of 1864, Exhibit V dated 2nd February 1865, and the connected suits, which were confirmed on second appeal by the High Court. The District Judge in Exhibit V gave reasons for not accepting the genuineness of Exhibit FF already referred to, and stated that the plaintiff's own witnesses admitted that the defendant had been in possession of the lands in suit for nearly 20 years and of the house for over 30 years, and considering the defendant had proved that the disputed lands had been in his and his family's undisturbed possession for a very long period and that his tenancy was a permanent tenancy dismissed the plaintiff's suit in ejectment. It had been previously ruled by Scotland and Holloway, JJ., in Alagaiya Tiruchittambala v. Saminada Pillai (2) that the question whether ryots under the Mirasidar have a title to the permanent occupancy of land subject to the payment of the Mirasidar's share for the most part depended on established usage and custom, which had to be proved. The High Court in the second appeals apparently accepted the findings of the District Judge that it had been proved in this case. We next come to Original Suit No. 31 of 1884 on the file of the Subordinate Court of Tinnevelly, another suit for ejectment and other similar suits. In his judgment H2 dated 17th December 1885, the Subordinate Judge gave judgment for the plaintiff on the ground that the defendant's father had admitted the plaintiff's right in the suit of 1859.

Exhibit T, dated 21st July 1886, is judgment in Original Suit No. 42 of 1884, a suit to fix the rent payable by plaintiff to defendant on account of defendant's refusal to receive rent at a rate alleged to have been fixed by his father in 1867 in one of the areas in which permanent tenure had been established in the litigation already mentioned. In Exhibit V (c) in Original Suit No. 9 of 1901 in the District Munsif's Court of Srivaikuntam, a suit by the Hukdar for ejectment, it was found by the District Munsif that the tenants were not entitled to occupancy rights by virtue of the decision in the previous suit but that their right of occupancy was established independently. In Exhibit VII (c), Original Suit No. 23 of 1905 in the District Munsif's Court, a suit for ejectment was allowed to be withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit.

In Original Suit No. 637 of 1906 in the District Munsif's Court, another suit for ejectment, it was held to be res judicata as regards the particular land that there was no occupancy right.

The trustee also relies on NN series which he took in 1884.

The appellants rely on numerous transfers since 1884, sales both private and in execution and mortgages of their interests by tenants. The District Judge has held that these were not brought to the knowledge of the plaintiff. If the transfers were genuine, the plaintiff must have received the rents from the transferees, and I think the appellants are entitled to contend that his failure to produce his accounts raises an inference against him in this respect.

Now as to the presumption to be applied to the case, the reason that the Courts, even before the passing of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, raised a presumption of occupancy right in favour of raiyats holding under a permanently settled Zemindar, and not in favour of raiyats holding under a Ryotwari Pattadar, was, that there was no presumption in the case of the permanently settled Zemindar that he was the owner of the land except as assignee of the Government interest therein, whereas the scheme of the temporary Ryotwari settlements was to settle the revenue with the owner of the land himself. In neither case, it is well established, was there any intention to interfere with the legal relationship that might exist between the person with whom the revenue settlement was made and those holding under him. The presumption being that the Ryotwari Pattadar was the owner of the land, the Courts have proceeded on the view that the burden is on his tenants claiming a permanent right of occupancy to prove it. I have recently dealt in Muna Muhammad

(2) 1 M. H. C.R. 264.

Rowther v. Muthu Alagappa Chettiar (3) with the Tanjore temple cases in which this was laid down, and followed the ruling in Chidambara Pillai v. Thiruvengadathiengar (1) which has been approved in subsequent cases. Those Tanjore cases had a special history and facts in common which differentiate them from cases such as the present, and led, except in one case, to the rejection of the claim to occupancy right. All that was laid down generally in Chidambara Pillai v. Thiruvengadathiengar (1) and cases which followed it was that the onus was on the tenant and that mere length of enjoyment in the capacity of tenants or Purakudies, irrespective of other circumstances, did not raise a presumption of occupancy right. The qualification is important, because it shows that the inference as to occupancy right is to depend on a consideration of the whole circumstances of the case and among those circumstances are the continuance of the lands in the same hands at unenhanced rents, especially if they are low, the recognition of the tenant's right to transfer his holding, etc., as pointed out by the Privy Council in Ram Chunder Dutt v. Jugesh Chunder Dutt (4), Naba Kumari Debi v. Behari Lal Sen (5), Upendra Krishna Mandal v. Ismail Khan Mahomed (6) and Nilratan Mandal v. Ismail Khan Mahomed (7). The same thing was laid down in Peria Karuppan v. Annasawmi Ayer (8) and Venkatachala Goundan v. Rangaratnam Aiyar (9). These are facts which it is for the tenant to establish.

The task of drawing the right inference in the present case is one of some difficulty, which is increased by the fact that the claim is in respect of compensation awarded for land taken from different holdings, as to which, owing to the facts set out above, the rights of the tenants may be different, and because the evidence does not enable us to trace the history of the respective holdings from which the acquisition was made in the dispute about the existence of occupancy right which has been going on with varying fortunes in the village for the last sixty years. The fifth report shows that in Tinnevelly before the settlement of the revenue at the beginning of last century there were Ryots holding with rights of occupancy under the Mirasidars. If that was the case in the suit village, I do not think that it matters that a five-sixths share in the village was purchased for the temple at a revenue sale, because even if the land was sold free of incumbrances, the presumption in the circumstances would be that the temple continued the tenancies on the old footing. There is, however, no evidence that this was the state of things in the suit village, and the order of 1843 Exhibit DD as to the temple arranging for the cultivation points the other way. The fact that twenty-eight Ryots established their occupancy rights in the litigation which began in 1859, though it does not make the issue res judicata as regards the lands now in suit, is entitled to considerable weight, but the reversing judgment of the District Judge, which was confirmed by the High Court without comment on second appeal apparently as a finding of fact, does not appear to me to give reasons which would now be regarded as sufficient to establish the claim to occupancy rights. On the other hand, we have the fact that the great majority of the tenants had given up their claim to occupancy rights at an earlier stage of the litigation.

As regards the rates of rent, the sharing or Waram system seems to have prevailed until 1867 as regards Nunja or wet land and to have been commuted at that time. It is not shown that the temple's share was less than that of ordinary owners, or that the Punja money rates were unduly low. As regards the evidence that the rents have not been raised since, and the evidence, which is all of it fairly recent, that the tenants have been freely allowed by the temple to transfer their holdings, I do not think that in the present case it can be treated as a recognition by the temple of the existence of occupancy rights, because it is clear that for the last sixty years the temple has been openly and notoriously contesting the existence of occupancy rights in the village in the numerous proceedings which I have mentioned above.

In these circumstances I have come to the conclusion that there are not sufficient reasons for differing on the main question from the conclusion on the evidence at which the learned District Judge has arrived and which has also been arrived at by my learned brother. In this and other respects I agree in the order proposed by him.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—These eleven appeals have been preferred against the judgments of the District Judge of Tinnevelly refusing compensation under the Land Acquisition Act to the appellants, and awarding it entirely to the respondents. The lands are situated in a village called Kachanavilai It is common ground that about the year 1817, five-sixths of the village was purchased at a revenue sale by one Vengu Mudalliar; and the other sixth at a private sale. The lands were dedicated as an endowment for the performance of a Kattalai in a temple. The respondents represent the founder of the Kattalai and claiming to be the sole trustees contended that the proprietary right in the lands belongs exclusively to the Kattalai.

The defendants, on the other hand, alleged that they and their ancestors have been in uninterrupted enjoyment of the lands paying the Sircar Kist either direct or through the Hukdar and paying the Hukdar a low and uniform rate of rent. They, therefore, claimed to have occupancy right in the lands. The District Judge held that the occupancy right was not established. Hence these appeals.

A brief narration of the previous litigation in connection with this village must be given in order to appreciate properly the arguments addressed to us on the present occasion. The Ryotwari Patta for the village stands in the name of the temple (vide MM series). As to when the first Patta was granted there is no reliable evidence. But we know from Exhibit DD, dated the 7th of September 1842, that the Collector ordered the Tahsildar to issue Patta to the temple. MM (1858-1859) is the earliest Patta that has been produced. A few years before MM the cultivators of the village executed a joint Muchilika in which they stipulated that they shall receive an Adaolai every three years in respect of the properties under their cultivation. There is a condition in it that if the cultivators failed to act properly, the Hukdar was entitled to resume the lands. This was on the 25th of November 1856. Then some correspondence passed as to whether the Hukdar's name should be entered in the Patta. The tenants apparently claimed even at this date that their names should be inserted as persons in occupation (vide GG series). In consequence of these disputes the Collector ordered that the name of Vengu Mudalliar should be struck out and that the cultivators' names should be entered instead (Exhibit II). This was on the 12th of October 1859. Thereupon Vengu Mudalliar brought a suit in the Court of the Sadar Amin, Tinnevelly, to eject the cultivators and to recover arrears of rent from them (vide Exhibit A dated the 17th of December 1859). The principal Sadar Amin gave a decree, as prayed for (Exhibit A4). It may be mentioned here that there was but one suit against all the cultivators, who numbered nearly 270. Seventy-one of them admitted the right of the plaintiff. A number of other defendants did not file any written statement. Sixty-five defendants alone contested the plaintiff's claim An appeal was preferred against the judgment of the Sadar Amin. Mr. Goldie, the then District Judge, without expressing any opinion on the merits held that the suit was bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action and reversed the Sadar Amin's decision (Exhibit V). Even after this reversal a large number of the defendants entered into a Razinamah with Vengu Mudalliar by which they acknowledged the title of the Hukdar to eject them and agreed that if they failed to obey the condition of the Razinamah, they shall be bound by the decree passed by the Sadar Amin on the merits. The one suit was split up into a number of suits and the Sadar Amin once again went into the merits of the case and came to the same conclusion as before. Against his decree 28 cultivators preferred appeals to Mr. Goldie. He held that as the cultivators had been in possession for 20 or 30 years they were entitled to occupancy rights. The special appeals preferred to the High Court were summarily dismissed. It is apparent from what I have stated that 28 of the defendants who were originally impleaded in the suit established their rights in the High Court. Exhibits D, E, F, G to S show that proceedings in ejectment were taken against some of the other cultivators.

The next litigation was in the year 1884 (vide Exhibit T), in which the question regarding the proprietary rights in the soil was not considered. The question was about the rates of rent that should be paid to the Hukdar. Then comes Exhibit V (c), which was a suit instituted in the year 1901 in the District Munsif's Court, Srivaikuntam. About 11 cultivators contested the right of the Hukdar to eject them. The Munsif came to the conclusion that they had acquired occupancy right. It is not clear whether there was any appeal in these cases. Matters seemed to have gone on smoothly until the Government proclaimed in 1915 that they intended to acquire the lands in dispute for the Tiruchandur Railway. As a consequence of this notification the cultivators have preferred claims to a share in the compensation on the ground that they have occupancy rights in the land.

Four of these appeals may be disposed of at once. They are Appeals Nos. 241, 245, 248 and 249. The District Judge in the last paragraph of his judgment says that the lands in respect of which compensation was claimed in these four appeals were delivered over to the respondents' predecessor-in-title by virtue of proceedings in execution taken by him. Exhibit C shows that a large number of the cultivators were evicted from their holdings for failure to comply with the conditions of the Razinamah embodied in Exhibit B. The District Judge has stated that the appellants in those four appeals were among those against whom proceedings were thus taken. There was no ground of appeal disputing the correctness of the statement made by the District Judge. We are not prepared to allow that question now to be re-opened We must, therefore, hold that the proceedings taken under Exhibit C are binding upon the appellants and that they are estopped from claiming occupancy rights.

Now we have to deal with the seven appeals on the merits. Mr. Narasimha Aiyangar for the appellants contended that the facts established in evidence are sufficient to warrant the conclusion that his clients have occupancy right in the lands. The first circumstance relied on for this purpose is the payment of a uniform rate of rent. It is clear from a reference to Exhibit T (1) that the present rate was fixed in 1866. We may, therefore, take it that for 47 years the same rate was continuously paid to the Hukdar. I do not accept the learned Vakil's contention that it was only a nominal rent that was paid. It was in the year 1868 that commutation from Waram was made regarding the rate of rent. The sum of Rs. 2 7 0 per acre of Nanja paid to the landlord after deducting the Sircar Kist cannot be regarded as a low rate. The next circumstance relied on was continuity of possession. There is evidence on the side of the Hukdar, which is to some extent specific, showing that the cultivators were changed from time to time. The District Judge has expressed no opinion upon this evidence, and I do not desire to base my judgment upon that deposition. But having regard to the usual mamool in this country of not changing a cultivator unless it be under very exceptional circumstances, I am not prepared to attach much weight to this contention. In the southern parts of this Presidency instances can be cited of persons cultivating the same land for generations. This is largely due to the feeling on the part of the proprietor that it is a sin to turn a cultivator out of the field which he has ploughed and enriched, and to the feeling and veneration which the latter entertains for his master. I am averse to basing any conclusion regarding rights in the soil upon continuous possession, even granting that the contention of the appellant is well founded. I must also point out that no attempt has been made in the Court below by the cultivators to prove that they, their fathers and their grandfathers have been continuously in occupation of the same land for any length of time. The next circumstance relied on was that the cultivators have been alienating the lands as if they were the owners thereof. The District Judge points out that it has not been shown that any of those alienations were made to the knowledge of the Hukdar. Mr Narasimha Aiyangar has drawn our attention to one single instance in which the Hukdar's Kariasthan is said to have written the deed of mortgage. This is not enough to bring home to the Hukdar the fact that the cultivators were dealing with the property as if they were the proprietors. Moreover, most of these transactions are of a very recent date, and I do not think they are of any consequence in determining the rights of the parties. There is no doubt of the fact that some of the tenants did succeed in obtaining a decision in their favour establishing their occupancy right.

In the present case no attempt has been made to show that any of the appellants derived title under these cultivators. Therefore, the plea of res judicata is not available to them. Nonetheless those judgments are evidence of the right now put forward. But their probative value is not much as the judgment of Mr. Goldie solely proceeded upon possession for 20 or 30 years, a fact which the Judicial Committee in Mayandi Chettiyar v. Chokkalingam Pillay (10) and the High Court in recent cases have held to be insufficient to prove occupancy right. On the other side Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar referred us to the fact that a majority of the cultivators accepted the position of tenants-at-will by executing Muchilikas. He also referred us to certain compensation proceedings of 1868 in which the right of the Hukdar was accepted by the Government to the total exclusion of the cultivators. (See evidence of P. W. No. 8.)

Both the learned Vakils relied upon the use of the word "Swami Bogam" in support of their contentions. It is true that the expression denotes that the person receiving it is the owner and proprietor of the land. Wilson in his Glossary gives this as the correct rendering of the expression. On the other hand Mr. Hodgson seemed inclined to the view that the expression connoted that the cultivators had an interest in the land. (See Fifth Report, Volume III, page 346.)

(10) 27 M. 291 (P. C.); 8 C. W. N. 545; 31 I. A. 83; 14 M. L. J. 200; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 587.

To sum up, the facts in favour of the appellants are:—

(a) Payment of a uniform rate of rent for nearly 50 years;

(b) an alleged continuous occupation from father to son for the same period;

(c) alienation of the property in their possession without the knowledge or consent of the Hukdar during recent years;

(d) two judgments on two different occasions in their favour establishing occupancy right after contest.

The circumstances against their contentions are:—

(1) the majority of cultivators in the village have agreed to hold their lands as tenants at-will;

(2) in a previous land acquisition proceeding some of the tenants did not set up a right of occupancy; and

(3) they are cultivators under Ryotwari Patta holders.

I have held as regards (a) that the rent paid is not insignificant; as regards (b) I am not satisfied that there has been continuous occupation from father to son; as regards (c) no weight can be attached to it as the transactions were behind the back of the Hukdar; as regards (d) it cannot be disputed that the judgment of Mr. Goldie, if it comes up for consideration before the High Court to-day, will not be upheld on the grounds mentioned by him. As regards the judgment of the District Munsif he was largely influenced by the judgment of Mr. Goldie and had referred to a few other circumstances which do not advance the case of the tenants any further. The circumstances referred to as being against them detract very much from the value to be attached to the points established in their favour.

My decision would, therefore, largely depend upon the view I take as to onus of proof in this case. If I come to the conclusion that the burden is upon the cultivators to establish their right of occupancy, I shall have no hesitation to decide that they have failed to discharge it. If, on the other hand, I hold that it is for the Hukdar to show that he has the sole proprietary right, I would hesitate before holding that they have proved their case. Therefore, it becomes necessary to consider the question of the burden of proof.

In order to come to a proper conclusion on this point it is necessary to consider the nature of the right which a Ryotwari Pattadar has in the soil. Contemporaneous with the permanent settlement under Regulation XXV of 1802, the question was considered on what basis the remaining land should be settled. There were a number of conflicting views. Some Revenue Officials recommended the Mutta system, that is, a system by which a number of villages were intended to be granted to a single owner making him responsible for the Government assessment. Others were in favour of the village system, by which it was expected that each village would be handed over to the headman or some respectable person in the village who would parcel out the lands to the cultivators and would also be responsible to the Government for kist. And lastly, there were others who advocated the Ryotwari system by which it was intended that small holdings should be allotted to a large number of persons. Sir Thomas Munro was a strong advocate of the Ryotwari settlement. In the Ceded Districts to which he was appointed Principal Collector after the war with Tippu, he tried the experiment and succeeded beyond expectation in showing that both the Ryots and the Government were benefited by the Ryotwari system. Although the Government of the day recognised the success of the experiment in these districts, they were not prepared to give effect to it in the other districts. In a letter addressed to Sir George Barlow, the then Governor of Madras, by the Board of Revenue, the Board, while remarking that "under the Ryotwari settlement the officers of Government were supposed to settle and collect the rent from each farmer," pointed out that what was achieved by Colonel Munro in the Ceded Districts could not be expected of other officers in the other districts and that the system was fraught with danger to Government revenue. This letter was signed by Mr. Hodgson as a member of the Board of Revenue. Thereupon the Governor-in-Council accepted the recommendation of the Board, and ruled that the Ryotwari system should not be introduced in the other districts. Meanwhile Sir Thomas Munro went to England, and was invited to give evidence before a Select Committee of the House of Commons on the 15th of April 1812. He strongly advocated the Ryotwari settlement. This is what he said in his evidence:—"Every Ryot, who is likewise a cultivating proprietor of the land which he holds, is permitted to hold that land at a fixed assessment as long as he pleases; he holds it for ever without any additional assessment. If he occupies any waste or additional land, he pays the assessment that is fixed upon that land, and no more; his rent undergoes no alteration." Apparently his view prevailed, as we find that the Court of Directors agreed to introduce the Ryotwari settlement in Madras. On the 16th December 1812, the Court wrote:—"It remains for us to signify our directions that in all the provinces that may be unsettled when this despatch shall reach you, the principle of the Ryotwari system, as it is termed, shall be acted upon, and that where village rents upon any other principle shall have been established, the leases shall be declared to be terminable at the expiration of the period for which they may have been granted."

The next question that I propose to consider is, what was the nature of the right that was secured by the Ryotwari system. I have already referred to the evidence of Sir Thomas Munro before the Select Committee. In one of his minutes dated the 15th of August 1807 this is what he says about the Ryotwari system:—

"That it is better adapted to preserve simplicity of manner and good order, because every Ryot will, on his own estate, be at once proprietor, farmer and labourer; because the division of property by engaging men in labour for their maintenance is favourable to quiet". Baden Powell in his Land System of British India gives this definition of the Ryotwari system:—"A system of land revenue administration in which there is no middleman or landlord over the individual Ryots who are severally liable for the land revenue assessment on the holding".

Again, quoting from the Settlement Manual for Madras he describes the Ryotwari system thus, Volume III, page 130:—"Under the Ryotwari system every registered holder of land is recognised as its proprietor. He is at liberty to sublet his property or to transfer it by gift, sale or mortgage. He cannot be ejected by Government, so long as he pays the fixed assessment, and has the option of diminishing his holding or of entirely abandoning it. The Ryot under this system is virtually a proprietor on a simple and perfect title, and has all the benefits of a perfect lease without its responsibilities." It is clear from the extracts which I have quoted that the settlement by the Government under the Ryotwari system was with the actual cultivator of the soil, whereas in settlements under Regulation XXV of 1802, the proprietor had only the right to receive rent from persons who were in occupation of the lands. Of course there are cases under the Ryotwari system in which certain classes of the community who are not in the habit of tilling the soil have been given a Ryotwari Patta. But in such cases a Pattadar is the undoubted proprietorof the land with liberty to get it cultivated by leasing it to cultivators. This being the history of the system and the incidents of the system being what I have already described them to be, it seems to me that if a person claims to have acquired occupancy right under a Ryotwari holder, burden lies heavily upon him to establish it. One other aspect of the question will also lead to the same conclusion. Under Madras Act II of 1894 the land for which the Patta is given is held liable for the payment of revenue. If the Patta-holder makes default in paying the revenue, the holding can be sold irrespective of the fact that cultivators are on the soil for generations together. There can be no question that the rights of these cultivators would be swept away by the sale for arrears of revenue. This is an indication that the Legislature and the Government of the country do not recognise a permanent occupancy right in the soil under a Ryotwari Pattadar.

It is not easy to say what would be the residue of interest that would be left to the Ryotwari Pattadar, if he has the Government above him who can sell the lands under the Patta straightaway for arrears and if he must recognise an occupancy Ryot under him whose interest in the soil must be very considerable. The conception is opposed to the recommendations of those who advocated the Ryotwari system. Virtually the occupancy Ryot in a Ryotwari village deprives the Pattadar of all rights save that of being the recipient of a permanent rent.

Before dealing with the cases which have been quoted at the Bar, I shall refer very briefly to the history of the Ryotwari settlement in the Tinnevelly District. Contemporaneous with Sir Thomas Munro in the Ceded Districts Mr. Hodgson was apparently the Collector of Tinnevelly. As I pointed out before, he was very much against the Ryotwari system. Sir Thomas Munro had induced the Court of Directors to accept his view in preference to the view of the Board of Revenue; subsequently when he was appointed to the Governorship of the Presidency, he directed that the Ryotwari system should be introduced in all the Districts. So far as Tinnevelly was concerned, we are told attempts were made to introduce this system from 1827 onwards. By the year 1834 it was introduced in a number of villages (vide the Tinnevelly Gazetteer). But apparently no further progress was made for sometime. It was in the year 1861 when Mr. Puchle was the Collector, the Government of the day decided that the district should be surveyed and that the Ryotwari tenure should be introduced at once. From the fact that in 1842 a Ryotwari Patta was given to the temple, we may take it that this was one of the villages upon which the principle was experimented between the years 1827 and 1834. In all probability the predecessors-in-title of Vengu Mudalliar were themselves cultivators of the lands when they were sold to the temple. There is nothing in the history of the system as applied to the Tinnevelly District to lead to the conclusion that, prior to the acquisition of the property by the temple, the present cultivators had acquired any interest in the lands. That being in short the position of the Ryotwari Pattadar in the district, it seems to me that no special considerations arise in dealing with the lands situated in Tinnevelly different from those which would apply to lands in Tanjore or Trichinopoly. At any rate there is nothing on the record in this case to lead me to hold that the Tinnevelly cultivator should be treated differently from the cultivator in the other districts of the southern part of the Presidency.

The facts referred to above establish at least this much, that at the time when five-sixths of the lands were sold for arrears of Revenue to Vengu Mudalliar the interest of the cultivators, if any, ceased to exist. Consequently it is clear that they had no subsisting rights when the Mudalliar acquired the property for the temple. Secondly, when the Collector in 1842 directed that Ryotwari Patta should be granted to the Hukdar, he must have had before him the instructions of the Madras Government contained in the Settlement Manual and in the minutes of Sir Thomas Munro. The inference is that at this time persons who were cultivating the soil had no occupancy right in it. It follows from the above two conclusions that the present cultivators must have been let into possession either by Vengu Mudalliar or by his descendants. Mr. Goldie in the judgment already referred to speaks of 20 or 30 years' possession in 1864. This lends support to my view that the appellants' predecessors probably came in as cultivators after the issue of the Ryotwari Patta to the Hukdars of the temple. Their occupation was not immemorial as was suggested in the course of the arguments in these appeals.

Now I proceed to consider the decisions that have been quoted. Most of these decisions have been reviewed fully in the judgment which the learned Chief Justice delivered in Muna Muhammad Rowther v. Muthu Alagappa Chettiar (3). Therefore, I shall not attempt to deal with every one of them. A few of them, however, require consideration in the light of the history of the Ryotwari settlement which I have sketched above. Krishnasami Pillai v. Varadaraju Ayyangar (11) was a decision of the Full Bench and in view of the fact that Mr. Justice Muthuswami Aiyar who took part in Chidambara Pillai v. Thiruvengadathiengar (1) was also a party to this decision, it should be considered with some care. Sir Charles Turner, with whose judgment Mr. Justice Muthuswami Aiyar concurred, says at page 357:—"Without attempting to define what period of occupation should confer a right of occupancy—a matter which can be only dealt with by the Legislature—we consider ourselves at liberty to say that an occupation for upwards of seventy years is sufficient, under the circumstances of this case, to throw upon those who seek to disturb it the burden of showing that the tenancy was not accompanied with a right of occupancy and that the plaintiff has not succeeded in doing so." This passage shows that the learned Chief Justice laid the burden in the first instance upon persons who asserted the right of occupancy, but that, in his opinion, the facts proved in that case shifted the burden on to the Pattadar. In the judgment of Mr. Justice Kindersley the facts are fully set out and I find that there was a previous litigation in which the right of the tenants to remain on the lands so long as they paid rent regularly was upheld. The learned Chief Justice refers to a number of documents which, according to the evidence, constitute an engagement not to eject the tenants from their holdings. It is true that there are observations in the judgment tending to show that a cultivating Ryot is entitled to some interest in the soil. In page 357 reference is made to the custom of the country and of the district. No such custom has been sought to be established in this case and I, therefore, do not think that this decision, which proceeded upon the special features of that case and which did not in the first instance throw the burden upon the proprietor, is an authority for the proposition contended for by Mr. Narasimha Aiyangar. That this is the correct interpretation of the decision is clear from a reference to Chidambara Pillai v. Thiruvengadathiengar (1), to which Mr. Justice Muthuswami Aiyar was a party. In that case the law is laid down in these terms:—"The claim of an occupancy right as overriding the proprietor's right to cultivate his own land is of a special character, and as such it is one which the party, seeking to derogate from the ordinary incidents of property is bound to establish"....."Mere length of enjoyment in the capacity of tenants or Purakudies irrespective of other circumstances is not prima facie proof of occupancy right." I have shown already what the incidents of a Ryotwari tenure are, and the judgment in Chidambara Pillai v. Thiruvengadathiengar (1) entirely supports the view I have taken. When we remember that Muthuswami Aiyar, J., was first a Deputy Collector, and afterwards an Inam Commissioner, the value of his pronouncement acquires very great weight. This view of the burden of proof was accepted unreservedly by Shephared and Subramania Ayyar, JJ., in (11) 5 M. 345 (F. B.); 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 240.

Cheekati Zamindar v. Ranasooru Dhora (12). In Rangasami Reddi v. Gnana Sammantha Pandara Sannadhi (13) Mr. Justice Subramania Aiyar and Mr. Justice Moore acted on that view. Mr. Justice Moore quotes the passage which I have already cited and accepts it as good law. Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier in Naina Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (14) have examined the case-law very fully and have accepted the conclusions stated in Chidambara Pillai v. Thiruvengadathiengar (1). We have a very full discussion by the learned Chief Justice and Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Muna Muhammad Rowther v. Muthu Alagappa Chettiar (3), wherein the principle enunciated in Chidambara Pillai v. Thiruvengadathiengar (1) is accepted and restated. As against these decisions Mr Narasimha Aiyangar quoted Peria Karuppan v. Annasawmi Iyer (8), Venkatachala Goundan v. Rangaratnam Aiyar (9) and Chandrasekharaswami v. Nainar Ammal (15). As regards Peria Karuppan v. Annasawmi Iyer (8) it is enough to say that the proposition therein laid down is not disputed by those who allege that the burden of proof is upon the person claiming occupancy right. What the learned Judges say is that it should not be laid down that in all cases of Ryotwari lands a cultivating tenant cannot have a right of occupancy in the lands. This contention is not advanced now. It is no doubt an anomalous position. But it is easy to conceive of a grant of occupancy right which is only in other words a permanent lease by a Ryotwari holder in favour of a cultivator. Such leases are very common in South Kanara. It is also imaginable that the limited right of holding the land on payment of a fixed rate of rent with the incidents of occupancy right may be acquired by a cultivator. Therefore it is not necessary to say that under no circumstances can an occupancy right be acquired against the Ryotwari proprietor. Therefore the proposition which is stated in Peria Karuppan v. Annasawmi Iyer (8) seems to be unexceptional as far as it goes. It is in Venkatachala Goundan v. Rangaratnam Aiyar (9) that a further extension seems to have been attempted. In this latter case the learned Judges, quoting without disapproval the dictum of Muthuswami Aiyar, J., in Chidambara Pillai v. Thiruvengadathiengar (1) and also the statement of law contained in Rangasami Reddi v. Gnana Sammantha Pandara Sannadhi (13) and Cheekati Zamindar v. Ranasooru Dhora (12), say:— "There is nothing in the observations above cited to warrant the opinion that in the case of every Ryotwari village there is necessarily a presumption that a Ryot holding under a Mirasidar has no occupancy right." If the judgment stood there, no exception can be taken to it. But almost towards the end, the learned Judges seem inclined to hold that the burden is upon the proprietor to show that a cultivator who has been long on the land has not acquired a right of occupancy. It seems to me that this proposition is not warranted by the decisions which the learned Judges have quoted without dissent in the body of their judgment. I will not examine this case any further, as we were told that it is under appeal to the Privy Council. Now I come to the last case quoted before us, Chandrasekharaswami v. Nainar Ammal (15). There are two statements in it; one is that the second Appellate Court is bound by the findings of fact on the question of occupancy right at which the District Judge has arrived. If the judgment has been based upon that view of the functions of the second Appellate Court, no exception could be taken to the conclusion arrived at in this case. But the learned Judges also proceed to lay down the principles upon which the case should be decided. I cannot help observing that in the body of the judgment the use of the words tenant and landlord, which is the very fact to be established by the evidence, has to some extent clouded the issue to be decided. The expressions tenant and landlord have special meanings assigned to them in our legislative enactments. One feels, on reading the decision, as if the principle applicable to cases under the Estates Land Act had been unconsciously adopted in the disposal of the case. No doubt Chandrasekharaswami v. Nainar Ammal (15) is based upon Peria Karuppan v Annasawmi Iyer (8) and KELU NAMBIR v. CHATHU NAMBIAR.

Venkatachala Goundan v. Rangaratnam Aiyar (9). I have stated my opinion about these two decisions. With all respect, I am not prepared to accept the principle as to onus enunciated in Chandrasekharaswami v. Nainar Ammal (15). I prefer to follow the view taken by Collins, C. J., Muthuswami Aiyar, J., Shephard, J., Subramania Aiyar, J., Sadasiva Aiyar J., Napier, J., as well as, by the learned Chief Justice. In my opinion the burden is upon the cultivators to show that they have got an occupancy right in these Ryotwari lands which have been taken up by Government under the Land Acquisition Act and the evidence they have let in is not sufficient to discharge that burden. I, therefore, agree with the District Judge that they are not entitled to compensation on the footing of being occupancy tenants. At the same time I think that in respect of their interest in the land as tenants from year to year, they are entitled to have their share of the compensation apportioned and we fix it at one anna in the rupee. Subject to this modification, we dismiss the appeals with costs. The Vakil's fee will be Rs. 352 in all the appeals together.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 908 OF 1917.

September 11, 1918.

Present :—Justice Sir William Ayling, KT., and Mr. Justice Krishnan.

MEETHALA VEETIL KAITHERI KELU NAMBIAR—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

NARIKOTT PARAMBATH KAITHERI CHATHU NAMBIAR AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 AND 2—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Dismissal of suit—Finding in favour of plaintiff, whether res judicata—'Matter substantially in issue,' 'final decision,' meanings of—Res judicata between co-defendants.

A decision on a question in an appealable suit, when the decree is in favour of the party against whom that decision is given, is not a final decision within the meaning of section 11, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 260, col. 2.]

To constitute a finding on an issue res judicata in a later suit between the parties it is necessary, under section 11, Civil Procedure Code, that the matter should have been directly and substantially in issue between them and should also have been heard and finally decided. Where a finding has been arrived at on a matter which is not necessary for the disposal of the suit and it is not made the basis of the decree which is given in spite of it, that matter cannot be said to have been substantially in issue between the parties, it can only be said to have been incidentally in issue. Such findings are more in the nature of obiter dicta than of res judicata. Nor can the question be said to have been finally decided by such a finding. [p. 260, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a decree is given to a party in spite of a finding against him, that finding is not res judicata in subsequent litigation. [p. 260, col. 1.]

Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer, 11 C. 301 (P.C.) 12 I. A. 23; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 602; 9 Ind. Jur. 202; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 960, followed.

Muthaya Shetti v. Kanthappa Shetti, 45 Ind. Cas. 975; 7 L. W. 482; 34 M. L. J. 431; 23 M. L. T. 291; (1918) M. W. N. 334, explained.

For a matter to be in issue under section 11, Civil Procedure Code, it is not necessary that an express issue should be framed about it. It is enough if a decision about it is necessary for the decree. [p. 261, col. 2.]

As between co-defendants there must be an active controversy inter se before a finding can be treated as res judicata. [p. 262, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 239 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Tellicherry, in Original Suit No. 533 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The finding in Original Suit No. 3 of 1895 about the existence of Meethala Veetil Tavazhi is res judicata. See the judgment of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in Muthaya Shetti v. Kanthappa Shetti (1). It was necessary to find whether the Tavazhi did exist before its Karnavan could be removed. The finding is distinct and is the ultimate decision of a competent Court and it cannot be re-agitated in the present suit.

As to the effect of the decree in Original Suit No. 203 of 1893, as the Karnavan, the 1st defendant, was ex parte and as the question arose between the Tarwad and the Tavazhi as co defendants and as there was no active contest between the Karnavan of the Tarwad and the members of the Tavazhi, the finding on the question of the existence of the Tavazhi is not res judicata.

(1) 45 Ind. Cas. 975; 7 L. W. 482; 34 M. L. J. 431; 23 M. L. T. 291; (1918) M. W. N. 334.

There was also no separate issue on the question.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondents —The finding in Original Suit No. 3 of 1895 is not res judicata for in spite of that finding, the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. The finding was not necessary for the disposal of that suit. See the Privy Council ruling in Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (2). It was decided that there were no good grounds for removing the Karnavan and that was enough. The finding was also not embodied in the decree. The question is not finally decided by the finding. Ahmedbhoy v. Sir Dinshaw (3).

The finding in Original Suit No. 203 of 1893 is res judicata. The question of the existence of the Tavazhi was involved in the issue whether the plaintiff had a valid Melcharth right in the plaint Paramba. The Karnavan of the Tavazhi could alone grant a valid Melcharth. There was addition of parties on notice issued under the old section 30. All the members took an active part in the matter and the finding must be held to operate as res judicata.

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision in this case is one of res judicata.

By the suit from which the second appeal arises plaintiff, one Kelu Nambiar, sought to recover as Karnavan of one Meethala Veetil Tavazhi certain lands and arrears of rent from the tenant in possession, the 1st defendant. It was stated that this was a separate and distinct Tavazhi under the Mani Madathil Kaitheri Tarwad, having its own properties and its own Karnavan, and that the plaint lands were some of its properties. The tenant denied the existence of any such Tavazhi and pleaded that the lands belonged to the main Tarwad of which one Chathu Nambiar was the Karnavan and not the plaintiff, and that the latter was not entitled to sue; he also pleaded payment of rent to the Karnavan Chathu Nambiar. On these pleas Chathu Nambiar was added as the 2nd defendant; and he supported the 1st defendant's contentions.

The first issue in the case was "whether a Tavazhi called Meethala Veetil Tavazhi existed with separate properties and management."

As, however, both the plaintiff and the 2nd defendant claimed that this question was res judicata by reason of previous decisions between the parties, two further issues were framed, viz., "whether the plaintiff was estopped from setting up the Meethala Veetil Tavazhi by reason of the decrees in Original Suits Nos. 38 of 1890 and 203 of 1893 of the Courts of the District Munsifs of Nadapuram and Panur respectively and their appeals" and "whether the main Tarwad of which the 2nd defendant was the Karnavan was estopped from denying the existence of the Meethala Veetil Tavazhi by reason of the decrees in Original Suit No. 168 of 1893 of that Court (Court of the Principal District Munsif of Tellicherry) and of Original Suit No. 3 of 1895 on the file of the Sub-Court, North Malabar."

On these issues both the lower Courts have agreed that the decree in Original Suit No. 168 of 1893 was of no value on the question of res judicata and the point has not been re-agitated before us. But they have differed in their opinions as regards the effect of the other judgments; and both the plaintiff-appellant and the defendants-respondents have contended before us that the judgments in his or their own favour constitute res judicata whereas the judgments against him or them do not. We have, therefore, to examine each of those judgments separately to see its effect on the question at issue.

Before doing so it may be observed that the question as to res judicata has to be considered as between the Tavazhi and the Tarwad and not as between the plaintiff and the 2nd defendant personally, as they are parties to this suit in their representative capacities as Karnavans. Taking the judgment in Original Suit No. 3 of 1895, Exhibit L, first, which is relied on by the plaintiff as settling that the Meethala Veetil Tavazhi does exist, it will be seen that the suit in which that judgment was given was one brought by one Sankaran Nambiar, a junior member of the family, to remove one Ambu Nambiar from Karnavanship for alleged misconduct and for recovering from the Tarwad certain properties said to have been improperly alienated by him. Permission was asked for under section 30 of the old Code of Civil Procedure to sue on behalf of the Tarwad and on the publication of the notice required by the section a large number of the members of the Tarwad had joined as defendants. Plaintiff had asserted in the plaint that Ambu Nambiar was the Karnavan of the Meethala Veetil Tavazhi also and had asked him to be removed from that position as well. Ambu Nambiar as well as several other defendants had, among other pleas, denied the existence of such a Tavazhi and an issue was framed as to "whether there was in fact an independent branch called Meethala Veedu subordinate to the Meethil Tarwad." The finding on this issue was, no doubt, in plaintiff's favour that such a Tavazhi did exist. But in spite of that finding the suit, so far as it prayed for the removal of the Karnavan, was dismissed and Ambu Nambiar was not removed from the Karnavanship of either the Tarwad or the Tavazhi. Nor was the finding embodied in the decree. The finding was not necessary for the disposal of the suit, and we agree with the District Judge that it cannot be held to have the force of res judicata against the Tarwad. It has been settled by the ruling of the Privy Council in Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (2) that where a decree is given to the party in spite of a finding against him, that finding is not res judicata in subsequent litigation. This view has been consistently followed since, see Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (4), Parbatti Debya v. Mathura Nath Banerjee (5), Ahmedbhoy v. Sir Dinshaw (3), Venkatasuryanarayana v. Shiva Sankara Narayana (6) and Mittar Poddar v. Jadab Chandra (7).

To constitute the finding on an issue res judicata in a later suit between the parties it is necessary under section 11 of the Code that the matter should have been directly and substantially in issue between them and should also have been heard and finally decided. Where a finding has been arrived at on a matter which is not necessary for the disposal of the suit and it is not made the basis of the decree which is given in spite of it, that matter cannot be said to have been substantially in issue between the parties; it can only be said to have been incidentally in issue. Such findings are more in the nature of obiter dicta than of res judicata. Nor can the question be said to have been finally decided by such a finding. As observed by Beaman, J., in Ahmedbhoy v. Sir Dinshaw (3) above cited, "a decision upon any question that does not open the door to the parties aggrieved to carry it to the next Court (in appeal) is not in any sense a final decision, unless the Court which has decided it is itself the Court of final jurisdiction for that suit." Otherwise, as pointed out by the learned Judge, it would lie with his adversary to decide whether a finding against a party when the decree is in his favour should remain res judicata against him or not; for if he, the adversary, appealed, as he could do, the finality would be gone. We must, therefore, hold that a decision on a question in an appealable suit, when the decree is in favour of the party against whom that decision is given, is not a final decision. Explanation II which has been newly added to section 11 of the present Code, Act V of 1908, does not affect this question, as it deals only with the competency of the Court and not with the finality of its decision. That explanation was added to put an end to the controversy whether a finding arrived at or a decree passed by a Court in a suit is or is not res judicata in the same Court in a subsequent suit, when the decree in the first suit is not appealable to the same tribunal as that in the second suit. That happens, for example, in the Subordinate Judge's Court when the first suit is below Rs. 5,000 in value and the second suit is above that value.

The learned Vakil for the appellant relied on the judgment of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in Muthaya Shetti v. Kanthappa Shetti (1) and contended that this was a case which fell within the fourth class of cases referred to by the learned Judge and, therefore, the finding was res judicata. It seems to be very doubtful if there is such a fourth class of cases at all distinct from the first class; the cases which seem to fall in that class will probably, on careful examination, be found to fall in the first class. In the very case which the learned Judge had before him it would seem, with all respect to him, that on the facts stated in page 484* it was quite immaterial for the District Judge to decide if the alienation was a mortgage or a sale so long as it was valid against the plaintiff; for in the view taken by him the suit failed whether it was a mortgage or a sale. It has been pointed out to us that Bakewell, J., who sat with Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in that case did not adopt this classification, and we are not prepared to follow the learned Judge's view as to the fourth class of cases. Moreover, we think the present case falls in the first class. It is argued that it was necessary to decide in this case if a Tavazhi existed at all before deciding whether its Karnavan should be removed. It was not strictly necessary to do so, as in any event the suit failed as the Court found there were no grounds for his removal. In any view therefore the ruling in Muthaya Shetti v. Kanthappa Shetti (1) is no authority in the plaintiff's favour. The judgment in Original Suit No. 3 of 1895 cannot thus be held to render the first issue in this case res judicata.

Passing on to the decree in Original Suit No. 38 of 1890 we think the District Judge is wrong in holding that it operated as res judicata in favour of the Tarwad. It has not been relied on by the learned Counsel for the respondents. That was a suit brought by some junior members of the Tarwad for maintenance against Ambu Nambiar as the Karnavan of the Tarwad. The District Judge considers that Ambu Nambiar might and ought to have pleaded that some of the properties belonged to Meethala Veetil Tavazhi and their income should have been excluded from calculation in assessing the rate of maintenance and as Ambu Nambiar was the Karnavan of the Tavazhi according to the plaintiff's case and as he failed to set up the Tavazhi's claim, the Tavazhi should be taken as barred by res judicata, presumably under Explanation IV of section 11, Civil Procedure Code, from setting up its existence thereafter. This view cannot be supported. Ambu Nambiar was sued only as the Karnavan of the Tarwad and not as the Karnavan of the Tavazhi and as he was always strenuously denying the very existence of the Tavazhi, he could not be expected to raise any pleas in its favour and his failure to put forward any particular plea cannot be treated as concluding the Tavazhi as to it.

The last two judgments we have to deal with are those in Original Suit No. 203 of 1893 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Panoor and its appeal, Exhibits I and II. The suit was brought by one Chappari as the holder of a Melcharth granted by the Tarwad Karnavan, the same Ambu Nambiar, to redeem a Kanom and recover possession of a Paramba from the Kanomdar, the 2nd defendant. The Karnavan, the 1st defendant remained ex parte but the 2nd defendant, though he admitted the Kanom, pleaded that the property belonged to the Tavazhi of which Sankaran Nambiar was the Karnavan, and not to the Tarwad and the Melcharth by the Tarwad Karnavan was, therefore, invalid. Sankaran Nambiar was added as the 3rd defendant and he supported the 2nd defendant's case. As notice of suit was published in the District Gazette and in a local paper, 50 other members including the present plaintiff and the 2nd defendant joined as defendants. 28 of them supported the 3rd defendant while the rest opposed the claim of the Tavazhi. The issue framed in the case was "Has plaintiff a valid Melcharth right in the plaint Paramba? and can he maintain this ejectment suit on the strength of it?" No separate issue was framed about the existence of the Tavazhi but as the validity of the Melcharth was challenged solely on the ground that the Karnavan of such a Tavazhi alone could have granted a valid one, the question of the existence of the Tavazhi was involved in the issue framed and was clearly a matter in issue within the meaning of section 11, Civil Procedure Code. For a matter to be in issue under that section it is not necessary that an express issue should be framed about it; it is enough if a decision about it is necessary for the decree.

The District Munsif found that there was no such separate Tavazhi as Meethala

Veedu as alleged by the 3rd defendant and his party and he overruled the plea of the invalidity of the Melcharth and gave a decree in plaintiff's favour. Third defendant and his party thereupon appealed to the District Judge making the plaintiff and the 1st defendant and his supporters respondents and again raised the same contentions. The District Judge, however, confirmed the findings in appeal. It would, therefore, seem that the question of the existence of the Tavazhi is res judicata against the Tavazhi. Both the Karnavans were parties to the suit as well as a large number of members of the family. We must, therefore, hold that both the Tarwad and the Tavazhi were properly represented in that litigation. Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, however, points out that the 1st defendant, the Karnavan of the Tarwad, remained ex parte and he argues that as the question arose between the Tarwad and the Tavazhi as co defendants in the suit and as there was no active contest between the 1st defendant, the Karnavan of the Tarwad, and the members of the Tavazhi, the finding should not be treated as res judicata. He relies on Kandiyil Cheriya Chandu v. Zamorin of Calicut (8). In that case it was held that the matter was res judicata as the defendant against whom the plea was urged took an active part in the controversy as against his co-defendant. We think it must be taken as the view of our High Court that as between co defendants there must be active controversy inter se before a finding can be treated as res judicata. See also Ramanuja Ayyangar v. Narayana Ayyangar (9). In this case, however, there are good reasons why the appellant's argument cannot be accepted. The Tarwad was represented not merely by the Karnavan but by all or nearly all the members of it, who certainly took an active part in the dispute; the res judicata pleaded is against the Tavazhi the Karnavan, and members of which undoubtedly actively disputed the claim of the plaintiff and the other defendants. Furthermore, the controversy did not stop with the first Court. The Karnavan and members of the Tavazhi, as already stated, appealed to the District Court making the plaintiff as well as the 1st defendant and the other members of the Tarwad respondents. When the District Judge confirmed the finding that there was no Tavazhi, he did so as between the two sets of members on opposite sides of the record. With reference to his finding which is a final one in the case no question of res judicata between co respondents arises.

We must, therefore, hold that the District Judge was right in considering that the finding that there was no Tavazhi is binding on the appellant in this suit.

A question was raised that the 1st defendant, the tenant, was estopped from disputing the title of the plaintiff as his landlord. But this plea, even if valid, is of no effect in this case as the 2nd defendant is also a party and against him there can be no such estoppel.

The second appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

CIVIL REVISON NO. 17 OF 1919.
April 4, 1919.
Present :—Mr. Stuart, J. C.

VAKIL KHAN—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT
versus
B. ANAND BEHARI LAL AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 64—Acknowledgment, whether statement of account—Endorsement promising to pay, whether agreement.

A mere acknowledgment is not a statement of account, and an endorsement expressed as follows:—"Will pay early next August" is not an agreement in writing of the nature contemplated by Article 64 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. It is nothing more than a proposal. [p. 263, col. 2]

Application for revision of the decree of the Additional Judge, Small Cause Court, Lucknow, dated the 8th August 1918.

Mr. A. Rauf, for the Applicant.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Opposite Party.

ORDER.—The point raised in this revision is whether the provisions of Article 64, First Schedule, Act IX of 1908, can apply to the following case :—

Muhammad Fazal Khan wrote in 1914 to Anand Behari Lal demanding the payment of a certain sum of money. Anand Behari Lal endorsed on the letter, "Will pay Rs. 250 early next August 1915. Signed Anand Behari Lal, dated the 13th October 1913," 1913 being written by a clerical error for 1914. The suit was brought in the Small Cause Court on the 16th July 1918. If it be held that accounts had been stated in writing signed by Anand Behari Lal and the debt by a simultaneous agreement in writing signed as aforesaid had been made payable in August 1915 the suit was within limitation. If the contrary view be taken the suit is time-barred. The learned Counsel for the applicant has argued that if the decision in Manjunatha Kamti v. Devamma (1) be followed, it must be considered that there was an account stated within the meaning of Article 64 and that there was also a simultaneous agreement to pay the amount at a future time. There is much to be said in favour of the view that if that decision of the Madras High Court is followed, the facts disclose an account stated. But the view taken by the Madras High Court on this point has not been accepted by other High Courts. A year previous to the Madras decision the Allahbad High Court in Ganga Prasad v. Ram Dayal (2) arrived at the opposite view and a view different from the view of the Madras High Court was taken in Shankar v. Mukta (3). These decisions of the Allahabad and the Bombay High Courts did not find favour in the eyes of the Madras High Court, but they appear to me to lay down the correct law upon the subject. This point has never been absolutely decided in this Court, although the decision in Musammat Jhaptan v. Ram Dayal (4) shows that the view taken in Allahabad and Bombay was regarded favourably by a Bench of this Court in 1904. Apart from any other point it appears to me impossible on the meaning of the language to hold that a mere acknowledgment is a statement of account and it is impossible to hold that the endorsement here, "Will pay Rs. 250 early next August 1915," is an agreement in writing of the nature contemplated by the Article. It is nothing more than a proposal. If the other side had accepted Anand Behari Lal's proposal to pay the money in August 1915 and not before, they would have been debarred from suing until that date. There was nothing in the fact that he made the proposal, which the other side neither accepted nor refused to accept, to have prevented them, had they so wished, from suing before August 1915. If they had accepted the proposal and if an agreement in writing had been arrived at, there would have been force in the contention that the cause of action did not accrue until August 1915. But this was not the case upon the facts. For the above reasons I find that the learned Small Cause Court Judge was right in his decision that the suit was time-barred and I dismiss this application with costs.

CIVIL REVISION No. 129 OF 1918.
June 26, 1919.
Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott and Mr. Justice Walsh.

ABDUL AZIZ—DEFENDANT—APPLICANT
versus
SHEKHAR CHAND—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Revision—Adjournment, refusal to grant—Dismissal of suit for default—Reversal of order and grant of adjournment, legality of—Irregularity.

In a suit before a Munsif, the plaintiff and the Pleader for the defendant appeared on the date fixed for the hearing, the plaintiff asked for an adjournment on the ground that his witnesses were not present; the defendant's Pleader stated that his witnesses, too, had not come. The Munsif refused the adjournment and dismissed the suit for want of prosecution. Later in the day the plaintiff with his Pleader appeared before the Munsif and called his attention to the fact that the burden of proof had been laid on the defendant. The Munsif, thereupon, treating the application as one for setting aside an ex parte decree, in the presence of the Pleader for the defendant set aside his previous order and granted the adjournment which he had previously refused. On the adjourned date, the defendant did not appear, and an ex parte decree was passed against him. On an application for revision to the High Court:

Held, that the Munsif had not only acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction with material irregularity but had acted without jurisdiction in his attempt to correct his first erroneous order, and that neither of his orders nor the ex parte decree could be upheld. [p. 265, cols. 1 & 2.]

Civil revision against the order of the Munsif, Nagina, dated the 13th June 1918.

Mr. S. A. Haidor, for the Appellant.

Dr. Surendro Nath Sen, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit on a promissory note. We find that three issues were framed, as to which we should not have been prepared to say that there was not one issue at least on which the burden of proof would, in the ordinary course of things, lie on the plaintiff. However that may be, the learned Munsif who framed the issues recorded at the time a note to the effect that the burden of proof was placed on the defendant. He then fixed the 13th of June 1918 for the hearing. On that date the plaintiff was present in person and the defendant was represented by Pleader. The plaintiff in effect asked for an adjournment of the hearing on the ground that his witnesses were not present. The defendant's Pleader made a statement to the effect that his witnesses also were not present. The Court refused to grant an adjournment. On this state of facts it is beyond question that the learned Munsif's duty was to take into consideration the plaint and the written statement and the frame of the issues. He would also have had jurisdiction, if he thought proper, to reconsider the note made by his predecessor in office, to the effect that the burden of proof was laid on the defendant, although it is reasonable to add that, if he had taken it upon himself to reconsider that point, it would have formed a strong argument against his decision to refuse an adjournment, because it would be tantamount to deciding that the parties had been misled as to their position by his predecessor's order. However, the learned Munsif adopted neither of these courses. He came to the conclusion, erroneously beyond question, that the suit was liable to dismissal for want of prosecution on the part of the plaintiff. He passed an order to that effect. Five days later a decree was prepared in accordance with that judgment and was signed by the Munsif. In the meantime, however, other things had happened. On that same date, namely, the 13th of June 1918, the plaintiff re-appeared in Court, this time accompanied by his Pleader. An affidavit was put in which in itself contained nothing very material; but the point of the proceeding was that the Pleader for the plaintiff now called the attention of the learned Munsif to his predecessor's order by which the burden of proof on the issues had been laid upon the defendant. The learned Munsif then came to the conclusion that his order dismissing the suit for want of prosecution was a bad order and he took it upon himself to endeavour to correct the mistake. He treated the application made to him by the plaintiff, through his Pleader, as an application for setting aside an ex parte order. He took cognizance of it there and then, in the presence of the defendant's Pleader, and passed an order setting aside his previous order of the same date, and granted the adjournment which he was probably ill-advised to have refused, fixing the 2nd of July 1918 for the trial of the issues on the merits. We are informed that on some subsequent date, the suit came up for trial, but the defendant did not appear. The plaintiff tendered sufficient evidence to justify an ex parte decree in his favour and such decree has been passed. In the meantime the defendant had presented before this Court the application in revision with which we are now dealing. The defendant's contention is that the second order of the 13th of June 1918 was wholly without jurisdiction and is liable to be set aside. In our opinion, as we have already pointed out, the learned Munsif began by misunderstanding the position of the parties and the law applicable to that position.

Under this double mistake he passed an order dismissing the suit, which as it stands is a bad order, for it purports to be a dismissal of the suit for want of prosecution, and no order to that effect could legally have been passed in the position in which the parties stood. In an endeavour to correct this mistake the learned Munsif has committed another one. His second order of the 13th of June 1913 is also a bad order and liable to be reversed by this Court in revision. On behalf of the applicant stress has been laid on one of the latest reported decisions of this Court, the case of Hingu Singh v. Jhuri Singh (1). That was a first appeal from order and the jurisdiction of this Court was limited by its jurisdiction in dealing with appeals from orders. The only point decided in that case, which is relevant to the case now before us, is authority for the proposition that the first order passed by the learned Munsif on the 13th of June 1918, although in form purporting to be an order dismissing the plaintiff's suit for default, had nevertheless in law the effect of a dismissal of the suit on merits. It is this which makes the Munsif's second order of the 13th of June 1918 a bad order in law. Now the question is, what ought this Court to do on the above state of facts? The applicant wishes us to set aside the second of the two orders passed by the Court below and to leave him the full benefit of the erroneous decree dismissing the suit for default passed earlier on the same date. The jurisdiction of this Court in revision can only be limited by the words of section 115 itself. This Court has called for the record of this case, which has been decided by a Court of subordinate jurisdiction, namely, the Court of a Munsif. We have found on examining the record, that the learned Munsif has acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction with material irregularity and has acted without jurisdiction in his attempt to correct the first erroneous order. The result is that we have power to make such order in the case as we think fit. We readily concede to the learned Counsel for the applicant that our order must be based upon legal principles and must be directed towards the interests of justice. Looking at the matter from this point of view, we are satisfied that the only correct order for us to pass is one setting aside all the orders passed by the learned Munsif, beginning with his order and decree of the 13th of June 1918 dismissing for want of prosecution a suit in which both parties were present before him. We set aside, first of all, the ex parte decree which has since been passed in favour of the plaintiff. We also set aside the order in respect of which this application in revision has been made, namely, the second order of the 13th of June 1918. We also set aside the erroneous order and the decree passed earlier on the same date by which the plaintiff's suit was dismissed for want of prosecution. A similar order was made by this Court in Gobind Singh v. Kalyan Dass (2). The result is that the record of the suit will go back to the trial Court, to be tried on the merits on the issues originally framed, after due notice to both parties of the date fixed for trial. It is, of course, open to the trial Court to amend the issues, or to fix further issues, if it thinks necessary; but the suit must be tried on the merits. The costs hitherto incurred by both parties, including in this Court fees on the higher scale, will abide the result of the suit.

CIVIL REVISION CASE NO. 450 OF 1918.

BHOLA MOLLA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 TO 6—OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Damages, suit for—Title, question of, whether can be gone into—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court.

Plaintiff brought a suit in the Small Cause Court for damages against the defendant for wrongfully taking away fish from the tank in which the plaintiff said he had an 8-annas share and of which he was in possession. The defendant having raised issues on the questions of title and possession, the plaint was returned by the Small Cause Court for presentation to the ordinary Court. The first Court decided those questions, but the lower Appellate Court threw out the suit on the ground that the question of title could not be gone into in such a suit:

Held, that the Court could go into the question of title in such a suit, though it could not finally determine it. [p. 267, col. 1.]

In a suit for damages for trespass on land a Small Cause Court is competent to investigate the question of title for the purpose of determining the defendant's liability for damages, though it cannot determine the question of title finally. [p. 266, col. 2.]

Rule against an order of the Sub-Judge, second Court, 24-Pergannas in Money Appeal No. 502 of 1917 (Money Suit No. 153 of 1917 of the Munsif, 3rd Court, Diamond Harbour.)

Babu Sarat Chandra Mukherjee, for the Petitioner.

Babu Atindra Nath Mukherjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner before us brought a suit for damages against the defendant for wrongfully catching and taking away fish from a tank in which the plaintiff said he had 8-annas share of which he was in possession.

The suit was instituted in a Court of Small Causes. The defendant denied the title and possession of the plaintiff and set up various defences to the action, which it is unnecessary to refer to except that contained in the third paragraph of the written statement, where the defendant pleaded that the suit was not maintainable in a Small Cause Court as there were complicated questions of title involved in the suit. Upon this objection the plaint was returned by the Small Cause Court Judge to the petitioner for presentation to the proper Court. Probably the Court intended to proceed under section 23 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act, which provides that when the right of a plaintiff and the relief claimed by him in a Court of Small Causes depend upon the proof or disproof of a title to immoveable property or other title which such Court cannot finally determine, the Court may at any stage of the proceedings return the plaint to be presented to a Court having jurisdiction to determine the title. However that may be, the suit was tried by the Munsif in his ordinary jurisdiction. Several issues were raised, two of them being whether the plaintiff had title to the disputed property and whether the story of plaintiff's possession was true. Both parties adduced evidence on the questions of title and possession and those questions were gone into by the Munsif, who decided them in favour of the plaintiff.

The defendant then appealed and the learned Subordinate Judge held that the question of title ought not to have been gone into in such a suit and dismissed the suit.

It is true that the decision on the question of title in a suit for damages cannot be binding on the parties. But the Small Cause Court is no doubt competent to investigate the question of title for the purpose of determining the defendant's liability for damages. See Elahi Buksh Mandal v. Ram Narayan Ghose (1), though it cannot determine the question of title finally.

The learned Subordinate Judge refers to the case of Lep Singh Khasia v. Nimar Khasia (2), as supporting his view that the question of title cannot be gone into in a suit for damages. But that case does not support the proposition for which it is cited by the Court below. The learned Judges in that case (Banerji and Rampini, JJ.) held that the plaintiff in a suit would be entitled to a decree for damages without proof of title if it is found, first, that he has been in possession from before and up to the date of the institution of the suit, and secondly, that the defendant has failed to make out a better title to the property than the plaintiff. The learned Judges further pointed out that "if the first point is decided in favour of the plaintiffs, they will be entitled to a decree, unless the defendants make out a better title; and if the first point is decided against the plaintiffs, they will not be entitled to a decree, unless they make out their title."

It is clear, therefore, upon that decision that the plaintiff in such a suit is entitled to succeed if he shows that he was in possession from before and up to the date of the institution of the suit unless the defendant can show a better title, and that if the question of possession is decided against the plaintiff, the plaintiff can show that he has got title to the land better than that of the defendant.

The learned Subordinate Judge has also relied upon the case of Giri Narain Chatterji

(1) 10 Ind. Cas. 117; 16 C. W. N. 288.
(2) 21 C. 244; 10 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 795.

v. Modhu Sudan Mukerji (3), where the decision in the case of Lep Singh Khasia v. Nimar Khasia (2) was considered. But in the case of Giri Narain Chatterji v. Modhu Sudan Mukerji (3) the plaintiff had already obtained a decree declaring his title and in execution of the decree had obtained symbolical possession against the judgment-debtor which as between them amounted to actual possession. The plaintiff, therefore, was entitled to damages in that case. The observations made with reference to the case of Lep Singh Khasia v. Nimar Khasia (2) were by way of explaining that decision and in any case were obiter.

As pointed out in the case of Elahi Buksh Mandal v. Ram Narayan Ghose (1), "It is notorious that before embarking on litigation as to title, litigants in this country frequently endeavour to obtain an advantage, or what they think will be an advantage, by securing in their favour a decree of a Small Cause Court or a decree under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act or an order of a Criminal Court. That has no doubt been the object of the present plaintiff and it is not one which should be encouraged."

But then, as pointed out above, it was upon the objection of the defendant that the case involved intricate questions of title that the plaint was returned from the Small Cause Court to the ordinary Court. The defendant raised issues on the question of title and possession; evidence was gone into on the points on both sides; and the Court of first instance decided those questions. In these circumstances, we think that the lower Appellate Court ought not to have thrown out the suit on the ground that the question of title could not be gone into. As already pointed out, the Court can go into the question of title, though it cannot finally determine it.

The learned Pleader for the opposite party has relied upon certain observations of the learned Subordinate Judge on the question of possession. The learned Subordinate Judge says: "Even if the plaintiffs are allowed to maintain the suit in the present form, it should be decided mainly on the evidence of possession and the plaintiff should not be allowed the advantage of any finding on the question of title in a suit like this....." And again he observes: "Turning to the question of possession I do not consider it to be so very satisfactory and strong as would entitle the plaintiffs to a decree without coming to a finding upon the question of title."

There is, therefore, no definite finding on the question of possession, because the learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that it could not be decided without going into the question of title.

In these circumstances we think that the order of the lower Appellate Court should be set aside and the case sent back to that Court in order that the appeal may be disposed of upon all the questions raised in the case.

Costs, one gold mohur, to abide the result.

Case sent back.

Bengal Land Registration Act (VII B. C. of 1876), s. 78—Landlord and tenant—Rent, suit for—Non-registration of name of proprietor, effect of—Registration before decree, whether cures defect—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 71 (4)—Appraisement of crops—Crops removed by tenant—Method of appraisement—Presumption.

Non-registration of a person as the recorded proprietor of land in accordance with the provisions of section 78 of the Bengal Land Registration Act is not a disqualification which would deprive him of a cause of action; it is merely an impediment against his right to recover rent by a decree until the provisions of section 78 are complied with.[p. 268, col. 2.]

Where a plaintiff in a suit for rent was not registered as the recorded proprietor up to the date of the first Court's decree in his favour but was so registered prior to an appeal to the District Judge:

Held, that he was entitled to the benefit of a decree from the District Judge if the facts otherwise justified a decree being granted in his favour. [p. 268, col. 2.]

Section 71, clause 4, of the Bengal Tenancy Act contemplates that, where tenants remove a crop without having the same properly appraised, a presumption arises against them and the landlord is entitled to the full measure of the crop as of the best crop in the neighbourhood of a similar character for that harvest. [p. 269, col. 2]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Shahabad.

Mr. D. N. Sirkar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Huda and Jatendra Nath Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue to recover from the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 rent on the Danabandi system for the years 1320 and 1323. The plaintiffs are four in number and are co-sharers, as landlords, in respect of the lands in suit. Pro forma defendants Nos. 4 and 5 are the other co-sharer landlords of the plaintiffs. It is stated as between the respective landlord co-sharers that the collection of their respective shares of the rent has been separated.

The main argument advanced by the defendants why the plaintiffs should not succeed in obtaining a decree for the rent claimed in this suit is that the plaintiffs were not at the time of the institution of the suit registered in the Collectorate under the provisions of section 78 of the Land Registration Act

Section 78 of the Land Registration Act provides: "No person shall be bound to pay rent to any person claiming such rent, unless the name of the person claiming the rent shall have been registered under the Land Registration Act."

The defendants contend that the plaintiffs were not duly registered in accordance with the provisions of the Land Registration Act prior to the institution of this suit.

This point was suggested before the learned Munsif who tried the case; but I gather from the form of his judgment that it was not seriously pressed in argument before him.

However in the lower Appellate Court a different attitude was adopted by the defendants and the point as to non-registration of the plaintiffs as the recorded proprietors in the Collectorate prior to the institution of the suit was strenuously pressed before the learned District Judge.

Up to the time that the Munsif granted a decree for rent claimed in favour of the plaintiffs as against the defendants, the plaintiffs were not registered in accordance with the requirements of the Land Registration Act. Therefore the learned Munsif in my opinion ought not to have awarded the plaintiffs a decree.

The plaintiffs and the defendants respectively appealed to the learned District Judge, and pending the determination of the appeal the plaintiffs complied with the provisions of section 78 of the Land Registration Act and had themselves recorded as proprietors of the lands in suit in the Collectorate.

The learned District Judge was of opinion that non-registration was not a disqualification which in point of law would be deemed to deprive the plaintiffs of a cause of action; but that it was merely an impediment against their right to recover the rent they claimed by a decree until the provisions of the Registration Act were complied with, and that thus inasmuch as the plaintiffs prior to the appeal to the District Judge were duly registered and recorded as proprietors of the lands in suit that, therefore, they were entitled to the benefit of a decree from the learned District Judge, if the facts otherwise justified a decree being granted in their favour.

With the view I agree. It appears to me that the law on this point is covered by express authority which will be found in the rulings reported as Alimuddin Khan v. Hira Lal Sen (1), Abul Khair v. Meher Ali (2), Pramada Sundari Debi v. Kanai Lal Shaha (3) and Belchembers v. Nawab Sir Syed Hussan Ali (4), and in addition there appears to me to be an authority in this Court to support the contention that even after the trial Court has granted its decree, it would be open to the landlord seeking to recover rent to comply with the terms of section 73 of the Land Registration Act and to have his name recorded so as to be entitled to a decree from the Appellate Court even though the decree of the trial Court may have been illegal. The ruling reported as Narayan Prosad v. Gajo Mahton (5) appears to me to lead to this conclusion in point of law.

(1) 23 C. 87 (F. B.); 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 59.
(2) 26 C. 712; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1055.

I agree with the learned Judge in thinking that the learned Munsif should not have awarded the plaintiffs a decree in this case. The learned Judge was justified in appeal in granting the plaintiffs a decree, the plaintiffs having complied with the law as to registration.

This disposes of the main contention addressed to me on the part of the defendants-appellants.

It is conceded that on the question of payment no point can arise in second appeal; the finding of fact by the learned Judge that no payment of rent was in fact made by the tenants is a conclusive finding of fact by which I am bound.

The rent claimed by the plaintiffs for the years in suit is a rent according to the Danabandi system. The rent has since been commuted into a cash rent; but prior to the institution of the suit the Danabandi system prevailed, and applies to the years for which rent is sought to be recovered.

Both the trial Court and the first Court of Appeal were unable to assess the value of the crop owing to the crop having been cut and removed by the defendants, and consequently means did not exist of actually appraising the value of the crop as between the plaintiffs on the one hand and the defendants on the other; and, therefore, both the Courts adopted the system of taking an average between the figures stated by the plaintiffs and by the defendants respectively as to the actual value of the crop as the basis upon which the plaintiffs should be entitled to recover the rent due. Strictly speaking, in point of law I think this was an erroneous method for the Courts to have adopted; but it is difficult to see what either of the Courts could have done; having regard to the fact that the crop which required to be appraised had been removed by the defendants rendering the appraisement impossible by reason of their conduct, which conduct might amount to a criminal offence under certain conditions. I do not think the plaintiffs should be allowed to suffer by reason of the wrongful conduct of their tenants; and section 71, sub-section 4, of the Bengal Tenancy Act seems to me to contemplate that where tenants do remove a crop without having the same properly appraised that the presumption arises against them and the landlord is entitled to the full measure of the crop as of the best crop in the neighbourhood of a similar character for that harvest. This system of valuation was not adopted by either of the Courts below; as I have pointed out, the average was applied. The result no doubt is probably fair and reasonable as between the parties; but it would be quite senseless and futile to remand the case for further consideration as to the value of the crop, inasmuch as the crop has long ceased to exist and no good can be gained by any attempt to remand and re-open the case now for further consideration.

Accordingly I will dismiss these appeals but without costs owing to the very defective way in which the plaintiffs presented their case in these appeals.

Appeals dismissed.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 29, 30—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 28, Sch. I, Art. 44—Sale of immoveable property by guardian in contravention of sanction, validity of—Minor, suit by, to set aside sale—Purchaser from minor, position of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 55—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 116—Registered conveyance—Covenant for title, whether implied—Breach of covenant.

KANOK DASI v. SRIHARI GOSWAMI.

A sale by the certificated guardian of a minor not in accordance with the Court's sanction is voidable, but it is good until it is avoided. [p. 270, col. 2.]

Where a minor does not, within three years after attaining majority, take action for repudiating a sale made by his certificated guardian, his right to set aside the sale and recover possession of the property is barred by the provisions of Article 44 of Schedule I and section 28 of the Limitation Act, and, therefore, a transferee from him cannot successfully sue the purchaser from the certificated guardian for recovery of possession of the property after declaration of title. [p. 270, col. 2.]

Under section 55, clause (2), of the Transfer of Property Act, there is an implied covenant for title and possession in all registered conveyances, and a breach of that covenant is the breach of a contract in writing registered within the meaning of Article 116 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 271, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, of Sylhet, dated the 21st April 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court at that place, dated the 1st September 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Gopal Chandra Das, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession on declaration of title. Plaintiff purchased the property from defendant No. 3 in 1319. The defence of defendant No. 1 was that his father had purchased the property from the certificated guardian of defendant No 3 in 1311. Defendant No. 3 attained majority in 1318. The present suit was brought in 1915. The first question to be considered is whether the sale has been repudiated by the minor when he has within one year of his attaining majority sold to plaintiff. My submission is that it must be taken to be a sufficient indication of the minor's repudiation of the sale. See Trevelyan on Law relating to Minors (4th Edition), page 202. The previous sale is avoided by the subsequent transaction. The question is whether a fresh suit is necessary to avoid the sale. My submission is that the sale is not void but voidable, as some consideration passed. The present suit is not barred as it is brought within three years of the purchase. See Dattaji Sakharam Rajadhiksh Kalba Yese Parabhu (1). My contention is that the subsequent transaction avoids the previous one. Then as to the refund of the purchase-money, see Krishnan Nambiar v. Pannan (2). Section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act applies.

Babu Krishna Kishore Bysack, for the Respondents.—I appear for defendant No. 1. My only submission is that since the sale to me I have been all along in possession of the lands. The subsequent transaction is no repudiation of the previous sale.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff claims title by purchase from defendant No. 3 on $\frac{\text{20th Jaisto 1319}}{\text{10th June 1912}}$. Defendant No. 1 on the other hand also claims on the strength of a purchase by his father from defendant No. 3's certificated guardian in April 1905. It has been found by both the Courts that the sale by the certificated guardian was not in accordance with the Court's sanction. They are right in holding that the sale was, therefore, voidable. The sale, however, is good until it is avoided. Defendant No. 3 attained majority in $\frac{\text{Jaisto 1318}}{\text{May-June 1911}}$. No action for repudiating the acts of the guardian was taken by him within three years after attainment of majority under Article 44 of the Limitation Act. Defendant No. 3 could not have instituted such a suit after the lapse of three years. Defendant No. 1 has been in possession of the property ever since his purchase. In the conveyance in favour of the plaintiff there is no reference to the sale by the guardian. I think the learned Subordinate Judge was right in coming to the conclusion that the plaintiff is also barred from instituting this suit for cancellation of defendant No. 1's conveyance, and that he has no right to possession without such cancellation. He has also held that inasmuch as defendant No. 3 did not take any steps to repudiate the acts of his guardian within three years it ought to be presumed that the sale by his certificated guardian was ratified. Mere abstention from taking steps may not amount to ratification or acquiescence, but it is quite correct that defendant No. 3 could not institute a suit to set aside the sale having regard to Article 44 of the Limitation Act and he was not entitled to possession having regard to the operation of Article 28: see Latchiah v. Mukkalinga (3). The plaintiff cannot have any higher rights than defendant No. 3, his vendor.

(2) 21 M. 8; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 362.

(3) 30 M. 393; 17 M. L. J. 220; 2 M. L. T. 351.

The plaintiff in this action asked in the alternative for refund of the consideration money by defendant No. 3. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that as there is no indemnity clause in the Kobala, Article 116 is of no avail and that Article 97 also does not operate in his favour. Article 97 operates from the date of the failure of consideration. The sale to the plaintiff was on the 10th June 1912. The plaint was filed on the 27th November 1915. It states that when the plaintiff attempted to take possession after her purchase, she was ousted by the defendants in the month of Pous 1319—December-January 1912-1913—but there is no finding as to when this took place. Under Article 97 the date runs from the time when the plaintiff was ousted from or failed to get possession [Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (4), see also Tulsiram v. Murlidhar Chaturbhuj (5).] So far as Article 116 is concerned, although there is no express indemnity in the plaintiff's Kobala, yet under section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act there is an implied covenant for possession. Thus there was a breach in this case of that implied covenant. Defendant No. 3 averred that he was in possession when he sold the property to the plaintiff and failed to give possession. I hold, therefore, that the plaintiff's Kobala being a registered document, he had six years under Article 116 to get compensation. See Arunachala Aiyar v. Ramasami Aiyar (6), in which it was held that in all registered conveyances executed after the Transfer of Property Act came into force, a covenant for title is implied by section 55, clause (2), of that Act and that the registered conveyance should be read as if it expressly embodied that covenant and that breach of that covenant is the breach of a contract in writing registered, within the meaning of Article 116. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for compensation for Rs. 40 against defendant No. 3 with interest thereon at 6 per cent. from date of suit.

The appeal, therefore, is dismissed as against defendant No. 1 with costs and decreed as against defendant No. 3 with costs.

Appeal partly allowed.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Debt created by decree, whether illegal or immoral—Necessity, proof of.

A debt created by a decree against a Hindu father of a joint family is not an illegal or an immoral debt, especially when there is a finding that there was legal necessity for incurring the debt so created, and it may be recovered from the ancestral property belonging to the joint family. [p. 272, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad.

Mr. Baranasi Prasad Jhunjhunwala for Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Bhagwat Prasad and Atul Krishna Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—In this case the pro forma defendants Nos. 5 to 7, the fathers of the plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4, having been entered in the Record of Rights as in possession of a certain plot of land, defendants Nos. 1 to 3 sued them for declaration of title, recovery of possession and for mesne profits. That suit ended in a decree for defendants Nos. 1 to 3 with mesne profits and costs, and in execution some ancestral property belonging to the joint family consisting of plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4 and defendants Nos. 5 to 7 was attached.

The plaintiffs thereupon preferred a claim, but being unsuccessful they have brought the present suit for declaration of their right to have the property released from attachment.

The Subordinate Judge has found on appeal that the suit was contested by defendants Nos. 5 to 7 bona fide and in the interest of the joint family; in other words, that there was legal necessity for incurring the debts which have been created by the decree.

In second appeal it is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the debt was illegal and immoral inasmuch as defendants Nos. 5 to 7, being perfectly aware that they had no title to the property, committed trespass thereon and thereafter defended the suit when in fact there was no necessity for defending it.

Now the balance of opinion seems to favour the view that a debt created by a decree against a father cannot be regarded as an illegal or immoral debt. The authorities are reviewed in the case of Chakouri Mahton v. Ganga Proshad (1), and their Lordships therein cite a decision of the Punjab Court in Kartar Singh v. Harji Mal (2). The following passage in the latter case seems to me to put the law very clearly:—

"If the principle of the decision is applicable to a judgment debt as well as to a debt voluntarily contracted by the father, and the position of the son can be in no wise bettered by the circumstance that the original liability has merged in a decree, the son can escape liability only upon the ground that the judgment-debt is in the position of a debt contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose. Granting that the son may go behind the decree, it is impossible to hold that the debt created by the decree is a debt contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose, merely because the act from which the obligation to make compensation arose was an illegal or immoral act, or both illegal and immoral. It is needless to consider whether a son could be held responsible in a suit against himself to compensate a plaintiff, out of ancestral property, for the loss occasioned to the plaintiff by the illegal or immoral acts of his father. The most analogous case would be that of a father who had voluntarily contracted to compensate the person whom he had by a criminal offence deprived of property. A debt created by such a contract could not without an utter perversion of language be styled a debt contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose; on the contrary, it would be a debt contracted for a highly moral as well as lawful purpose, and the case of a debtor enforcing an obligation to pay an ascertained sum by way of such compensation stands upon at least as sound a basis, though the obligation be unwillingly contracted under lawful compulsion."

In Chakouri Mahton's case (1) as also in Gadadhar Ramanuj Das v. Ghana Shyam Das (3) the decretal debt was held to be neither illegal nor immoral because no criminal offence involving a moral stigma had been disclosed. It was not necessary in either of these cases to consider the wider question whether the Hindu Law ceases to operate as soon as the debt becomes merged in a decree.

But it is clear that even upon the narrower view suggested in Chakouri Mahton's case (1) the defendants cannot succeed.

The learned Vakil for the appellants, however, contends that assuming that the debt was neither illegal nor immoral and that it was a personal debt incurred by defendants Nos. 5 to 7 which their sons are liable to pay, the attachment in the present case is illegal during the lifetime of these defendants.

The answer to this is that the lower Appellate Court has not merely held that the debt was neither illegal nor immoral but has gone further and found that it was incurred for family necessity.

The learned Vakil contends that he is entitled to challenge this finding on the ground that it is a mixed question of law and fact. Admitting that to be so, in my opinion the learned Subordinate Judge was perfectly correct in his conclusion. Having regard to the fact that the Record of Rights was in their favour the defendants Nos. 5 to 7 were fully justified in defending their possession; and it is impossible to hold in these circumstances that there was no bona fides either in entering upon the land or in defending the suit.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

CRIMINAL MISCELLANEOUS CASE NO. 15 OF 1919.

May 7, 1919.

Present: - Mr. Justice Das.

BASHIR ALI AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526—Transfer of case—Error of judgment, whether ground for transfer—Refusal to supply accused with copies of confidential documents, effect of.

The mere fact that a trial Court has committed an error of judgment in admitting evidence, is no ground for transferring a case from such Court. [p. 274, col. 1.]

Similarly, it cannot be said that the trial Court entertains any bias against the accused, or that the accused should reasonably apprehend that there is such bias, if, when addressed by that Court, the District Magistrate refuses to produce papers called for by the defence on the ground that some are missing and that the rest are confidential. [p 274, col. 2.]

Criminal application for transfer of a case from the file of the Sub-Divisicnal Officer, Araria.

FACTS of the case briefly are that the accused were put upon their trial for an offence under section 161, Indian Panal Code, or in the alternative section 409, Indian Penal Code, in respect of the discharge of certain postal cash certificates of the first Indian War Loan. When the trial commenced, the Court allowed the prosecution to examine 48 witnesses, all of whom deposed to distinct offences which the accused were alleged to have committed. The accused objected that the prosecution were entitled to prove only one or at most 3 of the offences which it was alleged they had committed and ought not to be allowed to adduce evidence in a haphazard way simply to prejudice the Court against the accused, and they prayed the Court to direct the prosecution to confine the evidence to the items which it was intended to make the subject-matter of the charge in the case. Upon this the Court passed the following order: "At this stage I cannot rule out any evidence. The evidence objected to is admissible under sections 14 and 15 of the Evidence Act and there are several rulings on that point." The trial proceeded and the accused asked for production of the report of the C. I. D. Officers as well as the evidence of witnesses recorded by Mr. Sircar, who had enquired into the matter at an earlier stage. On this the Court passed the following order: "I cannot call for the report of Mr. Sircar, as the District Magistrate says that it is confidential and cannot be produced. Under section 123, Evidence Act, the decision whether the report should be produced or not rests with the District Magistrate. Re the statements recorded by Mr. Sircar the prosecution reports that the papers have been stolen. I am not in a position to do anything in the matter."

Mr. Athar Husain, for the Petitioners, argued that the trial Court admitted evidence which was inadmissible under sections 14 and 15 of the Evidence Act. I protested against this but I was overruled. The result is that the mind of the trial Court will be prejudiced against me when he hears this mass of irrelevant evidence.

[DAS, J.—But if you are convicted, there is a Court of Appeal which will set the error right.]

Mr. Athar Husain.—But I do not want to be convicted, and my apprehension is that by the admission of this irrelevant evidence the chances of my acquittal at the hands of the trial Court are very much diminished now and in the event of my conviction and appeal, the Appellate Court will be chiefly guided by the appreciation of the evidence by the trial Court, which must be prejudiced by the admission of this evidence. My second grievance is that I have not been supplied with copies of C. I. D. reports and the evidence in the enquiry held previous to this trial. It was my right to know the nature of the information received against me.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad (Government Advocate), for the Crown, submitted that even if it be assumed that the trial Court is in error in law in admitting this evidence, that does not show that it is prejudiced against the accused. If this astounding proposition be upheld, there will be no end of petitions for transfer and the work of trying Courts will be dislocated. As to the second point, here again the trying Court is not to blame in the least. It cannot supply the accused with documents which are not in its possession.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for transfer of a case from the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Araria to the file of some other Magistrate subordinate to the District Magistrate of Purnea. Having given my most anxious consideration to the able arguments advanced by Mr. Athar Husain on behalf of the petitioners, I have come to the conclusion that no case has been made out for a transfer.

It appears that certain villagers sent a petition to one Mr. Duff complaining that the petitioners were in the habit of taking illegal gratification in connection with their official duty. Mr. Duff appears to have forwarded the petition to the Sub-Divisional Officer. Other petitions to the same effect were sent to the Postmaster-General and Director General of Post Offices. All these petitions appear to have found their way to the District Magistrate. The Sub-Divisional Officer himself made an enquiry and sent his report together with the petition forwarded by Mr. Duff to him to the District Magistrate. Upon all these informations received by the District Magistrate of Purnea, he directed the trial of the petitioners in the Court of the Sub Divisional Officer of Araria under section 161, Indian Penal Code, or in the alternative under section 409, Indian Penal Code.

The first point taken on behalf of the petitioners is that though they have been put on trial in respect of three specific items, the trial Court has admitted evidence of similar but unconnected instances of alleged offences on behalf of the prosecution in spite of the petitioners' protest. Mr Athar Husain says that the petitioners have been seriously prejudiced by the reception of this inadmissible evidence, but he very fairly and properly admits that he cannot show that in admitting the evidence, the learned Magistrate was unfair or partial in any way. It is a problem of some nicety whether evidence of similar but unconnected instances is admissible in a case where the petitioners have been put on trial in respect of three items only, but I do not think that I should fetter the judgment of the trial Court in any manner, specially as it is not suggested that in this matter the Court has been in any way unfair to the petitioners. The Court may have committed an error of judgment in admitting the mass of evidence, but an error of judgment is no ground for a transfer.

The next point urged is that the Court has consistently refused to give the petitioners informations relating to their alleged offence. The complaint is that the evidence recorded by the Sub-Divisional Officer and the Criminal Investigation Department and their reports have not been produced in the case. It appears that the Court did write a letter to the District Magistrate asking him if he would produce the papers called for by the defence. The reply of the District Magistrate was to the effect that the evidence was missing and the reports were confidential. This may be true or false, but it does not show that the Court has any bias against the petitioners or that there should be a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the petitioners that there is such bias. I express no opinion on the question whether the petitioners are entitled to the copies of such reports. If they are so entitled, the failure to furnish them with copies of such reports would undoubtedly affect their conviction, if ultimately they are convicted, but they do not affect the present application.

One or two other small points have been argued but, in my opinion, they are not material for the purpose of this application. I would reject this application.

Application rejected.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 448—Criminal house-trespass—Annoyance, causing of—Intention—Offence.

A person who has no intention of causing annoyance to any one and takes measures to avoid it cannot be convicted of an offence under section 448 of the Penal Code, even though a feeling of annoyance be the inevitable consequence of his being found out. [p. 275, col. 1 & 2.]

A house was occupied, only by the owner and his concubine who had an intimacy with the accused. The accused entered the house at her invitation in the absence of the owner and took measures to conceal himself as soon as the owner arrived, who, however, arrested him:

EMPEROR v. RUPA.

Held, that the accused was not guilty of an offence under section 448 of the Penal Code. [p. 275, col. 1.]

Reference against the order of the First Class Magistrate, Lucknow District, dated the 1st March 1919.

JUDGMENT.—The complainant is a Lohar by caste. He has in his keeping a woman of the Kurmi caste. On the 27th February 1919 at 7 P. M. the complainant returned home. The woman asked him to go to the liquor shop and have a drink. He replied that he would go after taking a betel leaf. He lighted a lamp and noticed a cap on a cot. He entered the room and saw the accused concealed there. He arrested him, took him to the Police Station and made a report.

The statement of the accused was that he had an intimacy with the woman who was in the keeping of the complainant and had gone into his house on her invitation. The woman admitted that she had invited him. He was tried summarily and convicted under section 451 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for three months. The learned District Magistrate recommends that the conviction should be set aside, as no lawful marriage between the complainant and the woman who was in his keeping was established.

It is clear from the circumstances proved that the woman was living with the complainant as a concubine, and that being so, it cannot be said that the accused entered the house of the complainant with the intention of committing an offence, if the woman had invited him for immoral purposes. The Hindu Law does not forbid marriages between different sections of the same primary caste, but in this case there was no proof that any marriage ceremonies had been gone through. The woman was living purely as a concubine of the complainant and neither section 451 nor section 498 of the Indian Penal Code can be applied to the case.

It has been suggested that the conviction may be altered into one for house-trespass under section 448 of the Indian Penal Code. But it cannot be said that the intention of the accused in entering the house was to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy the complainant or any of the inmates. In fact he concealed himself as soon as the complainant arrived and was anxious that the complainant should not know of his presence or the object with which he had come. A feeling of annoyance may be the inevitable consequence of the discovery, but such annoyance was not his object. It could not have formed part of his primary or secondary intention. In Jiwan Singh v. Emperor (1) an entry in the house of the complainant with the intention of having illicit intercourse with his widowed sister was held to amount to a criminal trespass, inasmuch as the particular object could not be attained except by causing great annoyance to the owner of the house, if the entry was discovered. An intention to cause annoyance by a certain act is, however, inconsistent with an intention to do it stealthily or to conceal it by every possible means. In fact as pointed out in Queen-Empress v. Rayapadayachi (2) and Gaya Bhar v. Emperor (3), a trespasser who commits an act, knowing that that act, if discovered, was likely to cause annoyance does not necessarily do it with that intention. He undertakes a risk according as the possibility of the discovery may be near, slender or very remote. If the discovery is probable as where there are other inmates in the house or reasonably certain, he may be presumed to have intended the inevitable or natural consequences of what he was doing. In Balmakand Ram v. Ghansamram (4) and Mulla v. Emperor (5) such an intention was presumed. In Emperor v. Lakshman Ragunath (6) and Sellamuthu Servaigaran v. Pallamuthu Karuppen (7) the intention was treated an inference of law resulting from the doing of an act and the circumstances attending it. Here the trespass was committed in the absence of the owner from the house on the invitation of his concubine. There was no other inmate in the house, whose modesty or privacy could have been invaded. The accused effectively concealed himself before the

Guilty knowledge is essential to a conviction for the offence of mischief, and, in the absence of any consideration or discussion of the circumstances and the reasonableness or otherwise of the act of an accused person, it is impossible to uphold a conviction for that offence. [p. 278, col. 2.]

A riparian proprietor can only take for the purpose of irrigation so much water as is necessary without materially diminishing what is to be allowed to descend, and the quantity of water that can be abstracted and used without infringing that essential condition must in all cases be a question of circumstances, depending mainly upon the size of the stream and the proportion which the water taken bears to the entire volume. [p. 278, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Monghyr, dated the 24th April 1919, upholding in appeal the conviction and sentence passed on the petitioner by the Sub Deputy Magistrate, Monghyr, dated the 4th April 1919.

FACTS of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment of the District Magistrate, which was as follows:—

"This appeal is preferred against the conviction by Maulvi Shah Ahmad Hussain, Sub-Deputy Magistrate, of the accused under section 430, Indian Penal Code, for throwing a bund across a river called the Bagra and thus causing wrongful loss by the diminution of water for agricultural purposes to the complainant.

The fact of throwing the bund across the river is admitted and the question arises whether this is a wrongful act on the accused's part or not. The river Bagra rises in certain low hills which are an off-shoot of the Kharagpore hills in Pergana Sahroi, the said Perganna being the property of the Banaili Estate. After passing through various villages of this estate, it runs into Perganna Haveli Kharagpore which is the property of the Darbhanga Raj, the river forming the eastern boundary of the Perganna. It is also admitted that from where the river enters Perganna Kharagpore the villagers of the Banaili Estate have no right to draw off water for irrigation, though in fact the estate runs along the eastern bank of the river. The question is, whether the villages of the Banaili Estate have any right to take water for irrigation above this point where the land on both sides belongs to the Banaili Estate or to its tenure ho'ders. The only real evidence brought forward on this point consists in the judgment by the Assistant Settlement Officer during the last Survey and Settlement operations regarding the boundary between Perganna Haveli Kharagpore and Perganna Sahroi. Though the point in issue in that case was merely the boundary between these two Pergannas, the question of the irrigation rights in the river formed a very important factor in the case and the only conclusion to be drawn from the Assistant Settlement Officer's judgment is that the Banaili Estate has had no right to draw off water from the river above the point where it enters the Darbhanga Raj. This is not so contrary to the principles of justice as it sounds, for these petty hill streams contain very little water and if the Banaili Estate had the right to take up the water above, no water whatever would reach the villages of the Darbhanga Raj. Further the two Pergannas were up till above 1840 in the possession of the same family, the Rajas of Kharagpore, and no doubt up to that time there was no dispute whatever. The irrigation right of Perganna Sahroi was the first to be alienated, and it is reasonable to suppose that some arrangement was come to at that time between the Banaili and the Kharagpore Estates as to which should take the water. The essential point in the subsequent litigation is the judgment of the High Court, which is described in the judgment of the Assistant Settlement Officer but which has not been placed before me as it should have been. But on the whole I think the evidence on the record justifies me in finding that the villagers of the Banaili Estate have no right to draw off water for irrigation purposes from this river.

This being so, it is clear that the accused have been rightly convicted and even if one accepts their version of the case, they took the bulk of the very scanty supply of water and in so doing they must have known that they would cause loss and in view of the well-known rights of the case, wrongful loss to the inhabitants of the Darbhanga Raj villages. The sentences are not excessive. I accordingly uphold the convictions and sentences and dismiss the appeal."

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—This application for revision arises out of a dispute regarding irrigation rights in a natural stream called the Bagra, which flows northwards from the Kharagpore hills and passes at one stage of its course through Perganna Sahroi, which belongs to the Raja of Banaili.

In this portion the villages both on the right and left bank of the river are in the possession either of the Banaili Raj itself or in that of the Mokararidars of the Banaili Raj, and those claiming under the Mokararidars.

The river then leaves Perganna Sahroi and enters Perganna Haveli Kharagpore, which is the property of the Maharaja of Darbhanga.

It has been found as a fact that as soon as it enters this Perganna, the bed of it lies wholly within the boundaries of that Perganna and that the villages on its east bank appertaining to Perganna Sahroi have no claim to any portion of the bed of the river.

In October last the Mokararidar and his tenants put up a band across the river at a place called Jamhat and by cutting a channel from the eastern bank of the river irrigated certain villages belonging to the Mokararidar.

Thereupon a tenant of a village upon the bank of the river in that portion which flows through Perganna Haveli filed a complaint before the Magistrate charging the Mokararidar and his tenants with mischief under section 430, Indian Penal Code.

The result was that the accused were convicted and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 25 each.

The learned Sub Deputy Magistrate who tried the case found that the Mokararidar had no right to use any of the water of the stream for irrigation purposes anywhere above the point at which the river entered Perganna Haveli Kharagpore and that the construction of the bund was made with the intention of causing wrongful loss to the lower riparian proprietors.

On appeal the learned District Magistrate has affirmed that finding, but in the concluding portion of his judgment he says "that even if the version given by the accused is true they are guilty of mischief, because they have taken the bulk of the water in the stream."

The case for the accused in the trial Court was that the stream had two branches one of which alone they had obstructed and that their user was, having regard to the nature and circumstances, reasonable and sanctioned both by Common Law and by prescription.

There is no finding by the trial Court on any of these points. But the conviction proceeds mainly upon the finding that the Banaili Raj had no right whatever to take water for irrigation purposes from the river at all.

The learned Sub-Deputy Magistrate and the learned District Magistrate have both based their decisions upon a judgment of the Assistant Settlement Officer given in 1907.

Now if this decision were correct, it would probably be easy to say that the accused could not have had any bona fide belief that they were entitled to use the water at Jamhat. But I am unable to see from the judgment of the Assistant Settlement Officer that there was any clear finding that the bed of the river above the point at which it enters Per-ganna Haveli was the property of the Maharaja of Darbhanga, or that the Raja of Banaili had no right to exercise his rights as a riparian proprietor over any portion of it.

The Assistant Settlement Officer was concerned to decide the boundary between certain villages lying on the west in Perganna Haveli, and on the east in Perganna Sahroi, and he came to the conclusion that as in the Revenue Survey Map the river was within the former Perganna, the Maharaja of Darbhanga had a better title than the Raja of Banaili to the whole of it.

In order to support his decision upon the question of title with regard to this portion of the river, the Assistant Settlement Officer went into the question of irrigation rights, and he found that the tenants of the Banaili Raj were not entitled to exercise any of the rights of riparian proprietors in respect of this portion. But I cannot find any clear finding that in respect of every other portion of the river the Maharaja of Darbhanga and he alone was entitled to exercise irrigation rights to the exclusion of other riparian owners.

Therefore, in my opinion, in the absence of any authority for holding that in regard to that portion of the river which is now in dispute the riparian owners have lost their rights, it seems to me that the case must be judged upon the Common Law of this country.

The case as to prescription has not been established, but it certainly has to be shown that the accused are not entitled to exercise the ordinary rights which are enjoyed by riparian owners in this country in respect of natural streams flowing past the lands occupied by them.

The law in this respect has been laid down in a number of rulings of which it is necessary only to cite Belbhadur Pershad Singh v. Sheikh Barkat Ali (1).

Their Lordships in this case approve of the general principle that a riparian proprietor can only take for the purpose of irrigation so much water as is necessary without materially diminishing what is to be allowed to descend and the quantity of water that can be abstracted and used without infringing that essential condition must in all cases be a question of circumstances, depending mainly upon the size of the stream and the proportion which the water taken bears to the entire volume. And Mookerjee, J., cites in support an American case, Harris v. Harrison (2), in which occur the following observations:—

"A riparian owner is entitled only to the reasonable use of natural water for irrigating his land, although such use may appreciably diminish the flow down to the lower riparian proprietors; the larger the number of riparian proprietors whose rights are involved, the greater the difficulty of adjustment; the length of the stream, the volume of water in it, the extent of each ownership along the banks, the character of the soil owned by each contestant, the area sought to be irrigated by each—all these and many other considerations must enter into the solution of the problem, but one principle is surely established, namely, that no proprietor can absorb all the water of the stream so as to allow none to flow down to his neighbour."

In this case there is no finding by the trial Court that the accused have absorbed the whole of the water. The learned District Magistrate does find that the accused have absorbed the bulk of it, but in the absence of any consideration or discussion of the circumstances and the reasonableness or otherwise of the user made by the accused, it is impossible for us to say that they acted with that guilty knowledge which is essential to a conviction for the offence of mischief. Indeed the Courts below appear to have been mainly influenced by their decision that no part of the water could legally be used by the accused. In our opinion this finding is not based upon any legal evidence, and, therefore, the convictions and sentences must be set aside. The fines, if paid, will be refunded.

Government of India Act (5 & 6 Geo. Although the Court of a Munsif is not an inferior Criminal Court within the meaning of section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the High Court has ample power under section 107 of the Government of India Act to entertain an application for revision of an order made by a Munsif in a proceeding in which a suitor is called upon to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt of Court. [p. 280, cols. 1 & 2.]

An appiication was made to a Munsif by a Vakil on behalf of certain minor plaintiffs to set aside an order dismissing their suit in default, the said order being described in the application as one "against rules and against law." The Munsif stigmatised this as contempt of Court and issued notice to the minors to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt of Court in respect of the application. On an application made to the High Court in revision:

Held, that there was nothing in the application for restoration to which exception could possibly be taken. [p. 280, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Munsif, Mainpuri, District Etawah, dated the 21st May 1919.

Mr. Uma Shanker Bajpai, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the Munsif of Etawah was holding his ordinary Court on a certain Friday, the 2nd of May 1919. It is alleged, and not denied, that he announced that miscellaneous cases only would be taken that day and the following day, which was a Saturday. Certain minors represented by their guardians were plaintiffs in a suit pending in the Court. They were represented by a Vakil and after waiting until 4-30 P. M. they left the Court. The ordinary sitting of the Court is 10-30 A. M. to 4 P. M. and speaking from my limited experience of this country, I should say that anybody who began a civil case after 4-30 P. M. in the month of May would be extremely foolish, and that the parties engaged would have a right to object. Next day the plaintiffs' Vakil discovered that the case had been dismissed for default. The Munsif has not condescended to explain what this means, why the case was called on and what the default was, for which it was dismissed It is obvious on the facts before me, unless there is a great deal more behind it, that that is an improper order which ought to be set aside. And if it came before me, it would certainly be set aside in revision. It may be that there is some reason for it, but whether there be, or whether there be not, the Vakil, finding what had happened, did what it was his obvious duty to do, indeed the minimum which he could do on behalf of his clients; he applied for restoration. All I know is that on that first application no order was made and a second application was put in asking for a day to be fixed for the new hearing. Here again I am left entirely in the dark so far as the Munsif's view of the case is concerned, because I do not know whether he refused to restore it and if so why, or whether he has made any order, or was willing to make any order, restoring the case to his pending file. But upon these applications he proceeded to pass an order which really is one of the most remarkable orders I have ever read. He treats the applications made to him to restore the suit to his list as having been utilised as a vehicle for criticising and threatening him and, having rightly remarked that if he, the Judge, had neglected his duty he must be dealt with elsewhere, he proceeded to stigmatize the remarks and so-called threats as "contempt of Court" and gave notice to the minors to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt of Court in respect of an application which had clearly been made on their behalf by their Vakil, and asked the Vakil for an explanation. I am inclined to think that whatever the contents of the application, the Munsif could not have made the order he did; but except that an expression is used in the application which is somewhat cumbersome and forcible for describing the order dismissing the suit which was objected to, but which is not unusual or unfamiliar in style having regard to the language frequently used in pleadings in the Mufassil, there is nothing in the application to which exception can possibly be taken. The expression to which I have referred is to the following effect, that the order which had been made the day before, and which was objected to, was "against rules and against law." I really do not know what the Munsif meant by what he said. It is one of the commonest grounds adopted in a memorandum of appeal objecting to a decree or an order to say that it is contrary to rule or that the decision is contrary to law, and the codes in this country in more than one place speak of matters being contrary to some rule having the force of law, and how an application based upon the ground that the previous order of the Court had been contrary to rule, or contrary to law, can be regarded as a threat or as improper, I am at a loss to understand. People sitting to administer justice and to hear the complaints of contending parties and alleged grievances of all sorts and kinds which come into Courts of Law, and liable to have their own decisions challenged, and sometime severely criticised, in the Courts of Appeal, must not be too thin-skinned. If the Munsif really thought that the Vakil had said anything in the application beyond what the occasion demanded, the proper course was for him to deal with the application on the merits, and to communicate privately with the Vakil as to any personal matter which he thought arose. As a matter of fact I cannot see that there was anything personal in the application from first to last, and it is extremely unfortunate that the Munsifs should from time to time somewhat impetuously jump to the conclusion that some offence is meant where none is intended. The order is a perfectly childish one and must be quashed.

Under what jurisdiction precisely this Court has power to quash it is a matter which may be open to argument. I do not think it really matters because it is an order which, if brought before this Court, in any reasonable form, is bound to be set aside It has been admitted as a criminal revision by a very experienced Judge of this Court, but there is a difficulty about that inasmuch as the Munsif is not an inferior Criminal Court within the meaning of section 435. It might be held to be a case decided by the Munsif from which there was no appeal within the meaning of section 115, Civil Procedure Code, being a decision of his upon the application made to him on the 3rd of May so as to entitle this Court to interfere in civil revision. But the matter having been brought before the Court, it matters not how, I have not the slightest doubt that this Court has power under section 107 of the Government of India Act, if under no other section, to make the order which I make.

Order quashed.

MONOOLAL SAHU—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction to prosecute, application for—Notice to accused, whether necessary—Failure to give notice, effect of—Proceedings, validity of.

Although the issue of a notice to the accused is not legally essential to validate a sanction granted under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, nevertheless in common moral propriety it is desirable, as a matter of practice and prudence and in common fairness, that a person who is sought to be prosecuted should have notice of the fact that an application has been made for his prosecution under the provisions of that section, and it is in accordance with the traditions of the administration of justice that such person should be permitted to show cause against the grant of sanction for his contemplated prosecution, but an omission to give such notice is not an illegality which would wholly vitiate an order granting sanction. [p. 281, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Purneah, dated the 7th January 1919, granting sanction to prosecute the petitioner under section 195 (6), Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. S. P. Varma, for the Petitioner.

Mr. A. Majid, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner Sukhdeo Missir seeks in this application to have the order of the District Magistrate of Purnea, dated the 7th January 1919, set aside.

The order of the District Magistrate was an order under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure granting sanction for the prosecution of the petitioner with another under section 211 read with section 109 of the Indian Penal Code.

It appears that the petitioner and one Mahabir Sahu instituted a suit against one Manoo Lal Sahu for wrongful confinement and extortion of money. The suit was dismissed and Monoo Lal Sahu applied to the learned Sub Deputy Magistrate who tried the case for sanction to prosecute Mahabir Sahu and Sukhdeo Missir under section 211, Indian Penal Code.

The learned Sub Deputy Magistrate on the 23rd November 1918 declined to grant the sanction applied for. Accordingly Monoo Lal Sahu applied to the District Magistrate of Purnea for sanction to prosecute the petitioner and Mahabir Sahu; and the learned Magistrate, by the order to which I have referred, granted the sanction in the form requested by the petitioner before him.

The learned District Magistrate, however, passed the order of the 7th January 1919 without serving any notice upon the parties to be affected thereby requiring them to show cause why such sanction should not be granted.

Strictly speaking, in my opinion on the true interpretation of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the service of a notice upon the person against whom a sanction to prosecute is applied for is not essential as a legal necessity to validate a sanction granted by the authorities specified in section 195.

The trend of authority seems to be in favour of this view. The rulings in support of this conclusion are reported as Queen Empress v. Sheik Beari (1), Govindu, In the matter of (2), Mangar Ram v. Behari (3), Inayat Ali v. Mohar Singh (4), Bal Gangadhar Tilak, In re (5), Emperor v. Tabarak Zaman Khan (6) and Krishnanund Das v. Hari Bera (7).

No doubt although notice is not legally essential to validate a sanction granted under section 195, nevertheless in common moral propriety it is desirable as a matter of practice and prudence and in common fairness that a person who is sought to be prosecuted should have notice of the fact that an application has been made for his prosecution under the provisions of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, and it is in accordance with the traditions of the administration of justice that such person should be permitted to show cause against the grant of sanction for his contemplated prosecution.

The learned District Magistrate failed in this case to give the petitioner notice of the application for sanction made to him; but, in my opinion, that omission, although it may have been improper, was not an illegality which wholly vitiated his order, sanctioning the prosecution of the petitioner for an offence under section 211, Indian Penal Code.

Monoo Lal Sahu instituted criminal proceedings against the petitioner and Mahabir Sahu on the 15th March 1919 under section 211 read with section 109 of the Indian Penal Code.

The petitioner was arrested owing to his non-appearance under a warrant and brought before the Court. The petitioner alleges that this was the first time that he became aware that sanction for his prosecution had been granted. The petitioner was admitted to bail and from time to time thereafter he seemed to recognise that the Criminal Court was legally and properly seised of the prosecution against him, because he applied from time to time for adjournments; and it was not until the 14th of May that an application was filed by the petitioner asking for time, when for the first time he expressed his intention to apply to the High Court to quash the order sanctioning his prosecution dated the 7th January 1919. Eventually on the 27th May the petitioner applied to two Judges of this Court, who directed that notice should issue with a view to setting aside the order of the District Magistrate and staying proceedings in the criminal matter pending the disposal of this application.

In my opinion to grant this petition would serve no useful purpose. If indeed the sanction had been granted owing to some technical legal error, I would have yielded to the argument of Mr. Varma. However, inasmuch as only a moral impropriety in the manner and method of procedure has been committed, I do not feel justified now, having regard to the very great lapse of time that has taken place, in staying the criminal proceedings that have been instituted from continuing, by setting aside the order sanctioning the petitioner's prosecution. In my opinion the petitioner acquiesced in the order that was made and between the 6th of April and the 14th of May he never suggested directly or indirectly that any infirmity attached to the order of the learned District Magistrate.

The petitioner seeks to justify his delay in applying to this Court from the 6th of April to the 27th May on the ground that he was seriously ill. Beyond this loose and general statement referred to in the petition and corroborated by the affidavit to the petition, there is no evidence to show what was the ailment the petitioner was suffering from, nor has any medical evidence been adduced to show that the petitioner was in fact ill.

Giving due consideration to the various topics addressed to me by the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioner, I am satisfied that this is not a proper case in which I should set aside the order sanctioning the petitioner's prosecution. Accordingly I refuse this application.

Order set aside.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 86 OF 1918.

May 14, 1918.

Present:—Justice Sir Ali Imam, KT.

D. SUNDER—ACCUSED—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 182—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Letter to District Magistrate containing imputations as to conduct of enquiry by Sub-Inspector of Police—Report as to falsity of allegations contained in letter, whether sufficient material for sanction—Sanction to prosecute, when to be granted.

A sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code must be based on materials on the record before the Court. Where there is nothing to show that the information given by the accused was false to his knowledge or that he believed it to be false, no sanction for prosecution for an offence under section 182, Indian Penal Code, should be given. [p. 288, col. 1.]

Rule calling upon the District Magistrate, Monghyr, to show cause why the trial proceedings of the accused under section 182, Indian Penal Code, in pursuance to sanction under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, be not quashed or in the alternative the case be transferred to the file of some other Magistrate.

FACTS of the case are fully set out in the judgment of Imam, J.

The first letter from Mr. Sunder was as follows:—

No. 1815.

Haveli Kharagpur, dated the 12th September 1917.

Sir,

I am directed to inform you as follows:—

2. A Mela is held every leap year at Rishi Kund hot springs which are within Pergana Haveli Kharagpur, which is the property of the Darbhanga Raj. The boundary between the lands belonging to the Darbhanga Raj and the lands belonging to the Banaili Raj runs to the east of the hot springs. This boundary was determined by Mr. D. J. Macpherson, C. I. E., Commissioner of the Bhagalpur Division, and was laid down under his orders by the Survey of India Department on the 31st January 1908. The entire boundary is marked by masonry pillars as will be seen from the trace map, which has been copied from the original map, herewith enclosed. The lands which are west of the boundary line belong to Darbhanga Raj. The lands which lie to the east of the boundary line belong to the Banaili Raj. The Malamas Mela is being held this year which is leap year. It began on the 19th August 1917, it will close on Sunday next, the 16th September. When the Mela began, there was correspondence between the Darbhanga Raj and the Banaili Raj in which it was mutually agreed that each Raj and their Amlas and servants would keep on their respective sides of the boundary line. This agreement has been strictly adhered to and no dispute, quarrel or misunderstanding of any sort has occurred. From the 19th August up to the present no disturbance of the public tranquillity has occurred. There has been absolute peace in the place. But I regret to bring to your notice that in consequence of the improper proceedings of the Sub Inspector in charge of the Khargpur Thana at Rishi Kund yesterday, it is feared that there will be a disturbance of some sort on Sunday next, the 16th September 1917, and that trouble and annoyance will arise.

3. Last month the Mahant of Burhanath temple, which is in Bhagalpur, submitted a petition to the Maharaja Bahadur of Darbhanga asking that he may be permitted to sit within Darbhanga Raj lands on the west side of the boundary line and do Pujas there; but it was considered inexpedient to allow him to do so, and he was so informed. He has kept away from Darbhanga Raj lands up to the present and has not given trouble of any sort.

4. But yesterday the Sub-Inspector of Kharagpur Thana visited Rishi Kund and called up some of the Darbhanga Raj servants and peons who are on duty there, saying that he had come to enquire into allegations contained in a petition which the Mahant has filed at Monghyr. I am informed that the Sub-Inspector lost his temper and became violent, threatening and intimidating the Darbhanga Raj servants, although he was repeatedly assured that there had been no breach of peace of any sort and that everything is perfectly quiet in the place, also that the representatives of each Raj are keeping to their own side of the boundary. The Mahant also confirmed this.

5. Notwithstanding this, however, the Sub-Inspector, I am told, has arranged to help the Mahant with reference to his petition, and I learned that he will again visit Rishi Kund springs on Saturday next, the 15th September, and try to forcibly put the Mahant in possession of them on Sunday morning. I am further informed that the Mahant himself is arranging for men of bad character to attend on Sunday morning and disturb the public tranquillity and, with the help of the Sub-Inspector, obtain forcible possession of the hot springs, in lands which belong to the Darbhanga Raj.

6. Therefore, in order that this may not occur I am directed not only to bring the matter to your notice, but also to ask you to kindly cause immediate orders to be sent to the Sub Inspector of Kharagpur Thana ordering him to refrain from visiting Rishi Kund on Saturday and Sunday next, the 15th and the 16th September. I am also instructed to ask you to kindly depute some responsible Police Officer from the Sadar to be present at Rishi Kund on Saturday and Sunday next to see that there is no disturbance of any kind. And I am further instructed to ask that, if it be possible, a Deputy Magistrate or other Gazetted Officer may be deputed to attend and see that there is no breach of the peace by the Mahant at the instigation of the Sub-Inspector of Kharagpur Thana.

7. I am to say that the Darbhanga Raj will be exceedingly obliged for any help that you may be pleased to give for averting any breach of the public tranquillity under the encouragement and with the passive help of the Kharagpur Police Sub-Inspector and I am further to inform you that all travelling and other expenses connected with the deputation of the officers herein asked for will be gladly paid by the Darbhanga Raj and on its behalf by the Raj Pleader at Monghyr, Babu Upendra Chandra Banerjee, who has been ordered to do so.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
(Sd.) D. Sunder.
Sub Manager, Raj Darbhanga, Haveli
Kharagpur.

The second letter of Mr. Sunder was as follows:—

From
Donald Sunder, Esqr. F.L.S., F.R.G.S.,
Sub-Manager, Raj Darbhanga, Haveli
Kharagpur.

To
H. T. S. Forrest, Esqr., I.C.S.,
District Magistrate, Morghyr.

Haveli Kharagpur, dated the 19th September 1917.

Sir,

I have the honour to thank you for your letter No. 3193J, dated the 14th September 1917, and in reply to the enquiry made therein to say that my letter No. 1815 of the 12th September 1917 was written under the authority of the Hon'ble Maharaja Bahadur of Darbhanga.

2. I also wish to thank you for your kindness in sending a guard of one head constable and 8 constables to Rishi Kund on Sunday, the 16th September 1917. They did their duty and no disturbance occurred. The fair at Rishi Kund closed on that day quite peacefully.

3. Under the circumstances as they were known to us, we felt that no other course was left to the Raj but to lay the facts before you as head of the District, and await help from you for maintenance of the public tranquillity.

4. I now ask you to allow me to give you the following further information about Rishi Kund.

5. The Mahant of Barhanath temple, a resident of Bhagalpur, holds some Sibotar lands granted to him by the Banaili Raj within Mauza Birojpur, Pergana Sakharabadi. He is in possession of the Kund which means a pool or tank. The Kund is within plot No. 77 mentioned in the order under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code issued by you on the 14th September 1917. The Mahant also holds a temple, dedicated to the God Mahadeo, on plot No. 79, which is mentioned in your order of the 14th September 1917 under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Both plots are within Mauza Birojpur, Pergana Sakharabadi. Both plots are on the east side of the boundary line between Darbhanga Raj lands and Banaili Raj lands, as determined by the Commissioner of the Bhagalpur Division (Mr. D. J. Macpherson) and demarcated on the ground by masonry pillars, and also shown on the map of Raunkabad, Pergana Haveli Kharagpur, prepared by the Survey Department at last Survey and Settlement Operations in 1906 and 1907, and bearing Touzi No. 283. I beg that you will kindly compare this map with the map of Birojpur, Pergana Sakharabadi, Thana Kharagpur, made and published by the authority of the Government by the Survey Department in season 1906-1907.

6. The possession by the Mahant of the above mentioned two plots, viz., Nos. 77 and 79, has never been questioned or in any way disturbed. The Darbhanga Raj has no concern with the Mahant or with the two plots mentioned because Mauza Birojpur, Pergana Sakharabadi is the property of the Banaili Raj. The order of the 14th September 1917 directing the servants of the Darbhanga Raj to refrain from trespassing upon plots Nos. 77 and 79 was fully complied with, and the Raj servants have kept within the boundaries of Pergana Haveli Kharagpur, and have maintained those boundaries.

7. There are springs (Jharna or Chasma) which give out hot water from the hill sides. These springs are on the west side of the demarcated boundary line and within Pergana Haveli Kharagpur, which is the property of the Darbhanga Raj. The Raj was put in possession of the hot springs and all lands which lie to the west of the demarcated line, and which pertain to Pergana Haveli Kharagpur, by order of the Sub-Judge, 1st Court, Monghyr, on on the 23rd and 24th October 1908. Since then the Darbhanga Raj has been in peaceful possession of the lands, including the hot springs, and such possession has not been disturbed up to the present. The Lachmeshwarnath Mahadeo temple lies on the west side of the demarcated line, within Pergana Haveli Kharagpur, and in possession of the Darbhanga Raj.

8. The Mahant named in your order of the 14th September 1917, having no title to the hot springs and also having no right to enter upon Darbhanga Raj property except with the approval and the consent of the proprietor, viz., the Hon'ble Maharaja Bahadur of Darbhanga, has tried, with the help of the Kharagpur Police, to establish such title and right; but his efforts to do this were stopped and he completely failed in his endeavours to give the Raj annoyance and trouble. The money and other offerings made by the public at the hot springs and on lands belonging to the Darbhanga Raj during the fair were not taken by the Mahant.

9. I beg to apologise for the length of this letter but it is necessary to make clear to you all the facts as head of the district.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
(Sd.) D. Sunder,
Sub-Manager, Raj Darbhanga, Haveli Kharagpur.

SUNDER v. EMPEROR.

Mr Hasan Imam, for the Petitioner.
The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner is undergoing trial under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code before the Sadar Sub-Divisional Officer of Monghyr. The circumstances which have culminated in this prosecution are shortly these.—

The petitioner is a Sub-Manager in the Darbhanga Raj and is in charge of the Kharagpur Circle, which is situated in the Monghyr district. It appears that there is a Kund known as Rishi Kund with a temple in plots Nos. 77 and 79 respectively in village Birojpur in the Zemindari of the Banaili Raj and in the possession of the Mahant of Bhola Nath. Contiguous with the Baraili Raj property is the Zemindari of the Darbhanga Raj. The two estates are demarcated by a line of pillars since 1908 and there has been since then no kind of dispute between the two Zemindaris. There are also some hot springs situated in the Darbhanga Raj land in the neighbourhood of the Rishi Kund and the temple mentioned above. These hot springs are visited by pilgrims every three years for the purposes of worship and such offerings as are made on these occasions are collected by the servants of the Darbhanga Raj. It is alleged that there has been an attempt on the part of the Mahant to take these offerings and that the petitioner was informed that the Mahant had, in fact, gathered men to forcibly carry out his intention. Apprehending a breach of the peace, the petitioner on the 12th September 1917 wrote to the District Magistrate of Monghyr to the effect that he had received from the Raj officers placed near the hot springs alluded to above information purporting to be that a Sub-Inspector of Kharagpur Thana had helped the Mahant on a previous occasion and that the present Sub-Inspector had shown some indications of displeasure, and that for that reason he prayed the District Magistrate to depute a responsible Police Officer other than the Sub Inspector or a Deputy Magistrate for preventing the apprehended breach of peace, the cost of which would be met by the Darbhanga Raj. It appears that Babu Charu Chandra Choudhury was accordingly deputed by the District Magistrate to proceed to the spot and make necessary enquiries. Babu Charu Chandra Choudhury, having arrived on the spot, relaid the boundary and found that the disputed portion of the land on which these hot springs are fell within the property of the Darbhanga Raj. It appears from a note submitted by this officer on the 16th of March 1918 that the Sub Inspector had issued notices on both sides to prevent a breach of the peace. It also appears from that report that at the time of the enquiry the petitioner had represented to this officer that the Sub-Inspector should not have issued notices on the servants of the Darbhanga Raj when the land in dispute was situated within the boundary of the Raj property. The note further goes on to say that the Deputy Magistrate made a local enquiry as to whether the Sub-Inspector had helped any particular party. The note also says that the result of the enquiry was embodied in a report dated the 10th of November 1917 and was submitted to the District Magistrate. Nothing seems to have been done in the case so far as the petitioner is concerned till the 2nd of January 1918, when the District Magistrate of Monghyr passed the following order:—

"Owing to an oversight no final orders have been passed by me on this report. This oversight has been brought to my notice by the Superintendent of Police. I now pass orders as follows:—I am satisfied from this report that the Sub-Inspector of Kharagpur Thana has done his duty in the matter and that the complaint made against him by the Sub-Manager has been unjustified. Inform all concerned and file."

It appears from the explanation furnished by the District Magistrate of Monghyr that on the 17th of December the Superintendent of Police had drawn the attention of the District Magistrate to the case and had told him that the Sub-Inspector of Kharagpur Thana was constantly urging to be allowed to proceed against the petitioner for defamation, on account of allegations made by him in the letter that he had written to the District Magistrate on which Babu Charu Chandra Choudhury had been deputed to enquire and report. It also appears that the Sub-Inspector could not proceed in the matter unless there was a final order passed by the District Magistrate on the said report. Two days after the final order quoted above had been passed, the District Magistrate received an application from the Sub Inspector with the previously obtained permission of the Superintendent of Police praying for sanction to prosecute the petitioner under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code. This sanction was duly granted and the prosecution of the petitioner was started.

The petitioner contends that his prosecution under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code is bad, inasmuch as the sanction to prosecute him was obtained without any notice served upon him, that the information given by him to the District Magistrate was in fact not found to be false by any competent authority before the sanction was given, that the information given by him to the District Magistrate did not contain any false information as his knowledge was based on what he has received as a report from his Forest Ranger and other resporsible officers of the Raj, and lastly that there was nothing in the proceedings before the District Magistrate to show that the information given to him by the petitioner was false to the knowledge of the petitioner and that he believed the same to be false. On the above grounds he prays, firstly, to quash the proceedings or in the alternative to transfer the case from the file of the trying Magistrate to the file of any other Magistrate or pass such order as might appear to this Court to be proper. In order to appreciate the exact position relating to the grant of sanction to prosecute the petitioner, it is necessary to consider those portions of the letter written by the petitioner to the District Magistrate which have been considered the basis for the sanction for the prosecution under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code. The letter is a very long one but the portions that are relevant to the matter before me are as follows:—

"But I regret to bring it to your notice that in consequence of the improper proceedings of the Sub-Inspector in charge of the Kharagpur Thana at Rishi Kund yesterday, it is feared that there will be a disturbance of some sort on Sunday, the 16th of September 1917, and that trouble and annoyance will arise."

"But yesterday the Sub-Inspector of the Kharagpur Thana visited Rishi Kund and called up some of the Darbhanga Raj servants and peons who were on duty there, saying that he had come to enquire into the allegations contained in a petition which the Mahant had written. I am informed that the Sub Inspector lost his temper and became violent, threatening and intimidating the Darbhanga Raj servants, although he was repeatedly assured that there had been no breach of the peace of any sort and that everything was perfectly quiet in the place."

"Notwithstanding this, however, the Sub-Inspector, I am told, has arranged to help the Mahant with reference to his petition and I learn that he will again visit Rishi Kund springs on Saturday next, the 15th of September, and try to forcibly put the Mahant in possession of them on Sunday morning. I am further informed that the Mahant himself has arranged for men of bad character to attend on Sunday morning and disturb the public tranquillity, and with the help of the Sub-Inspector of Police, he will obtain forcible possession of the springs in the lands which belong to the Darbhanga Raj."

The letter in question begins with the words, "Sir, I am directed to inform you as follows" and is dated the 12th of September 1917. Two days after the petitioner received a letter from the District Magistrate of Monghyr which runs as follows:—

"Sir, I am in receipt of your letter of the 12th instant in which you have been good enough to give me certain information under which the Mela is being held at Rishi Kund hot springs. You inform me in paragraph 6 of your letter under reply that you are directed to bring certain matters to my notice and to ask me to issue certain orders to the Sub-Inspector of Police at Kharagpur, and you also proceed to say that you are instructed to ask me to depute certain officers to the spot on Saturday and Sunday. In reply I have the honour to request you to be good enough to let me know from whom you have received the directions and instructions referred to."

The petitioner replied to the above letter of the 19th September 1917. This also is a long letter and all that is necessary for the purposes of this case is to refer to such portions of it as are material.

The petitioner in this letter says, firstly, that his letter of the 12th September was written to the District Magistrate on the authority of the Hon'ble Maharaja Bahadur of Darbhanga. He next thanks the District Magistrate for having sent a guard of one head constable and eight constables for keeping the peace at the fair. He then says that in the circumstances as known to him and to his subordinates at the time the letter was written to the District Magistrate, there was no other course left to the Raj but to lay the facts before the head of the District and to await his help for maintaining the public tranquillity. Thereafter he details in the letter the points of difference that have arisen between the Mahant and the Raj and winds up the letter by saying that the latter had tried with the help of the Kharagpur Police to establish his title and right to land situated in the Darbhanga Raj but had failed completely in his endeavours to give the Raj annoyance and trouble.

These are the facts and circumstances under which the sanction to prosecute the petitioner under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code was accorded.

One of the ingredients to prove an offence under that section is that the accused should know or have reason to believe that the information given by him was false. It is essentially a case in which mens rea must be established either by direct evidence or by the circumstances of the case and the conduct of the accused. It has been contended for the petitioner that before any sanction could be given to prosecute him, it was necessary for the learned District Magistrate of Monghyr to satisfy himself that the conduct of the accused fell within the mischief of section 182 of the Indian Penal Code and that for this it was necessary that there should have been before the learned District Magistrate some evidence, either direct or inferential, to establish the fact that the information was false to the knowledge or belief of the petitioner. For this proposition reliance was placed upon Habibur Rahman v. Munshi Khodabux (1) and Govindan Nayar, In the matter of the petition of (2).

(1) 11 C. W. N. 195; 5 C. L. J. 219; 5 Cr. L. J. 29.
(2) 7 M. 224; 8 Ind. Jur. 80; 2 Weir 179; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 741.

My attention was also drawn to grounds Nos. 4 and 5 of the petition. These two grounds are as follows:—

1. For that the order is bad in law and liable to be set aside inasmuch as there is nothing to show that the informations were false to his knowledge or he believed them to be false.

2. For that the order is otherwise bad in law and without jurisdiction.

I looked up the explanation furnished by the learned District Magistrate of Monghyr with reference to these grounds and found that these grounds have been disposed of by the words "no remarks." Thereupon I asked the learned Government Pleader who appeared for the opposite party to tell me if there was anything on the record to show that the learned District Magistrate had anything before him to satisfy himself as regards the knowledge or belief of the accused regarding the falsity of the information given by him. The learned Government Pleader was unable to point out anything from the record to show that such was the case, but asked me to give him an opportunity to communicate with the learned District Magistrate to find out whether there was any such material before him at the time the sanction to prosecute the petitioner was granted. I accordingly allowed the case to stand over for the learned Government Pleader to be instructed on this point.

The case was again taken up on the 3rd of May 1918 and the learned Government Pleader informed the Court that he had no material to show that the information given by the petitioner to the District Magistrate was false to his knowledge or belief. In the absence of any such direct evidence it is necessary for me to consider whether there are circumstances in this case to show that the petitioner, when giving information to the District Magistrate, knew or had reason to believe that it was false. There is nothing on the record to show that the petitioner had any malice against the Sub-Inspector. There is also nothing to show that he had any reason to disbelieve the reports made to him by his subordinates, nor is there anything to indicate that the information given by him to the District Magistrate was within his personal knowledge. On the contrary the letters written by him to the District Magistrate read together clearly point out that he was wholly relying upon the reports he had received from his subordinates. It should also be remembered that there was an apprehension of a serious breach of the peace and that the petitioner invoked the protection of the District Magistrate, impelled not so much by the desire to injure any particular officer of the Police as to avert the breach of the peace that was likely to take place. It may be that in giving the District Magistrate the information contained in his letters he placed too much confidence on the report of his subordinates. These, however, cannot be regarded in the circumstances of the case as evidence of mala fides on his part. In fact the whole of the record is singularly wanting in proof of any mala fides on the part of the petitioner against the Sub Inspector. It seems to me, therefore, that it was not open to the learned District Magistrate to grant sanction for the prosecution of the petitioner without having before him some material upon which he could hold that the information given by him was false to his knowledge or belief. I, therefore, set aside the sanction given by the District Magistrate to prosecute the petitioner and order all further proceedings in the case to be stayed.

Sanction set aside.

CRIMINAL APPLICATION FOR REVISION No. 39 OF 1919.

April 2, 1919.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Cantonment Code, 1912, rr. 97, 107*A*—Order directing repairs to be carried out, failure to obey—Sentence in respect of future default, legality of.

An order under rule 107A of the Cantonment Code inflicting a fine for persistent failure to carry out an order under rule 97 of the Code must, in order to be legal, refer to a failure as regards the past. It is illegal to convict a person, under this rule, of a failure in regard to the future.

Criminal application for revision from an order passed by the District Magistrate, Poona.

Mr. Velinkar for the Applicant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—It is urged—and I think correctly urged—that the order made by the District Magistrate of Poona fining the applicant is, in the form it took, illegal. The order was made under the provisions of rule 107A of the Cantonment Code. It was proved to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate on 27th of October 1918 that the owner of a house in the Poona Cantonment had persisted in failure to carry out an order made under rule 97, and taking the words of rule 107A, he was punishable with a fine not exceeding Rs. 5 for every day after the first in regard to which he was convicted of having persisted in the failure. He could, of course, be convicted with having persisted in the failure only as regards the past; he could not be convicted of a failure in regard to the future. A fine of Rs. 5 a day, therefore, might have been imposed for the material days up to the 27th of October. But that was not done. The District Magistrate, taking, I have no doubt, a sensible broad view of the affair, came to the conclusion that it was unnecessary to impose a fine for the past failure. But to emphasise the need of obedience to the order previously made, he directed that a fine of Rs. 5 a day should be paid from the 1st of November. That date was in the future, and as the words of the rule show, he was not empowered to make an order as to the future. That part of his order, therefore, is illegal and must be set aside and the fine, if paid, should be refunded.

SHAH, J.—I agree.
